Jacques Chatillon, admiral of France;
The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures: [phon;
Great-master of France, the brave sir Guisard Dau-
Jean duke of Alençon; Antony duke of Brabant,
The brother to the duke of Burgundy;
And Edward duke of Burg: of lusty earls,
Grande, and Roussel, Fauconberg, and Foix,

Here was a royal fellowship of death!—
Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herald presents another Paper.]

Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire:
None else of name, and of all other men
But five and twenty. O God! thy arm was here.

[Kneeling.]

And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all.—[Rising.] Whom without stratagem,
But in plain shock, and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss,
On one part and on the' other?—Take it, God;
For it is only thine!

Er. 'Tis wonderful!

K. HEN. Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death, proclaimed through our host,
To boast of this, or take that praise from God,
Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. HEN. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment,
That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. HEN. Do we all holy rites:
Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum.
The dead with charity enclo'sd in clay,
And then to Calais; and to England then,
Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Vouchsafe all, those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and for such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit th' excuse
Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
Be here presented. Now, we bear the king
Toward Calais: grant him th' intent,
Have him away upon your winged thoughts,
Asthwart the sea. Behold, the English beach
Pars in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-vie the deep-mouth'd sea.
Which, like a mighty whistler, for the king
Seems to prepare his way. So, let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
Is swift a pace hath thought, that even now
For may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where, that his lords desire him, to have borne
A bruised helmet, and his bended sword,
Before him, through the city, he forbids it,
King free from vainness and self-glorious pride,
Living full trophy, signal, and ostent,
Fate from himself, to God. But now behold,
The quick forge and workinghouse of thought,
Lov'd London doth pour out her citizens
The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort,
Due to the senators of th' antique Rome.
With the plebeians swarming as their heels,
So forth, and fetch their conquering Caesar in:
Is, by a lower but by loving likelihood,
Now here the general of our gracious empress

[As in good time he may) from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion brouched on his sword,
How many would the peacefull city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now, in London place him.
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the king of England's stay at home:
The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them: and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanc'd,
Till Harry's back-return again to France:
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
The interim, by remembering you; it is past.
Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—France. An English Court of Guard.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions, and causes, why and wherefore, in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, captain Gower. The rascally, scald, beggarly, lowly, praging knave, Pistol, which you and yourself, and all the world know to be no better than a fellow, look you now, o' no merits, he is come to me, and prings me prad' and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek.
It was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be so paid as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.
Enter Pals.
F  Fl. 'T is no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks. — Get pleases you, ancient Pistal! you scurvy, lowly knave. Get pleases you!

Pist. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thurst, base Trojan?

To save me fold up Paros's fatal web?

Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Fl. I pesceeth you heartily, scurvy lowly knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his goats.

Fl. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.] Will you be so goot, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Fl. You say very true, scald knave, when God's will is. I will desire to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Striking him again.] You called me yesterday, mountain-squire, but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. — I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Fl. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will eate his pate four days. — Pite, I pray you; it is goot for your green wound, and your poodly coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Fl. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt, and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge. I eat, and eat I swear—

Fl. Eat, I pray you. Will you have some more sauce to your leek? There is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel: thou dost see, I eat.

Fl. Much goot do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is goot for your proken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Fl. Ay, leeks is goot. — Hold you; there is a goot to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a goot!

Fl. Yes; verily, and in truth, you shall take it, or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy goot in earnest of revenge.

Fl. If I owe you any thing I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate.

[Exit.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of preceeded valour, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentlemen twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

[Exit.

Pist. Doth fortune play the husband with me now?

News have I, that my Nell is dead: I the spatial

Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax, and from my weary limbs
Honour is cudgelled. Well, bawd I'll turn,
And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand.
To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgell'd scars.
And swear, I got them in the Gallia wars.

[Exit.

SCENE II. — Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry. Bedford, Gloster, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and the Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel the Princess Katharine, Lords, Ladies, &c., the Duke of Burgundy, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met
Unto our brother France, and to our sister,
Health and fair time of day: — joy and good wishes
To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine; —
And, as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contriv'd,
We do salute you, duke of Burgundy: —
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all.

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face
Most worthy brother England; fairly met: —
So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England!
Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes, which hitherto have born in them
Against the French, that met them in their bent,
The fatal balls of murdering basiliaks:
The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality, and that this day
Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that thus we appear.

Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great kings of France and England, that I have labour'd
With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours
To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this bar and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.
Since, then, my office hath so far prevail'd,
That face to face, and royal eye to eye,
You have congregated, let it not disgrace me,
If I demand before this royal view,
What rub, or what impediment, there is,
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenty, and joyful births,
Should not in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, lift4 up her lovely visage?
Alas! she hath from France too long been char'd,
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility.
Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies: her hedges even-plashed,5
Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fellow less
The danel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Do root upon, while that the ouller rusts,
That should daracinate such savagery:
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowalip, burn'6, and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness, and nothing teems,
But hateful locks, rough thistles, bockeys, burs,
Lealog both beauty and utility;
As our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges,
Detractive in their natures, grow to wildness;
Even so our houses, and us'elves, and children,
Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country,
But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will,
That nothing do but meditate on blood.—
True thinking, and softer looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural,
Which to reduce into our former favour,
You are assembled; and my speech entreats,
That I may know the root, why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Hen. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose rest gives growth to th' imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have, eschewed it briefly, in your hands.

Bur. The king hath heard them; to the which, as yet,
There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
Examined the articles: please thank your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass, or accept, and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle Exeter,—
And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Gloster,— Warwick, and Huntingdon,—go with the king;
And take with you free power, to ratify,
Agreed, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantage, for our dignity,
Any thing in, or out of, our demands,
And we'll consign thereunto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princess, or stay here with us?

Q. Im. Our gracious brother, I will go with them.
Haply a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles, too nicely urg'd, be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Im. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all but King Henry, Katharine, and her Gentlewoman.]

K. Hen. Shall you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine! if you will love me
Wearily with your French heart, I will be glad to hear
You confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez moi, I cannot tell vat is,—like me.

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à des ânes?

Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine, and I must not Muss to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.
quér the kingdom, as to speak so much more French. I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, le Français que vous parlez est mieux que l'Anglois legué je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, it's not Kate; but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thinke, most truly false, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou loveth me: and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to her, dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me merlyfully, the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be 'st mine, Kate. (As I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt) I get thee with scambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder. Shall not thou and I, between Saint Deniss and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople, and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No: 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy, and for my English moiety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très chère et divine déses?

Kath. Your majesté have fausse French enough to deceive de most sages dameoiseau dat is en France.

K. Hen. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear, thou lovest me: yet my blood begins to blister me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now be-throw my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me; thou shall wear me, better and better. And therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, wilt thou have me? Put off your maiden blushes: avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England. I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music, for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English: wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall please de roi mon père.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate: it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez! Ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissez votre grandeur, en 1 untampering: in f. e 2 never: in f. e

Kath. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames, et dameoiseau, pour estre baisées devant leurnoce il n'est pas la coutume de France.

K. Hen. Madam, my interpreter, what says she? Alice. Dat it is not de fashion for the ladies of France.—I cannot tell what is, baiser, in English. K. Hen. To kiss. Alice. Your majesty entend beitre que moi. K. Hen. It is not a fashion for the maidens in France to kiss before they are married, would she say? Alice. Oui, vraiment.

K. Hen. Ó, Kate! nice customs curtey to great kings. Dear Kate, and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouths of all find-faults, as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently, and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council: and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Enter the French King and Queen, Burgundy, Bedford, Gloster, Exeter, Westmoreland, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty. My royal cousin, and my royal lady. Teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind. Can you blame her, then, being a maid yet roes over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It was, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to. K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield, as love is blind and endures. Bur. They are then excessed, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time, and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my eye.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively: the cities turned into a maid, for they are all girdled with maiden walls, that war hath not entered.
K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?
Fr. King. So please you.
K. Hen. I am content, so the maiden cities you spake of, may wait on her; so the maid, that stood in the way of my wish, shall show me the way to my will.
Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.
K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?
West. The king hath granted every article;
his daughter, first; and then in sequel, all,
according to their firm proposed natures.
Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—
Where your majesty demands,—that the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French.—Notre tres cher fils Hnry roi d'Angleterre, hereditir de France; and thus in Latin,—Præclarissimus
f displ. noster Hnricus, rex Anglia, et hares Francia.
Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, but your request shall make me let it pass.
K. Hen. I pray you, then, in love and dear alliance let that one article rank with the rest;
and thereupon, give me your daughter.
Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up
some to me, that the contending kingdoms of France and England, whose very shores look pale, with envy of each other's happiness, may cease their hatred; and this dear conjunction be the neighbourhood and christian-like accord of their sweet bosoms, that never war advance their bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.
All. Amen!
K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me witness all,

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. The Corpse of King Henry the Fifth is discovered, lying in state; attended on by the Dukes of Bedford, Gloster, and Exeter: the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars,
That have consented unto Henry’s death!
Henry the fifth, too famous to live long!
England ne’er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne’er had a king until his time.

Virtue he had deserving to command:
His brandish’d sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon’s wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne’er lift up his hand, but conqu’red.

Ezz. We mourn in black: why mourn we not in blood?

Henry is dead, and never shall revive.
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death’s dishonourable victory

We with our stately presence glorify,
Like captives bound to a triumphant car.
What! shall we curse the planets of mishap?
That plotted thus our glory’s overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurors and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses have contriv’d his end?

Win. He was a king, bless’d of the King of kings
Unto the French the dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.
The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought:
The church’s prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not the men pray’d,
His thread of life had not so soon desay’d:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe.

Win. Gloster, what’er we like, thou art protect
And lookst to command the prince, and realm.
Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God, or religious churchmen may.

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lov’st the fleet
And ne’er throughout the year to church thou go’st.
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your mind peace.
Let’s to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us.—
Instead of gold, we’ll offer up our arms.
Scene I.

FIRST PART OF

The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord, Retiring from the siege of Orleans, Having full scarce six thousand in his troop, By three-and-twenty thousand of the French Was round encompassed and set upon. No leisure had he to enrank his men; He wanted pikes to set before his archers; Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges They pitched in the ground confusedly, To keep the horsemen off from breaking in. More than three hours the fight continued: Where valiant Talbot, above human thought, Enacted wonders with his sword and lance. Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him; Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew. The French exclaim'd, the devil was in arms; All the whole army stood agaz'd on him. His soldiers, spyng his undaunted spirit, A Talbot! A Talbot! cried out amain, And rush'd into the bowels of the battle. Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up, If air John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward: He being in the rearward place'd behind With purpose to relieve and follow them, Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke. Hence grew the general wreck and massacre: Enclosed were they with their enemies. A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace, Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back; Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength, Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then, I will slay myself, For living idly here in pomp and ease, Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid, Unto his dastard foes-men is betray'd.

3 Mess. O, no! he lives: but is took prisoner, And lord Scales with him, and lord Hungerford: Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.

Ed. His ransom, there is none but I shall pay. I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne; His crown shall be the ransom of my friend: Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.— Farewell, my masters; to my task will I. Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make, To keep our great Saint George's feast withal Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take, Whose bloody deeds shall cause all Europe quake. 3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieg'd The English army is grown weak, and faint; The Earl of Salisbury craveth supply And hardly keeps his men from mutiny, Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn, Either to quell the Dauphin utterly, Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take my leave. I go about my preparation. [Exit. Exe. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can, To view th' artillery and munition; And then I will proclaim young Henry king. [Exit. Exe. To Etham will I, where the young king is, Being ordain'd his special governor; And for his safety there I'll best devise. [Exit. Win. Each hath his place and function to attend: I am left out; for me nothing remains. But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office; The king from Etham I intend to steal, And sit at chiefest stem of public weal. [Exit.

Peo. reade: marish, stow. * This word is not in s. e. # vaward: in s. e. * maketh: in s. e. * send: in s. e. 2C
SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Flourish. Enter CHARLES, with his Forces; ALBENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

CHAR. Marse his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known.¹
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.
What towns of any moment but we have?
At pleasure here we lie near Orleans;
The whiles,² the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

ALEN. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-beeves:
Either they must be dieted like mules,
And have their provender tied to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look like drowned mice.

REIGN. Let 'r raise the siege. Why live we idly here?
Talbot is taken whom we want to fear;
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury,
And he may well in fretting spend his gall;
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

CHAR. Sound, sound alarum! we will rush on them.
Now, for the honour of the forborne² French!
Him I forgive my death that killeth me.
When he see me go back one foot, or flee. [Exeunt.

ALARUM: Excursions: afterwards a Retreat.

REIGN. CHARLES, ALBENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

CHAR. Who ever saw the like? what men have I!—
Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would never have fled,
But that they let me 'midst my enemies.

REIGN. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life:
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

ALEN. Froversart, a countryman of ours, records,
England all Olivier and Bowlandes bred,
During the time Edward the third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons, and Goliasse,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

CHAR. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

REIGN. I think, by some odd gimmles³ or device,
Their arms are set like clocks still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so, as they do.
By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

ALEN. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

BAST. Where's the prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

CHAR. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

BAST. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd:
Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:
A holy maid hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ondained is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nigh' sibyls of old Rome;
What's past and what's to come, she can descry.

Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and unfallable.

CHAR. Go, call her in. [Exit Bastard.] But first will I try her skill,
Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place;
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern.
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath [Return.

Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?
Where is the Dauphin?—Come, come from behind:
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart.—
Stand back, my lords, and give us leave awhile.

REIGN. She takes upon her bravely at first blush.

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter.
My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.
Heaven and our gracious Lady³ hath pleas'd To shine on my contemptible estate:
Lo! whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deign'd to appear to me;
And, in a vision full of majesty,
Would me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity.
Her aid she promis'd, and assured success:
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With these clear rays which she infused on me,
That beauty am I bleas'd with, which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpreameditated:
My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this; thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

CHAR. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high turn
Only this proof I'll of thy valour make:
In single combat thou shall buckler with me,
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true.
Or,¹ I renounce all confidence in you.

Puc. I am prepar'd. Here is my keen-edg'd sword
Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;
The which at Tournaine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

CHAR. Then, come o' God's name: I fear no woman.

Puc. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from no man.

[They fig.

CHAR. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Puc. Christ's most holy mother helps me, else I were too weak.

CHAR. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help'st
Impatience I burn with thy desire;
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.

Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant, and not sovereign be:
'T is the French Dauphin sueth thus to thee.

Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love.

For my profession's sacred from above:
When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense.

CHAR. Mean time look gracious on thy prostrate thy.

REIGN. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

[They talk apart.

SCENE IV.—France. Before Orleans.

Enter on the Walls, the Master-Gunner and his Son.
M Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd,
And how the English have the suburbs won.
Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,
How'er unfortunate I miss'd my aim.
M Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou ruler'd by me:
Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do to procure me grace.
The king's emissaries have informed me,
How the English, in the suburbs close entrench'd,
Wont's through a secret gate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to overpeer the city;
And thence discover, how, with most advantage,
They may vex us with shot, or with assault.
To intercrop this inconvenience,
A piece of ordinance 'gainst it I have plac'd;
And fully even these three days have I watch'd,
If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,
For I can stay no longer on my post.
If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word,
And thou shalt find me at the governor's.
[Exit.
Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care:
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.
Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the Lords
SALISBURY and TALBOT; Sir William Glansdale,
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and others.
Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy! again return'd?
How went thou hand'ed, being prisoner,
Or by what means got'st thou to be releas'd,
Discourse, I pr'ythee, on this turrlet's top.
Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called the brave lord of Ponton de Santrailes;
For him I was exchang'd and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have bart'ed me:
Which I, disdaining, scorn'd; and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile a esteem'd:
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.
But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart:
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.
Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.
Tal. With scotts, and soorns, and contumelious taunts.
In open market-place produc'd they me,
To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scree-crow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant.
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had
That walk'd about me every minute-while,
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.
Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.
Now, it is supper time in Orleans:
Here, through this grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the sight will much delight thee.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and sir William Glansdale,
Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our battery next.
Gar. I think, at the north gate: for there stand lords
Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.
Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled. [Gargrave fall [Shot from the Town. SALISBURY and Sir Two
Sal. O Lord! have mercy on us, wretched sinner.
Gar. O Lord! have mercy on me, woeful man.
Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath crow'd
Speak Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak: [us —
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thine eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!—
Accursed tower! accursed fatal hand,
That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!
If thirteen battles Salisbury o'cours;
Henry the fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did never leave striking in the field.
Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury want mercy at thy hands!—
Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; say, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die, whiles
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me,
As who should say, "When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French."—
Plantagenet, I will; and, Nero-like,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.
[An Alarum: it thunders and lightens.
What stir is this? What tumult's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise?
[Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, my lord! the French have gather'd
The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd, [head:
A holy prophetess, new risen up,
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

Salisbury lifts himself up and gross.
Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth gross!
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you,
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mangled brains.
Convey me Salisbury into his tent.
And then we'll try what dastard Frenchmen dare.
[Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before one of the Gates.

Alarum. Skirmishings. Talbot pursues the Dauphin
And drives him; then enter Joan la Pucelle, driving
Englishmen before her. Then enter Talbot.
Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force!
KING HENRY VI.

The English troops retire, I cannot stay them; a woman clad in armour chaseth them. Enter La Pucelle.

Lest here she comes, I'll have a bout with thee: be devil's dam, I'll conjure thee: led will I draw on thee; thou art a witch, lead straightway give thy soul to him thou servest. Puc. Come, come; 'tis only I that must disgrace thee.

They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail? my breast will burst with straining of my courage, I flung my shoulders crack my arms asunder, led I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come; must I go victual Orleans with thee?

Lest I be thou canst; I scorn thy strength.

Go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men; help Salisbury to make his testament: his day is ours, as many more shall be.

[Pucelle enters the town, with Soldiers.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel; how nor where am I, nor what I do.

So fear, not force, like Hannah, rise back our troops and conquer as she lists: roots with smoke, and doves with noisome stench, as from their houses and homes drive away; may call'd us for our fierce English dogs; sw. like to whale, we cry running away.

A short Alarum.

Sir countrymen! either renew the fight, clear the lions out of England's coat; some your soil, give sheep in lions' stead: let not half so treacherous from the wolf, three, or even, from the leopard, go from your oft-subdued slaves.

Another skirmish.

Will not be.—Retire into your trenches: all consented unto Salisbury's death, none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans.

In spite of us, or 'sht that we could do.
0! would I were to die with Salisbury.
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt Talbot and his Forces.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Flourish. Enter, on the Walls, Pucelle, Charles, Reignier, Alençon, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls!
Rescue'st thou Orleans from the English wolves? Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.
Char. Divinest creature, bright Asia's daughter, How shall I honour thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.—France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!—Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.
Reig. Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout the town?
Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires
And feast and banquet in the open streets.
Char. All Paris will be replete with mirth and joy, when they shall hear how we have play'd the men.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same.

The Gates, a French Sergeant, and Two Sentinels.

Sgt. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant.
my noise, or soldier, you perceive, at the walls, by some apparent sign have knowledge at the court of a king.

[Sent. Sergeant, you shall. Thus are poor servitors be other sleep upon their quiet beds.

attended to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, and Forces, with Ladders; their Drums beating a dead march. Tal. Lord regent, and redoubted Burgundy, whose approach the regions of Artois, Alençon, Picardy, are friends to us, happy night the Frenchmen are secure, this all day carous'd and banqueted.

If we, then, this opportunity, using best to quittance their doleful, and all this high-minded sorrow.

Tal. Cowards of France!—how much he wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,

To join with witches, and the help of bell.
Bur. Traitors have never other company.

But what's that, Pucelle, whom they term so pure? Tal. A maid, they say.

A maid, and be so martial? Bur. Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long; if underneather the standard of the French, She carry armour. as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practice and converse with spirits; God is our fortress, in whose conquering name Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Ascend. brave Talbot; we will follow thee.
Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess, that we do make our entrance several ways, that if it chance the one of us do fail, the other yet may rise against their force.

Agreed. I'll to you corner.
Bur. And to this.
Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.—Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right

[Frenchmen leap over the Walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, BASTARD, ALÉNON, REIGNIER, half ready and half unready.

Alen. How now, my lords! what, all unready so?
Bast. Unready? ay, and glad we 'scape'd so well.
Reig. 'T was time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing the alarms at our chamber doors.

Alen. Of all explore, since first I followed arms,
Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous, or desperate than this.
Bast. I think, this Talbot be a fiend of hell.
Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles: I marvel, how he spied.

Enter Charles and La Pucelle.
Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.
Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame?
Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal?
Make a pretence of a little gain,
That now our loss might be ten times so much?
Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?
At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping or waking must I still prevail,
Or will you blame, and lay the fault on me?—
Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good,
This sudden mischief never could have fallen.
Char. Duke of Alénon, this was your default,
That, being captain of the watch to-night,
Did lose betimes so that weighty charge.
Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept,
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd.
Bast. Mine was secure.
Reig. And so was mine, my lord.

Char. And for myself, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,
I was employ'd in passing to and fro,
About relieving of the sentinels:
Then, how, or which way, should they first break in?
Puc. Questions, my lords, no further of the case,
How, or which way: 't is sure, they found some place
But weakly guarded, where the breach was made;
And now there rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and disperst,
And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Aalarm. Enter an English Soldier, crying, a Talbot!
a Talbot! They fly, leaving their Clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.
The body of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town.
Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others.

Bd. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

[Retreat sounded.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury;
And here advance it in the market-place.
The middle centre of this cursed town.—
Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him,

1 Half-dressed. 2 Plots, or plans.

There have at least five Frenchmen died to-night.
And that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,
Within the woe-somest temple I'll redound
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter'd:
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans,
The treacherous manner of his mournful death,
And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,
I muse, we met not with the Dauphin's grace,
His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc,
Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. 'Tis thought, lord thou when the fight beg
Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds,
They did, amongst the troops of armed men,
Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself, as far as I could well discern,
For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night,
Am sure I scard the Dauphin, and his trull;
When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,
That could not live asunder, day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this prime train
Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts
So much applauded through the realm of France?
Tal. Here is the Talbot; who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,
With modesty admiring thyn renown,
By me entreats, lord thou wouldst vouchsafe
To visit her poor castle where she lies;
That she may boast she hath beheld the man
Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then. I see, our wars
Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies brave to be encounter'd with—
You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath this woman's kindred the decree—
And therefore tell her, I return great thanks,
And in submission will attend on her.—
Will not your honours bear me company?

Bed. No, truly, it is more than manners will;
And I have heard it said, unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
[Exeunt Talbot and others.

[Enter the Countess, and her Porter.
Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge
And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me:
Port. Madam, I will.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out ra
I shall as famous be by this exploit
As Scytahum Thymyrus by Cyrrus' death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give the censure of these rare reports.
KING HENRY VI.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple Garden. Enter the Earls of Somerset, Suffolk, and Warwick; Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and a Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords, and gentlemen, what means this Dare no man answer in a case of truth? [silence] Stsf. Within the Temple hall we were too loud: The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the truth, Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Stsf. 'Faith, I have been a truant in the law, And never yet could frame my will to it: And, therefore, frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, then, between us.

War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth, Between two blades, which bears the better temper, Between two horses, which doth bear him best, Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye, I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment; But in these nice sharp quiblets of the law, Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut! here is a mannerly forbearance The truth appears so naked on my side, That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd, So clear, so shining, and so evident, That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tied, and so loath to speak, In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts. Let him, that is a true-born gentleman, And stands upon the honour of his birth, If he suppose that I have pleased truth, From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer, But dare maintain the party of the truth, Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me. War. I love no colours; and, without all colour Of base insinuating flattery, I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet. Stsf. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset; And say withal, I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords, and gentlemen; and pluck no more, Till you conclude that he, upon whose side The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree, Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well objected: If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the case, I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here, Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prithee go not so far as to make thyself a fool; Let me paint the white rose red, And fall on my side so, against your will.
FIRST PART OF

ACT II.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: who else?

Lau. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held was wrong in you;
In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here, in my seaboard; meditating that,
Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,
'T is not for fear, but anger; and thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hast not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hast not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth,
Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding-roses,
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy faction 1, peevish boy.

Suf. Turn not thy scorns this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole.
We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset:
His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward, king of England.

Sprung crested yeomen from so deep a root?

Plag. He braves 2 him on the place's privilege,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words
On any plot of ground in Christendom.

War. Thou father, Richard earl of Cambridge,
For treason executed in our late king's days
And by his treason stand'st not thou attained,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry.
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And till thou be restored, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attached, not attained,
Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To scourge you for this apprehension:
Look to it well, and say you are well war'd.

Som. Ah! thou shalt find us ready for thee still,
And know us by these colours for thy foes;
For these my friends in spite of thee shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,
As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction, wear,
Until it wither with me in my grave,
Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suf. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition:
And so farewell, until I meet thee next.

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious
Richard.

Plan. How I am brav'd, and must perform endure it
War. This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament,
Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster,
And if thou be not then created York,
I will not live to be accounted Warwick.
Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,
Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,
Will I upon thy party wear this rose.
And here I prophesy,—this brawl to-day,
Grown to this faction in the Temple garden.
Shall send, between the red rose and the white,
Ten thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same.

Lau. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir:—Come, let us four to dinner.

X. Even say, this quarrel will drink blood another day.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter Mortimer, blind, brought in a Chair by the Keepers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself—
Even like a man new haled from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment;
And these grey locks. the pursuivants of death,
Nestor-like aged in a cage of care,
Argue the end of Edward Mortimer.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim; the drawing to their exigent 3
Weak shoulders, overcome with burdening grief,
And pithless arms, like to a witherd vine
That droops his sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no other comfort have.—

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

1 Keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come.
We sent word to the Temple, to his chamber,
And answer was return'd that he will come.

Mor. Enough; my soul shall then be satisfied.

Exit Keeper.

Mor. Enough; my soul shall then be satisfied.

X. Poor gentleman, his wrong doth equal mine.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This losomost sequesteration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been obsecur'd,
Depriv'd of honour and inheritance:
But now, the arbiter of despair,
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence.
I would his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, and Keeper. 4

1 Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late despis'd Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp.
O! tell me, when my lips do touch his cheek,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss,—
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock
Why didst thou say—of late thou wert despis'd?

1 faction: in folio. * theobald changed the word. 2 bears: in f. o. 3 in f. a. 4 this word is not in f. o. 5 end. 6 not in f. a.
Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm, And in that case I'll tell thee my disease. This day, in argument upon a case, Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me; Among which terms he us'd his lavish tongue, And did upbraid me with my father's death: Which obloquy set bars before my tongue, Else with the like I had required him. Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake, In honour of a true Plantagenet, And for alliance' sake, declare the cause My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head. Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me, And hath detain'd me all my flow'ring youth Within a losehsome dungeon, there to pine, Was curst instrument of his decease. Plan. Discover more at large what cause was: For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit, And death approach not ere my tale be done. Henry the fourth, grandfather to this king, Depo'd his nephew Richard, Edward's son, The first-begotten, and the lawfull heir Of Edward, king the third of that descent: During whose reign the Percies of the north, Finding his usurpation most unjust, Endeavou'rd my advancement to the throne. The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this, Was for that young king Richard thus remov'd, (Leaving no heir begotten of his body) I was the next by birth and parentage; For by my mother I derived am From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son To King Edward the third, whereas he From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but fourth of that heroic line. But mark: as, in this haughty great attempt They laboured to plant the rightful heir, I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Long after this, when Henry the fifth. (Succeding his father Bolingbroke) did reign, Thy father, earl of Cambridge, then deriv'd From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York, Marrying my sister, that thy mother was, Again, in pity of my hard distresses, Leighed an army, weening to redeem, And have install'd me in the diadem; But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl, And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers, In whom the title rested, were suppress'd. Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last. Mor. True; and thou seest, that I no issue have, And that my fainting words do warrant death. Thou art my heir: the rest, I wish thee gather; But yet be wary in thy studious care. Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me. But yet, methinks, my father's execution Was nothing less than bloody tyranny. Mor. With silence. nephew, be thou politic: Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster, And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd. But now thy uncle is removing hence, As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd * With long continuance in a settled place. Plan. O, uncle! would some part of my young years Might but redeem the passage of your age. Mor. Thou dost, then, wrong me; as the slaughterer doth, Which giveth many wounds, when one will kill. Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good; Only, give order for my funeral. And so farewell; and fair be all thy hopes, And prosperous be thy life, in peace, and war! [Dies. Plan. And peace, no war, befat thy parting soul! In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage, And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.— Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast; And what I do imagine, let that rest.— Keepers, convey him hence: and I myself Will see his burial better than his life.— [Exeunt Keepers, bearing out Mortimer. Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort: And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries, Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house, I doubt not but with honour to redress; And therefore haste I to the parliament, Either to be restored to my blood, Or make my will th' advance'r of my good. [Exit.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Gloster, Warwick, Somerset, and Suffolk: the Bishop of Winchester, Richard Plantagenet, and others. Gloster offers to put up a Bill; Winchester snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines, With written pamphlets studiously devis'd? Humphrey of Gloster, if thou canst accuse, Or ought intent to lay unto my charge, Do it without invention, suddenly: As I with sudden and extemporal speech Purpose to answer what thou canst object. Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience, Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me. Think not, although in writing I prefer advantage in t.e.

The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able, Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen: No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness, Thy lewd, pestiferous, and disententious pranks, As very infants prattle of thy pride. Thou art a most pernicious usurer, Proward by nature, enemy to peace; Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseeched A man of thy profession, and degree: And for thy treacherous, were suppressed, In that thou laidst a trap to take my life, As well at London bridge, as at the Tower? Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted, The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt From envious malice of thy swelling heart. Win. Gloster, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouchsafe To give me hearing what I shall reply.
If I were covetous, ambitious, proud,¹
As he will have me, how am I so poor?
Or how hap, it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wondert calling?
And for dissenia, who preserveth peace
More than I do, except I be provokd?²
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that that hath incendis'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one but he should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good—

Glo.  As good?
Thou bastard of my grandfather!—

Win. Ay, lordly air; for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in another's throne?
Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?
Win. And am I not a pratele of the church?
Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!

Glo. Thou art reverent

Win. Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.
Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War. Roam thither then.
My lord, it were thy duty to forbear.

Som. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.
Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.
War. Methinks, his lordship should be humberl:
It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near,
War. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?

Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;

[Aside.]

Least it be said, "Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Must your bold verdict alien talk with lords?"
Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English weal,
I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.
O! what a scandal is it to our crown,
That such two noble peers as ye should jar,
Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissension is a vipers worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.—

[Aside.]

A noise within: Down with the tawney coats!
What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the bishop's men.

[Aside.]

Enter the Mayor of London, and some Citizens.³

May. O, my good lords, and virtuous Henry,
Pity the city of London, pity us,
The bishop's and the duke of Gloster's men,
Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble-stones,
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt so fast at one another's pates,
That many have their giddy brains knocked out,
Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we for fear compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of Gloster, and of WINCHESTER, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to us,

To hold your slaughtering hands, and keep the peace.

Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare; we are as resolute.

[Skirmish agais]

Glo. You, of my household, leave this peevish broil
And set this unaccustom'd fight aside.

1 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man
Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,
Inferior to none but to his majesty;
And ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgraced by an inborn'd mate,
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.

3 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field, when we are dead. [Skirmish agais

Glo. Stay, stay!
And, if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!
Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if you be not?
Or who should study to preserve a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

War. Yield, lord protector; and yield, Winchester.
Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To stay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then, be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoop
Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothest brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragical?

Glo. Here, Winchester; I offer thee my hand.

[Winchester refuses]

K. Hen. Fye, uncle Beaufort! I have heard:

Proclaim.

That malice was a great and grievous sin;
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gi

For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent:
What shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.

[Give his hand]

Glo. Ay! but I fear me, with a hollow heart.

See here, my friends, and loving countrymen:
This token serveth for a flag of truce,
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers.
So help me God, as I dissemble not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not!

K. Hen. O, loving uncle, and kind duke of Glo

How joyful am I made by this contract!—
Away, my masters: trouble us no more,
But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content: I'll to the surgeon's.
2 Serv. And so we

[Exeunt Mayor, Citizens, Servants,]
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;
Therefore we'll knock.

Guard. [Within.] Qui est là?

Puc. Paysans, les pauvres gens de France :
Poor market-folks that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter ; go in : the market-bell is rung.

[Opening the gates.

Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.

[Enter CHARLES, BASTARD OF ORLEANS, ALENÇON, and FORCES.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy stratagem,
And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisers.\footnote{Now she is there, how will she specify.
Where is the best and safest passage in?\footnote{Amen. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower;
Which, once discern'd, shows, that her meaning is,—
No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.}

Enter LA PUCELLE on a Rattlement, holding out a Torch burning.

Puc. Behold! this is the happy wedding torch,
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen,
But burning fatal to the Talbotites.

Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend;
The burning torch in yonder turret stands.

Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,\footnote{A prophet to the fall of all our foes!}
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!

Alem. Defer no time; delays have dangerous ends:
Enter, and cry The Dauphin! presently,
And then do execution on the watch.

[They enter.

Alarums. Enter TALBOT, and ENGLISH SOLDIERS.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive thy treachery.

Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escap'd the pride of France.

[Exeunt to the Town.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter, from the Town, BEDFORD, brought in sick in a Chair, with TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the Walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, BASTARD, ALENÇON, REIGNIER, and others.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants. Want ye corn for bread?
I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate.

'Twas full of danel; do you like the taste?
Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend, and shameless courtisan!
I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.

Bed. O! let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason.

Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break a lance,
And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of hell's despite,
Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?
Darnel, I'll have a bout with you again,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, air? — Yet, Pucelle, hold thy
If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow—\footnote{peace:}

[TALBOT, and the rest, consult together]
God speed the parliament! who shall be speaker?

Tal. Dare ye come forth, and meet us in the field?
Puc. Belike, your lordship takes us then for fools, To try if that our own be ours, or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate, But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest. Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang!—base muleteers of France! Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls, And dare not take arms like gentlemen.
Puc. Ay, that upon mine honour I will get us from the walls, For Talbot means no good ease by his looks. —God be wi' you, my lord: we came, but to tell you That we are here. [Exeunt La Pucelle, &c. from the Walls.

Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long, Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest name.——
Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house, Pride'd on by public wrongs sustain'd in France, Either to get the town again, or die; And I, as sure as he English Henry lives, And as his father here was conqueror, As sure as in this late betrayed town Great Cœur-de-lion's heart was buried, So sure I swear to get the town, or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.

Tal. But ere we go, regard this dying prince, The valiant duke of Bedford.——Come, my lord, We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me: Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen, And will be partner of your weal, or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read, That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick, Came to the field, and vanquished his foes.

Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts, Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!— Then, be it so:—heavens keep old Bedford safe! —And now no more ado, brave Burgundy, But gather we our forces out of hand, And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt Burgundy, Talbot, and Forces, leaving Bedford, and others.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Sir John Fastolfe, and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?

Fast. Whither away? to save myself by flight: We are like to have the overthrow again.

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave lord Talbot?

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when Heaven please, For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.

What is the trust or strength of foolish man? They, that of late were daring with their scoffs, Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves. [Dies, and is carried off in his Chair.

Alarum. Enter Talbot, Burgundy, and others.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again!

This is double honour, Burgundy; Yet heavens have glory for this victory.

Bur. Warlike and matchless! Talbot, Burgundy Embrines thee in his heart; and there erects Thy noble deeds, as valour's monument.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?

I think her old familiar is asleep:
Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?

What, all a-mort? Rouen hang her head for grief. That such a valiant company are fled. Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers, And then depart to Paris to the king; For there young Henry with his nobles lies.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget The noble duke of Bedford, late deceas'd, But see his exquisites fulfill'd in Rouen: A braver soldier never couched lance, A gentler heart did never sway in court; But kings, and mightiest potentates must die, For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Plains near the City.

Enter Charles, the Bastard, Alençon, La Pucelle, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident, Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered: Care is no cure, but rather corrosive, For things that are not to be remedied. Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while, And like a peacock sweep along his tail, We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train, If Dauphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto, And of thy cunning had no difidence: One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies, And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place, And have thee reverence'd like a blessed saint; Employ thee, then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise. By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words, We will entice the duke of Burgundy To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry, sweetening, if we could do that. France were no place for Henry's warriors; Nor should that nation boast it so with us, But be extirped from our provinces. Alen. For ever should they be expell'd from France And not have title of an earldom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will word To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drums heard afar off]

Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over, Talbot as his Forces. There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread, And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the Duke of Burgundy and Forces.

Now, in the rearward comes the duke, and his: Fortune in favour makes him lag behind. Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy? [Trumpets sound a parle
SCENE I. —The Same. A Room of State.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that name the sixth!

[Sound Trumpets.]

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,—

[Governor kneels.]

That you elect no other king but him,
Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends,
And none your foes, but such as shall pretend
Malicious practices against his state.

This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

[Exeunt Gov. and his Trains.]

ACT IV.
Enter Sir John Fastolpe.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,
To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy. [Gives it.]

Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!
I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next,
To tear the garter from thy c-aven's leg.
[Plucking it off.]

Which I have done, because unworthy
Thou wast installed in that high degree.—
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest.
This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met, or that a-stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire, did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;
Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,
Were there surpris'd, and taken prisoners.
Then, judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
Or whether such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yes, or no?

Glo. To say the truth, his fact was infamous,
And ill beseeming any common man,
Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.
Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth,
Valiant and virtuous, full of haughty courage,
Such as were grown to credit by the wars;
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolute in worst extremes.
He, then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight, Profaning this most honourable order;
And should (if I were worthy to be judge)
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom:
Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight.
Henceforth we banish thee on pain of death.—

[Exit Fastolpe.]

And, now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style?
No more but, plain and bluntly,—"To the king!"
Hath he forgot he is his sovereign?
Or doth this churlish supercression
Portend some alteration in good will?
What's here? [Reads.] "I have upon especial cause,—Mov'd with compassion of my country's wretch, Together with the pitiful complaints Of such as your oppression feeds upon,— Forsaken your pernicious faction, And joint'd with Charles, the rightful king of France."
O, monstrous treachery! Can this be so?
That in alliance, amity, and oaths,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?
Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become thy foe.
K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?
Glo. It is the worst, and all my lord, he writes.
K. Hen. Why then, lord Talbot, there, shall talk with him,
And give him chastisement for this abuse.—
How say you, my lord? are you not content?

Tal. Content, my liege? Yes, but that I'm prevented,
I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.
K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight.
Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason;
And what offence it be to flout his friends.
Tal. I go, my lord; in this looking still,
You may behold confusion of your foes.

[Exit Enter Vernon and Baske.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!
Bas. And me, my lord; grant me the combat too!
York. This is my servant: hear him, noble prince.
Som. And this is mine: sweet Henry, favour him.
K. Hen. Be patient, lords, and give them leave to speak.—

Say, gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaim?
And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?

Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.
Bas. And I with him; for he hath done me wrong.
K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?
First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea from England into France
This fellow, here, with envious carping tongue
Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,
When stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law,
Argued betwixt the duke of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms:
In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms.
Ver. And that is my petition, royal lord:
For though he seem, with forged quaint conceit,
To set a gloss upon his bold intent,
Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him,
And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flower
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.
York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left?
Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will I
Though thought so cunningly you smother it.
K. Hen. Good Lord! what madness rules in sick men:
When, for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations still arise.—

Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.
York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight,
And then your highness shall command a peace.
Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt our parts, let us decide it, then.
York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.
Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.
Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.
Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife
And perish ye, with your audacious praise!
Presumptuous vassals! are you not ashamed?
With this immodest, clamorous outrage
To trouble and disturb the king and us?
And your words, methinks, you do not well,
To bear with their perverse objections;
Much less to take occasion from their mouths
To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves:
Let me persuade you take a better course.
SCENE III.

KING HENRY VI.

Exe. It grieves his highness: good my lords, be friends.

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combatants.

Henceforth, I charge you, as you love our favour,

Quit to forget this quarrel, and the cause.—

And you, my lords, remember where we are;

In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation.

If they perceive dissension in our looks,

And that within ourselves we disagree,

How will their grudging stomachs be provoked,

To wilful disobedience, and rebel ?

Bide, what in army will there arise,

When foreign princes shall be certified,

That for a toy, a thing of no regard,

King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,

Doom'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?

O! think upon the conquest of my father,

My tender years; and let us not forego

That for a trifle, that was bought with blood.

Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.

Yet, no reason, if I wear this gage.

[Putting on a Red Rose.

The any one should therefore be suspicious

I more incline to Somerset than York:

Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both.

As well they may upbraided me with my crown,

Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.

But your discretions better can persuade,

Than I am able to instruct or teach:

And therefore, as we hither came in peace,

So let us still continue peace and love.—

Consort of York, we institute your grace

To be our regent in these parts of France:

Act, good my lord of Somerset, unite

Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;

Act, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,

Gladly and cheerfully, and digest

Your angry choler on your enemies.

Onself, my lord protector, and the rest,

Ae some respite, will return to Calais;

From thence to England, where I hope ere long

To be presented by your victories

With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

[Flourish.

War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king

Fiercely, methought, did play the orator.

York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,

That he bears the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him not;—

He's presum'd, sweet prince; he thought no harm.

York. And, if I wist, he did.—but let it rest;

Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt York, Warwick, and Vernon.

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;

For had the passions of thy heart burst out,

Hear, we should have seen deceiv'd th' ear;

More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils,

Yet can it imagine or suppos'd.

But howse't, no simple man that sees

The jarring discord of nobility,

The shortening of each other in the court,

This fastidious bandyng of their favourites,

But that it doth pressage some ill event.

In much, when sceptres are in children's hands,

It made envy breeds undivided:

Here comme the ruine, there begins confusion.

[Exit.

Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France.

Enter Talbot, with his Forces.

Tul. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter:

Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a Parley.

Enter, on the Walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,

Servant in arms to Harry king of England;

And thus he would.—Open your city gates,

Be humble to us; we are your foreign yours,

And do him homage by obedient subjects,

And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power;

But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,

Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;

Who, in a moment, even with the earth

Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,

If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,

Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge,

The period of thy tyranny approacheth.

On us thou canst not enter but by death;

For, I protest, we are well fortified,

And strong enough to issue out and fight:

If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,

Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee.

On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd;

To wall thee from the liberty of flight,

And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,

But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,

And pale destruction meet thee in the face.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,

To rive their dangerous artillery.

Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.

Lo! there thou standst, a breathing valiant man,

Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:

This is the latest glory of thy praise,

That I, thy enemy, due thee withal;

For ere the glass, that now begins to run,

Finish the process of his sandy hour,

These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,

Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

[Drum off after.

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,

Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;

And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

Exeunt General, &c., from the Walls.

Tul. He fables not; I hear the enemy.—

Out, some light horsemen, and pursue their wings.—

O, negligent and heedless discipline! how

We are park'd, and bounded in a pale! A little herd of England's timorous deer,

Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs! If we be English deer, be then in blood;

Not raceal-like to fall down with a pinch,

But rather moody mad, and desperate stage,

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel;

And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:

Sell every man his life as dear as mine,

And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.

God, and Saint George, Talbot, and England's right,

Proper our colours in this dangerous fight!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter York, with Forces; to him, a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,

That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?

Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,
That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot. As he march'd along,
By your espials were discover'd
Two mghtier troops than that the Dauphin led,
Whie... join'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.
By me they nothing gain, and if I stay,
Tis but the short'ning of my life one day:
In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,
My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame.
All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are saved, if thou wilt fly away.
John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart.

These words of yours draw life-blood from my heart.
On that advantage, bought with such a shame,
(To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame)
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
The coward horse that bears me fall and die!
And like me to the peasant boys of France,
To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly I am not Talbot's son:
Then, take no more of flight: it is no boot,
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,
 Thou Icarus. Thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side,
And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride. [Exeunt]

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Same.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Talbot wounded, supported by a Soldier.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone:
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?—
Triumphant death, smeared with captivity,
Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee.
When he perceiv'd me shrink, and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And like a hungry lion did commence
Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardian stood alone,
Tendering my ruin, and assailed of none,
Dizzy-eyed fury, and great rage of heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clust'ring battle of the French:
And in that sea of blood my boy did drench
His overmounting spirit; and there died
My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of John Talbot.
Sold. O, my dear lord! lo, where your son is born!
Tal. Thou artick, death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,
Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality.—
O! thou whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath:
Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no:
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.—
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should say,
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms.
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.

Des. Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers, leaving the two bodies.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Burgundy, Bastard, La Pucelle, and Forces.
Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.
Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging wood,
Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!
_Puc._ Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,
"Thou maiden youth be vanquish'd by a maid!"
But with a proud, ma jestical high scorn,
He answer'd thus: "Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillow of a giglot wench."
So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.
_Bur._ Doubtless, he would have made a noble knight.
See, where he lies inhaled in the arms
Of the still bleeding' nurser of his harms.
_Bast._ Hew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder,
Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.
_Char._ O, no! forbear; for that which we have fled
During the life, let us not wound it dead.
Enter _Sir William Lucy_, attended; a French Herald preceding.
_Lucy._ Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent,
To know who hath the glory of the day.
_Char._ On what submissive message art thou sent?
_Lucy._ Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors not what it means.
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,
And to survey the bodies of the dead.
_Char._ For prisoners ask'd thou? hell our prison is.
But tell me briefly whom thou seekest now.
_Lucy._ But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury?
.Created, for his rare successes in arms,
Great earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valentia;
Lord Talbot of Goodrigg and Urchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmear, lord Verdun of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, lord Furnival of Sheffield.
The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge:
Knight of the noble order of St. George,
Worthy Saint Michael, and the golden fleece
Great marshall to Henry the sixth
Of all his wars within the realms of France?
Puc._ Here is a silly stately style indeed:
The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath,
Writs not so tedious a style as this,—
_Him, that thou magnifiest with all these titles,
Stinking, and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.
_Lucy._ Is Talbot slain? the Frenchman's only scourge,
Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O! were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces.
O! that I could but call these dead to life,
It were enough to fright the realm of France.
Were but his picture left among you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies that I bear them forth,
And give them burial as becomes their worth.
Puc._ I think, this upset is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em; keep them here.
They would but sink, and putrefy the air.
_Char._ Go, take their bodies hence.
_Lucy._ I'll bear them hence.
But from their very ashes shall be rear'd
A phoenix that shall make all France afeard.
_Char._ So we be rid of them, do what thou wilt.
And now to Paris, in this conquering vein:
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter _King Henry_, _GLOSTER_, and _EXETER_.

_K._ Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,
The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac?
_Glo._ I have, my lord; and their intent is this:—
They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a godly peace concluded of
Between the realms of England and of France.
_K._ Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion?
_Gov._ Well, my good lord; and as the only means
To stop effusion of much Christian blood,
And 'establish quietness on every side.
_K._ Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought, it was both impious and unnatural,
That such immi nacy and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.
_Glo._ Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect,
And surer bind, this knot of amity,
The earl of Armagnac, near kin to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,
Proffers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.
_K._ Hen. Marriage, uncle? alas! my years are young,
And fitter is my study and my books,
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.
Yet, call th' ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answers one:
I shall be well content with any choice,

A most bloody: in f. c.  b hath obtained: in f. c.  4 These two words are not in f. c.  5 The old name of Warwick.  6 that I may be them hence: in f. c.  7 our: in f. c.  8 knit: in f. c.  9 Not in f. c.
SCENE III.

KING HENRY VI.

The sum of money, which I promised
Should be deliver'd to his holiness
For dressing me in those fine garments,
Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure. [Exit.
Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, I trust,
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.
 Humphreys, of Glosier, thou shalt well perceive,
That, neither in birth, or for authority,
The bishop will be overborne by thee:
I'll either make thee stoop, and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALENCON, LA PUCELLE, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits.
'Tis said the stout Parisians do revolt,
And turn again unto the warlike French.
Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of France,
And keep not back your powers in dalliance.
Burg. Peace be amongst me till they turn to us;
Else ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Scout.

Scout. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accomplishments!
Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pr'ythee, speak.

Scout. The English army, that divided
Into two parties, is now conjoint in one,
And means to give you battle presently.
Char. Somewhat too sudden, sire, the warning is;
But we shall presently provide for them.

Bus. I trust, the ghost of Talbot is not there;
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions fear is most accurs'd—
Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine;
Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Char. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before Angiers.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter LA PUCELLE.

Puc. The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly.
Now help, ye charming spells, and periapt's;
And ye, choice spirits, that admonish me,
And give me signs of future accidents:
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes
Under the lordly monarch of the north,
Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

Enter Friends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof
Of your accustomed diligence to me.
Now, ye familiar spirits, that are call'd
Out of the powerful regions under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.

[They walk, and speak not.

O! hold me not with silence over-long.
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'll lop a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a farther benefit,
So you do condescend to help me now.

[They hang their heads.

No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompense, if you will grant my suit.

[They shake their heads.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifices,
Suf. She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
Sue is a woman, therefore to be won. [Aside.
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea, or no?
Suf. Fond man! remember that thou hast not hear.
Then, how can Margaret be thy paramour? [Aside.
Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear.
Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talks at random: sure, the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.
Suf. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom?
Why, for my king: tush! that's a wooden thing.
Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied, [Aside.
And peace established between these realms.
But there remains a scrople in that, too;
For though her father be the king of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match.
Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdain they are or much: [Aside.
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.
Madam, I have a secret to reveal.
Mar. What though I be enthralled? he seems a knight,
And will not any way dishonour me. [Aside.
Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.
Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescued by the French,
And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside.
Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—
Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere now.
[Aside.
Suf. Lady, pray tell me, wherefore talk you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy; 'tis but quid pro quo.
Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not then ween?
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
Mar. A queen in bondage is more vile to me.
Than is a slave in base servility,
For princes should be free.
And so shall you,
If happy England's royal king be true.
Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?
Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen;
To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,
And set a precious crown upon thy head,
I thou wilt condescend to be my—
Mar. What?
Suf. His love.
Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.
Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am
To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,
And have no portion in the choice myself.
How say you, madam? are you so content?
Mar. An if my father please, I give consent.
Suf. Then, call our captains, and our colours forth!
And, madam, at your father's castle walls
We'll crave a parley, to confer with him.
[Troops come forward.
A Parley sounded. Enter Reignier, on the Walls.
Suf. See, Reignier, see thy daughter prisoner.
Reign. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reign. Suffolk, what remedy?
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:
Consent, and for thy honour give consent,
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king,
Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto,
And this her easy-hold imprisonment
Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.
Suf. Fair Margaret knows,
That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or feign.
Reign. Upon thy princely warrant I descend
To give thee answer of thy just demand.
[Exit, from the Walls.
Suf. And here I will expect thy coming down.
Trumpets sounded. Enter Reignier, below.
Reign. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories;
Come hither in Anjou what your honour pleases.
Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,
Fit to be made companion with a king:
What answer makes thy grace unto my suit?
Reign. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth,
To be the princely bride of such a lord,
Upon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou,
Free from oppression or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.
Suf. That is her ransom, I deliver her;
And these two counties, I will undertake,
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.
Reign. And I again, in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,
Give thee her hand, for sign of pitied faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly thanks,
Because this is in trifle of a king:
And yet, methinks I could be well content
To be mine own attorney in this case.
I'll over, then, to England with this news,
And make this marriage to solemniz'd.
So, farewell, Reignier. Set this diamond safe
In golden palaces, as it becomes.
Reign. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, king Henry, were he here.
Mar. Farewell, my lord. Good wishes, pray, as prayers,
Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [Aside.
Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But bark you, Ma-garet;

No princely commendations to my king?
Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,
A virgin, and his servant, say to him.
Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestly directed.
But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his majesty?
Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted heart.
Never yet taint with love, I send the king.
Suf. And this withal. [Kisses her.
Mar. That for thyself: I will not so presume,
To send such peevish tokens to a king.
[Exit Reignier and Margaret.
Suf. O wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk, stay;
Thou mayst not wander in that labyrinth:
There Minotaur, and ugly reasons, lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
Midst natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas,
That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou mayest beare his of his wise with wonder.
[Exit.

Enter York, Warwick, and others.
York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to be

SCENE IV.

KING HENRY VI.

Enter La Pucelle, guarded; and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan! this kills thy father's heart out-right.

Have I sought every country far and near,
And, now it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?
Ah, Joan! sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee.

Puc. Deceitful miscreant! base ignoble wretch!
I am descendent of a gentle blood:
Thou art no father, nor no friend, of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, t'is not so;
I did beget her, all the parish knows:
Her mother liveth yet, can testify,
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?
York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;
Wicked and vile, and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fie, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstinate!
God knows thou art a colt of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:
Deny me not, I pray thee, gentle Joan.

Puc. Peasant, avaunt!—You have sown this madman,
Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,
The morn that I was wedded to her mother.—
Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.—

Wilt thou not stoop? Not cursed be the time
Of thy nativity! I would, the milk
Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her breast,
Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake;
Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,
I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee.

Doest thou deny thy father, cursed drab?
O! burn her, burn her: hanging is too good. [Exit. York.

Take her away; for she hath lived too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First, let me tell you whom you have condemned;
Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issu'd from the progeny of kings:

Sudurious, and holy: chosen from above,
By inspiration of celestial grace,

To work exceeding miracles on earth.
I never had to do with wicked spirits:
But you,—that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—
Because you want the grace that others have,
You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders, but by help of devils.
No: misconceived Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy,
Chaste and immaculate in very thought;
Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay.—Away with her to execution! War.

And hark ye, sire; because she is a maid,

Save for no fagots, let there be no fire;
Place barrells of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?

Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—

Arm with child, ye bloody homicides:
Murder not, then, the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hate me to a violent death.

York. Now, heaven forefend! the holy maid with child?

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought!
Is all your strict preciosity come to this?
York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling:
I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well, go to: we will have no bastards live;
Especially, since Charles must father it.

Puc. You are deceiv'd; my child is none of his;
It was Alençon, that enjoy'd my love.

York. Alençon, that notorious Machiavel!
It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O! give me leave; I have deluded you.
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd,
But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man: that's most intolerable.
York. Why, here's a girl! I think she knows not well,
There were so many, whom she may accuse.

War. It's sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And next, forsooth, she is a virgin pure—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy bravet, and thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.

Puc. Then lead me hence:—with whom I leave my curse.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode;
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Enviroyn you, till mischief, and despair
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!

[Exit, guarded.

York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes,
Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.

For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mov'd with remorse of these outrageous broils,
Have earnestly implo'red a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand the Dauphin, and his train,
Approacheth to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers.
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Shall we at last conclude efficacious peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great progenitors had conquer'd?—

O, Warwick, Warwick! I forsee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York! if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, attended; ALENCON, Bastard,
REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truces shall be proclaimed in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves;
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester: for boiling choler chokes
The hollow passage of my prison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:—
That, in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of mere compassion, and of lenity.

To cease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,
You shall become true liegeman to his crown.

FIRST PART OF

And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alan. Must he be then as shadow of himself?
Adorn his temples with a coronet,
And, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This proffer is absurd and senseless.

Char. 'Tis known, already that I am possess'd
With more than half the Galian territories,
And therein reverence'd for their lawful king:
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep
That which I have, than covet for more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means
Used intercession to obtain a league,
And now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparisons?
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reg. My lord, you do not dwell in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alan. To say the truth, it is your policy
[Aside to Charles.]
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostilities;
And, therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Char. It shall; only reserv'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
 Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—
[Charles, and his Nobles, give tokens of fealty.
So; I dismiss your army when ye please:
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we intercommunicate a solemn peace.

SCENE V.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, in conference with Suffolk; Gloster and Essex following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, blest with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart;
And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Suf. Tush! my good lord, this superficial tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them)
Would make a volume of entitling lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command:
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem;
How shall we, then, dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths:
Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsoaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds.
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret, more than is Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel?—

Suf. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,
The king of Naples and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exeunt. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dow
Where Reignier sooner will receive, than give.

Suf. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your kit
That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.
Henry is able to enrich his queen.
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship:
Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed;
And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
The most of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be prefer'd.
For what is wedlock forced but a hell,
And damns the soul of any mind that enters there?—
Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.
Whom should we match with Henry, being a king?
But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?
Her peerless beauty, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none but for a king;
Her valiant courage, and untaunted spirit,
(More than in women commonly is seen)
Will answer our hope in issue of a king;
For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolve,
As is fair Margaret, he be linked in love.
Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with me,
That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your request
My noble lord of Suffolk, or for that
My tender youth was never yet attain'd
With any passion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell; but this I am assured,
I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,
Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts,
Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France;
Agree to any covenants, and procure
The lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown’d
King Henry’s faithful and anointed queen.
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say; for till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do ensnare me by what you were
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.
And so conduct me, where from company
I may revolve and ruminate my grief.
Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.
[Suff. Thus Suffolk hath prevail’d; and thus he goes,
As did the youthful Paris once to Greece,
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
And I will rule both her, the king, and realm. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of Trumpets: then Haukboys. Enter, on one side, KING HENRY, Duke of GLOSTER, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and Cardinal BEAUFORT; on the other, Queen MARGARET, led in by Suffolk; YORK, SOMERSET, BUCKINGHAM, and others following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, As procurator to your excellence, To marry princess Margaret for your grace; So, in the famous ancient city Tours, In presence of the kings of France and Sicil, The dukes of Orleans, Calabre, Bretaigne, and Alençon, Seven earls, twelve barons, and twenty reverend bishops, I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd: And humbly now upon my bended knee, In sight of England and her lordly peers, Deliver up my title in the queen To your most gracious hands, that are the substance Of that great shadow I did represent; The happiest gift that ever marquess gave, The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.

K. Hen. Suffolk, arise. Welcome, queen Margaret: I can express no kinder sign of love, Than this kind kiss—O Lord! that lends me life, Let me a heart repose with thankfulness; For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face, A world of earthly blessings to my soul, If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

A Sea-captain, Master and Master's Mate.
Two Gentlemen, Prisoners with Suffolk. Van, Hume and Southwell, Priests.
Bolingbrooke, a Conjurer. A Spirit raised by him.
THOMAS HORNER, an Armourer. Peter, his Man.
Clerk of Chatham. Mayor of St. Albans.
Simpcox, an Imposter. Two Murderers.
Jack Cade.
GEORGE, JOHN, DICK, SMITH, the Weaver.
Michael, &c., Cade's Followers.
ALEXANDER IDEN, a Kentish Gentleman.
MARGARET, Queen to King Henry.
ELEANOR, Duchess of GLOSTER.
MARGERY JOURDAIN, a Witch. Wife to Simcox.

Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious lord,
The mutual conference that my mind hath had By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams, In courtly company, or at my beads, With you mine alderlieves' sovereign, Makes me the bolder to salute my king With ruder terms, such as my wit affords, And overjoy of heart doth minister. K. Hen. Her sight did ravish, out her grace in speech. Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty, Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys. Such is the fulness of my heart's content.

Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love. All. Long live queen Margaret, England's happiness! Q. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish. Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace, Here are the articles of contracted peace, Between our sovereign, and the French king Charles For eighteen months, concluded by consent.

Glo. [Reads.] "Imprimis: It is agreed between the French king, Charles, and William de la Poole, marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry, king of England,—that the said Henry shall espouse the lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem, and crown her queen of England and the thirtieth of May next ensuing.—Item,—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king her father."—[Pealing.]
K. Hen. Uncle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord; Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart, And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no farther. K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on. Car. [Reads] "Item: It is farther agreed between them, that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father, and she sent over of the king of England's own proper coat and charges, without having any dowry." K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel down:

We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk, And give thee with the sword.—Cousin of York, We here discharge thy grace from being regent I'the parts of France, till term of eighteen months Be full expir'd.—Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloster, York, Buckingham, Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;

We thank you all for this great favour done, In entertainment to my princely queen. Come, let us in; and with all speed provide To see her coronation be performed.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state, To you due Humphrey must unload his grief, Your grief, the common grief of all the land. What! did my brother Henry spend his youth, His valour, coin, and people, in the wars? Did he so often lodge in open field, In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat, To conquer France, his true inheritance? And hath his brother Bedford to his write, To keep by policy what Henry got? Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham, Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick, Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy? Or hath mine uncle Beaufort, and myself, With all the learned council of the realm Studied so long, sat in the council-house Early and late, debating to and fro How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe? And hath his highness in his infancy B-crowned in Paris, in despite of foes? And shall these labours, and these honours die? Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance, Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die? O peers of England! shameful is this league: Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame, Blotting your names from books of memory, Razing the characters of your renown, Defacing monuments of conquest'd France, Undoing all, as all had never been.

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse? This peroration with such circumstance? For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still. Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can; But now it is impossible we should. Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roost, Hath given the duchies of Anjou, and Maine, Unto the poor king Reignier, whose large style Agrees with his purse. Glo. Exeunt the King, the Duke of York, and Somerset.

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him. While these do labour for their own preferment, Behoves us to labour for the realm. I never saw but Humphrey, duke of Gloster, Did bear him like a noble gentleman. Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal, More like a soldier, than a man o' the church,
As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,
Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself
Unlike the ruler of a common-weal. —
Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy piissiness, and thy house-keeping,
Have worn the greatest favour of the commons,
Excepting none but good duke Humphrey: —
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline;
Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France,
When thou wast regent for our sovereign,
Have made thee feared, and honour'd of the people.—
Join we together, for the public good,
In what we can to bridle and suppress
The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds,
While they do tend to profit of the land.
War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
And common profit of his country.
York. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.
Sci. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.
War. Unto the main? O father! Maine is lost;
That Maine, which by main force did Warwick win,
And would have kept so long as breath did last,
Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slain.
[Exeunt Warwick and Salisbury.
York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;
Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point now they are gone.
Suffolk concluded on the articles,
The peers agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
I cannot blame them all: what is it to them?
'T is thine they give away, and not their own.
Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pilnage,
And purchase friends, and give to courtiers,
Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone;
While as the stilly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his helpless hand,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
While all isher'd, and all is borne away,
Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own:
So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.
Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ireland,
Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood,
As did the fatal brand Althea burn'd
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.
Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French!
Cold news for me, I had hope of France,
Even as I have of fertile England's soil.
A day will come when York shall claim his own;
And therefore I will take the Nevilles' parts.
And make a show of love to proud duke Humphrey,
And when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
For that's the golden march I seek to hit.
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,
Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.
Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:
Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state,
Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
With his new bride, and England's dear-bought queen,
And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars:
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd,
And in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.
[Exeunt.
SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House.
Enter Gloster and the Duchess.
Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn?
Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?
Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows,
As frowning at the favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?
What sects thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Embrace'd with all the honours of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same.
Put forth thy hand; reach to the glorious gold. —
What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine;
And having both together heav'd it up,
We'll both together lift our heads to heaven,
And never more abase our sight so low,
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.
Glo. O Neil! sweet Neil, if thou dost love thy lord,
Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts;
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world.
My troubous dream this night doth make me sad.
Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I require it
With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in cour
Was broke in twain: by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, 't was by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmund duke of Somerset,
And William de la Poole, first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream: what it doth bode God knows.
Duch. Tut! this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me, my Humphrey! my sweet duke:
Methought, I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster,
And in that chair where kings and queens were crown'd
Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.
Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright.
Presumptuous dame! ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
Art thou not second woman in the realm,
And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thoughts?
And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
Away from me, and let me hear no more.
Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric?
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself
And not be check'd.
Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis is his highness' pleasure, You do prepare to ride unto St. Albans, Whereas the king and queen are.

Cla. I go.—Come, Nell: thou wilt ride with us?

Duck. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow presently.

[Exeunt Gloster and Messenger.]

Fool. Follow me, I cannot go before, While Gloster bears this base and humble mind. Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood, I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks, And smooth my way upon their headless necks: And, being a woman, I will not be slack To play my part in fortune's pageant. — Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not, man, We are alone; here's none but thou, and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty!

Duck. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but grace.

Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice, Your grace's title shall be multiplied.

Duck. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet

With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer, And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promised,—to show your

A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground, [highness That shall make answer to such questions, As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Duck. It is enough: I'll think upon the questions.

When from St. Albans we do make return, We'll see these things effectuate to the full.

Here, Hume, take this reward: make merry, man, With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit Duchess.]

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold,

Marry, and shall. But how now, Sir John Hume!

Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum: The business asketh silent secrecy.

Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring a witch: Gold cannot charm away, she's a devil. Yet have I gold flies from another coast:

I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,

And from the great and new made duke of Suffolk; Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain, They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour, Have hired me to undermine the duchess,

And bus these conjunctions in her brain. They say, a crafty knave does need no broker; Yet am I Suffolk's, and the cardinal's broker.

Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near

To call them both a pair of crafty knaves.

Well, so it stands: and thus, I fear, at last, Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck, And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall.

Sort' how it will, I shall have gold for all.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Same. A room in the Palace.

Enter Peter, and others, with Petitions.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in sequel.

2 Pet. Marry, the lord protect him, for he's a good man.

Jesu bless him!

Enter Suffolk and Queen Margaret.

1 Pet. Here 's comes, methinks, and the queen with him I 'll be the first, sure.

2 Pet. Come back, fool! this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suff. How now, follow! wouldst any thing with me?

1 Pet. I pray my lord, pardon me: I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. "To my lord protector!" are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them.

What is thine?

1 Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife, and all, from me.

Suff. Thy wife too! that is some wrong indeed.

What's yours?—What's here? [Reads.] "Against the duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford."

—How now, sir knave?

2 Pet. Alas! sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horny, for saying, that the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Q. Mar. What say'st thou? Did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was. No, forsooth: my master said, that he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suff. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently. —We 'll hear more of your matter before the king.

[Exeunt Servants with Peter.]

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

Under the wings of our protector's grace,

Begin your suite anew, and sue to him.

Tears the Petition.

Away, base suitors!—Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

[Exeunt Petitioners.]

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise, Is this the fashion in the court of England?

Is this the government of Britain's isle,

And this the royalty of Albion's king?

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still, Under the surly Gloster's governance?

Am I a queen in title and in style,

And must be made a subject to a duke?

I tell thee. Poole, when in the city Tours Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love,

And stol' away the ladies' hearts of France,

I thought king Henry had resembled thee, In courage, courtship, and proportion;

But all his mind is bent to holiness, To number Ave Maria's on his beads:

His champions are the prophets and apostles;

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;

His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves

Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints.

I would, the college of the cardinals

Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head:

That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suff. Madam, be patient: as I was cause

Your highness came to England, so will I

In England work your grace's full content.

Q. Mar. Beside the haughty protector, have we

Beaufort,

The imperious churchman; Somerset, Buckingham, And grumbling York: and not the least of these,

But can do more in England than the king.

Suff. And he of these that can do most of all, Cannot do more in England than the Nevils:

Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much.
As that proud dame, the lord protector’s wife:
She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than duke Humphrey’s wife.
Strangers in court do take her for the queen:
She bears a ducal’s revenues on her back,
And in her heart she scourns our poverty.
Shall I not live to ‘ae aveng’d on her?
Contemptuous base-born callat’ as she is,
She vaunted ’mongst her minions ’ other day,
The very train of her worst wearing gown
Was better worth than all my father’s lands,
Till Suffolk gave two of his daughter.
Suf. Madam, myself have lim’d a busk for her;
And plac’d a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays,
And never mount to trouble you again.
So let her rest; and, madam, list to me,
For I am bold to counsel you in this.
Although we fancy not the cardinal,
Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,
Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.
For, if the duke of York, this late complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So, one by one, we will weed all the realm,
And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter King Henry, York, and Somerset; Duke and Duchess of Glositer, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwick.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;
Or Somerset, or York, all’s one to me.
York. If York have ill demean’d himself in France,
Then let him be denay’d the regentship.
Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
Let York be regent: I will yield to him.
War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,
Dispute not that York is the worthier.
Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speak.
War. A cardinal’s not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.
War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.
Sed. Peace, my son! — and show some reason, Buckingham,
Why Somerset should be prefer’d in this.
Q. Mar. Because the king, forthwith, will have it so.
Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself
To give his censure. These are no women’s matters.
Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your grace
To be protector of his excellence?
Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm,
And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.
Suf. Resign it, then, and leave thine insolence.
Since thou wert king, (as who is king but thou?)
The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck:
The Dauphin hath prevail’d beyond the seas,
And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.
Car. The commons hast thou rack’d; the clergy’s bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortion.
Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife’s attire,
Have cost a mass of public treasury.
Buck. Thy cruelties, in execution
Upon offenders hath exceed’d law,
And left thee to the mercy of the law.
Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices, and towns in France,
If they were known, as the suspect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

[Exit Gloster. The Queen drops her Fan.
Give me my war: what, minion! can you not?

[Giving the Duchess a box on the ear.
I cry you mercy, madam: was it you?
Duck. Was it? yes, I it was, prithee, French-woman:
Could I come near your beauty, but with my nails,
I’d set my ten commandments in your face.
K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet: ’twas against her will.
Duck. Against her will. Good king, look to ’t in time;
She’ll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby.
Though in this place most master wear no breeches,
She shall not strike dame Eleanor unwarrant’d.

[Exit Duchess.

Buck. Lord Cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,
And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds:
She’s tickled now; her fume can need no spurs,
She’ll gallop fast enough to her destruction.

[Exit Buckingham.

Re-enter Gloster.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blow’d
With walking once about the quadrangle,
I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.
As for your spiteful false objections,
Prove them, and I lie open to the law;
But God in mercy do with my soul,
As I in duty love my king and country.
But to the matter that we have in hand,—
I say, my sovereign, York is meekest man
To be your regent in the realm of France.
Suf. Before we make election, give me leave
To show some reason, of no little force,
That York is most unmeet of any man.
York. I’ll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.
First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride:
Next, if I be appointed for the place,
My lords of Somerset will keep me there,
Without discharge, money, or furniture,
Till France be won into the Dauphin’s hands.
Last time I danc’d attendance on his will,
Till Paris was besieg’d, famish’d, and lost.
War. That can I witness: and a fouler fact
Did never traitor in the land commit.
Suf. Peace, headstrong Warwick!
War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace?
Enter Servants of Suffolk, bringing in Horne and Peter.
Suf. Because here is a man accus’d of treason:
Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!
York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?
K. Hen. What mean’st thou, Suffolk? tell me, what are these?
Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason.
His words were these,—that Richard, duke of York,
Was rightful heir unto the English crown,
And that your majesty was an usurper.
K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?
Hor. An’t shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter. God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.
Pet. By these ten bones, my lords, [Holding up his hands: he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were securing my lord of York’s armure.
York. Base dung-hill villain, and mechanical,
I’ll have thy head for this thy traitor’s speech.—
I do beseech your royal majesty,
Let him have all the rigour of the law.
Hor. Alas! my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me. I have [To Bernardino de Casas. I have good witness of this: therefore, I beseech your majesty, K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

Glo. This doom, my gracious lord, if I may judge.
Let Somerset be regent over the French,
Because in York these breeds suspicion;
And let these have a day appointed them
For single combat in convenient place,
For he hath witnesses of his servant's malice.
This is the law, and this duke Humphrey's doom.
Sew. I thank your royal majesty.
Hov. And I accept the combat willingly.
Pet. Alas! my lord, I cannot fight: for God's sake, pay my case! the spite of this man prevaloth against me.
O. Lord have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow. O. Lord, my heart!
Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight or else be hang'd.
K. Hen. Away with them to prison; and the day
O. combat shall be the last of the next month. —
Come, Somerset; we shall see thee sent away.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Same. The Duke of GLOSTER'S Garden.
Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTHWELL, and BOLINGBORE.
Hume. Come, my masters: the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.
Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided.
Will her ladyship behold and hear our exercisings?
Hume. Ay; what else? fear you not her courage.
Boling. I have heard her report to be a woman of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, master
Hume, that you be by her aloof, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us. [Exit Hume.] Moth' Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth:—John Southwell, read you,
and let us to our work.
[Enter duchess above.
Duck. Well said, my masters, and welcome all.
To this glee: the sooner the better.
Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times,
Deep night, dark night, and silence¹ of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire;
The time when screech-owls cry, and dogs howl,
And spirits walk, and ghosts break ope² their graves,
That time best fits the work we have in hand.
Midam, sit you, and fear not: whom we raise,
We will make fast within a howl'd verge.
[Here they perform the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle: BOLINGBROKE, reads. Conjuro, tè, kè. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.
Spir. A Assurn.
M. Jourd. Aasmath!
by the eternal God, whose name and power
I thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask;
For till thou speak thou shalt not pass from hence.
Spir. Ask what thou wilt.—That I had said and done!
Boling. First of the king: what shall of him become?
Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall decease,
But him outlive, and die a violent death.
[As the Spirit speaks, SOUTHWELL writes the answer
Boling. What lasts await the duke of Suffolk?
Spir. By water shall he die, and take his end.
Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset?
Spir. Let him shun castles:
Safer shall he be on the sandy plains
Than where castles mounted stand.
Have done, for more I hardly can endure.
Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake:
Fowl⁴ send, avoid!
[Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends
Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM, hastily, with their Guards.
York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.
Buck. I think, we watch'd you at an inch.—
What! madam, are you there? the king and commonweal
Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains:
My lord protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well guarded for these good designs.
Duck. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,
Injurous duke, that threat'at where is no cause.
Buck. True, madam, none at all. What call you this? [Shewing the Papers.
Away with them! let them be clapp'd up close,
And kept under. —You, madam, shall with us:
Stafford, take her to thee. — [Exit Duchess from above.
We'll see your trinkets here are all forth-coming;
All.—Away! [Exeunt Guards, with Southwell, BOLINGBORE, &c.
York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her
A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
[well: Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
What have we here?
"The duke yet lives that Henry shall decease;
But him outlive, and die a violent death."

"Why. this is just
Aio te, Ecua. Romanos vincere posse.
Well, to the rest:
"Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk? —
By water shall he die, and take his end."—
"What shall betide the duke of Somerset? —
Let him shun castles;
Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
Than where castles mounted stand."
Come, come, my lords;
These oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly understood.
The king is now in progress towards Saint Albans;
With him the husband of this lovely lady:
Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them;
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.
Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of York,
To be the post in hope of his reward.
York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there, ho!
[Enter a Servant.
 Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away! [Exeunt

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Albans.
Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER,
Cardinal, and SUFFOLK, with Falconers, hollering.
Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook.
¹ silence: in f. o. ² up: in f. o. ³ false: in f. o. ⁴ Birds of the brook

I saw not better sport these seven years' day;
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high,
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out
K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made
And what a pitch she flew above the rest.
To see how God in all his creatures works!
Yes, man and birds are fain of climbing high.
Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,
My lord protector’s hawks do tower so well:
They know their master loves to be aloft,
And bears his thoughts above his falcon’s pitch.
Glo. My lord, ’tis but a base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.
Car. I thought as much: he’d be above the clouds.
Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; how think you by that? Were it not? and should she fly to heaven? K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy!
Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts
Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart:
Pernicious protector, dangerous peer,
That smooth’st it so with king and commonwealth!
Glo. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown so peremptory?
Tantum animis castissimus eras?
Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;
And with such holiness you well can do it.
Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes
So good a quarell, and so bad a peer.
Glo. As who, my lord?
Suf. Why, as you, my lord;
An’t like your lordly lord-protectorship.
Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.
K. Hen. I pray thee, peace, Good queen;
And what not on these furious peers,
For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.
Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make Against this proud protector with my sword.
Glo. ’Tis faith, holy uncle, would I were come to that!
[Aside to the Cardinal.
Car. Marry, when thou dar’st. [Aside
Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter;
In thine own person answer thy abuse. [Aside
Car. Ay, where thou dar’st not peep: an if thou dar’st,
This evening on the east side of the grove. [Aside
K. Hen. How now, my lords!
Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,
We had had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand sword.
[Aside to Glo.
Glo. True, uncle.
Car. Are you advis’d, the east side of the grove.
Glo. Cardinal, I am with you. [Aside
K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster! Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—
Now, by God’s mother, priest, I’ll shave your crown
For this, or all my fence shall fail.
[Aside.
Car. Medicea testis:
Protector, see to ’t well, protect yourself. [Aside
K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.
How irontome is this music to my heart!
When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.
[Enter one, crying, “A Miracle!”
Glo. What means this noise?
Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?
One. A miracle! a miracle!
Suf. Come to the king; tell him what miracle.
One. Forsooth. a blind man at Saint Alban’s shrine,
Within this half hour hath reg’d his sight;
A man that never saw in his life before.
K. Hen. Now, God be praise’d, that to believing souls
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair.
Enter the Mayor of St. Alban’s, and his Brethren; one Simcox, borne between two persons in a Chair; his Wife and the Multitude following.
Car. Here come the townspeople on procession,
To present your highness with the man.
K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,
Though by his sight his sin be multiplied.
Glo. Stand by, my masters; bring him near the king.
His highness’ pleasure is to talk with him.
K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.
What! hast thou been long blind, and now restor’d?
Simp. Born blind, an’t please your grace.
Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.
Suf. What woman is this?
Wife. His wife, an’t like your worship.
Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.
K. Hen. Where wert thou born?
Simp. At Berwick in the north, an’t like your grace.
K. Hen. Poor soul! God’s goodness hath been great to thee:
Let never day nor night unshallow’d pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.
Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, canst thou here by chance,
Or of devotion, to this holy shrine?
Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call’d
A hundred times, and oftener, in my sleep,
By good Saint Alban: who said,—“Sander, come;
Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.”
Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many times and oft Myself have heard a voice to call him so.
Car. What! art thou lame?
Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me.
Wife. Canst thou not walk?
Simp. A fall off of a tree.
Wife. A plum-tree, master.
Glo. How long hast thou been blind?
Simp. O! born so, master.
Glo. What! and wouldst climb a tree?
Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.
Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear.
Glo. ‘Mass, thou lovest plum-berries, wouldst venture so.
Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir’d some dam and made me climb with danger of my life.
Glo. A subtle knave; but yet it shall not serve.—
Let me see thine eyes:—wink now;—now open them.—
In my opinion yet thou seest not well.
Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God, an Saint Alban.
Glo. Say’st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of Simp. Red, master; red as blood.
Glo. Why, that’s well said. What colour is my gown of?
Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black as jet.
Car. Why then, thou know’st what colour jet is.
Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.
Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day a many.
Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.
Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what’s my name?
Simp. Alas! master, I know not.
Glo. What’s his name?
Simp. I know not.
Glo. Nor his? [Pointing to one
Simp. No, indeed, master.

1 With such holiness can you do it: in folio.
2 In the folio, this and the two preceding speeches are given to Gloster. [Thoshe holdand 1
3 correction.
4 Not in folio.
KING HENRY VI.

Glo. What's thine own name?
Samp. Sander Simpson, as if it please you, master.
Glo. Then Sander, sit thou there, the lyingest knave
Is Cauthorne. If thou hadst been born blind,
Thou might'st so well have known all our names, as thus
To name the several colours we do wear.
Glo. All might distinguish of colours; but suddenly
To nominate all, it is impossible.—
My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle;
Let would ye not think his cunning to be great,
That could restore this cripple to his legs?
Samp. O, master, that you could!
Glo. My masters of Saint Albans, have you not been-seen in your town, and things called whips?
May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.
Glo. Then send for one presently.
May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight.
[Exit an Attendant.

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by. [A stool brought out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save Yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool,
And save away.
Samp. Alas! master, I am not able to stand alone:
Let go about to torture me in vain.
Re-enter Attendant, and a Beadle with a whip.
Glo. Well, sir; we must have you find your legs.
Irish beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.
Beadl. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly.
Samp. Alas! master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool, and runs away; and the People follow and cry, "A Miracle!"

K. Hen. O God! seest thou this, and bearest so long? Q. Mar. It made me laugh to see the villain run.
Glo. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.
Wife. Alas! sir, we did it for pure need.
Glo. Let them be whipped through every market town,
Till they come to Berwick, from whence they came.
[Exeunt Mayor, Beadle, Wife &c.
Cor. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.
Sof. True, made the lame to leap, and fly away.
Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;
So made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter Buckingham.
K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?
Bur. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.
Sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
And the countenance and confederacy
Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,
Be ringleader and head of all this rout,
Have practic'd dangerously against your state,
With witches, and with conjurers,
Have we apprehended in the fact;
Bearing wicked spirits from under ground,
Standing of king Henry's life and death,
And other of your highness' privy council,
More at large your grace shall understand.

[Giving a paper.]
Cor. And so, my lord protector, by this means
Our lady is forthcoming yet at London,
His news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;
Is, like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.
Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave t' affright my heart.
Now and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;
If, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee—
To the meanest groom.

K. Hen. O God! what mischief work the wicked

Heaping confusion on their own needs thereby.
Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;
And look thyself be faultless, thou worst
Glo. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
How I have lov'd my king, and commonweal;
And, for my wife. I know not how it stands.
Sorry I am to hear what I have heard;
Noble she is, but if she have forgot
Honour, and virtue, and convers'd with such
As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
I banish her, my bed, and company,
And give her, as a sin too law, to be
That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.

K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:
To-morrow, toward London, back again,
To look into this business thoroughly,
And call these foul offenders to their answers;
And poise the cause in justice's equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.
[Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.

York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
Our simple supper ended, give me leave,
In this close walk, to satisfy myself
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is infallible, to England's crown.
Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at the full.
War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,
The Nevils are thy subjects to command.
York. Then thus:—
Edward the third, my lords, had seven sons:
The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,
Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmond Langley, duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;
William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.
Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father,
And left behind him Richard, mine only son;
Who, after Edward the third's death, reigned as king,
Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the name of Henry the fourth,
Seized on the realm; depos'd the rightful king;
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,
And him to Pomfret; where, as all you know,
Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.
War. Father, the duke hath told the very truth:
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
[right; York. Which now they hold by force, and not by
For Richard. The first son's heir being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reigned.
Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
York. The third son, duke of Clarence, from whose line
I claim the crown, had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmond Mortimer, earl of March;
Edmond had issue—Roger, earl of March;
Roger had issue—Edmond, Anne, and Eleanor.
Sal. This Edmond, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
Who kept him in captivity, till he died.
But to the rest.
York. His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,
SECOND PART OF

Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.

K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey, duke of Glостer. Ere the Give up thy staff; Henry will to himself
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet.
And go in peace, Humphrey; no less belov'd,
Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

Q. Mar. I see no reason why a king of years
Should be protected like a child by peers.
God and king Henry govern England's helm.
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.

Glos. My staff?—here, noble Henry, is my staff;
To think I fain would keep it makes me laugh.
As willingly do I the same resign,
As e'er thy father Henry made it mine:
And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
As others would ambitiously receive it.
Farewell, good king: when I am dead and gone,
May honourable peace attend thy throne.

[En Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret
queen;
And Humphrey, duke of Glостer, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a mien: two pulls at once,—
His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off;
This staff of honour raught—there let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.
Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprig
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her proudest days.
York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,
This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man to enter lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.

K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all this Here let them end it, and God defend the right! [L
York. I never saw a fellow worse bestead,
Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
The servant of this armourer, my lord.

Enter, on one side, Horner, and his Neighbours, draw ing to him so much that he is drink; and he enthr bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it:
drum before him: at the other side, Peter, with drum and a similar staff; accompanied by Frenцs driver's wife, to him.

1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you a cup of sack. And fear not, neighbour, you shall well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup charmeof.

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double be neighbour: drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let it come, I' faith, and I'll pledge you a and a fig for Peter!

1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and be afraid.

2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me pray you, for, I think, I have taken my last draught this world.—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee apron; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer:—
here, Tom, take all the money that I have—O, Let blesse me! I pray God, for I am never able to d with my master; he hath learnt so much fence alrea

[Spot. The words "by poem," are not in f. 4 realm: in folio; Johnson made the change. This line is not in f. e. 6Ti money; 7 youngest: in f. s. A wise made at a place of that name near Liezen.
S'. Come, leave your drinking both, and fall to blows.—
S'. Ah, what's thy name?
Peter. Peter, forsooth.
Sal. Peter! what more?
Peter. Thump.
Sal. Thump! then see thou thump thy master well.
Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon man's instigation, to prove him a knave and myself an honest man: and touching the duke of York, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen. And therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow.
York. Despatch: this knave's tongue begins to double.
Sound trumpets, alarum to the combatants.
[Alarum. They fight, and Peter strikes down his Master.
Hor. Hold, Peter, hold, I confess, I confess treason.
[Dies.
York. Take away his weapon.—Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.
Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter! thou hast prevailed in right.
K. Hen. Go, and take hence that traitor from our sight;
For by his death we do perceive his guilt:
And God in justice hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,
Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—
Come, follow; follow us for thy reward. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Glosier and Servants, in mourning Cloaks.
Glo. Thus, sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud:
And after summer evermore succeeds
Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:
So, cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.
Sir, what's o'clock?
Serv. Ten, my lord.
Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me to watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:
Unneath she may she endure the stiff streets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people, gazing on thy face
With envious looks, laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But, soft! I think, she comes; and I will prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Glosier, in a white sheet, with verses written upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand; Sir John Stanley, a Sheriff, and Officers.
Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.
Glo. And so, do not for your lives: let her pass by.
Duck. Come, you my lord, to see my open shame.
Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze:
See, how the giddy multitude do point,
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.
Ah, Glosier! hide thee from their hateful looks;
And in thy closet pent rue my shame,
And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine.
Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell: forget this grief.
Duck. Ah, Glosier! teach me to forget myself;
For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
Methinks, I should not thus be led along,
Maid'd up in shame, with papers on my back,
And follow'd with a rabble, that rejoice
To see my tears, and hear my deep-set groans.
The ruthless flint doth cut my tender seat;
And when I start the envious people laugh,
And bid me be advised how I tread.
Ah, Humphrey! can I bear this shameful yoke?
Trow'st thou, this is'er I'll look upon the world.
Or count them happy that enjoy the sun?
No; dark shall be my light, and night my day:
To think upon my pomp, shall be my hell.
Sometime I'll say I am duke Humphrey's wife,
And he a prince, and ruler of the land;
Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,
As he stood by, whilst I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing-stock,
To every idle rascal follower.
But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame:
Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death
Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will;
For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all
With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all.—
And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,
Have all lim'd bushes to betray thy wings;
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee.
But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.
Glo. Ah, Nell! forbear; thou almost all awry:
I must offend before I be attainted;
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any seethe,
So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.
Wouldst have me rescue thee from this reproach?
Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,
But I in danger for the breach of law.
Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell;
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience:
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.
Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.
Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before?
This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.
[Exit Herald.
My Nell, I take my leave;—and, master sheriff,
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.
Sher. An' please your grace, here my commission,
And Sir John Stanley is appointed now [stays,
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.
Glo. Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.
Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well. The world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her: and so, sir John, farewell.
Duck. What! gone, my lord, and bid me not farewell?
Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.
[Exeunt Glosier and Servants.
Duck. Art thou gone so? All comfort go with thee,
For none abides with me: my joy is death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afeard,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—
Stanley, if th'ye be, go, and take me hence;
I care not whether, for I beg no favour,
Only convey me where thou art commanded.

SECOND PART OF

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Abbey at Bury.

A Sennet. Enter to the Parliament, King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, York, Buckingham, and others.

K. Hen. I muse, my lord of Gloster is not come: 'T is not his wont to be the kindliest man. Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Q. Mar. Can you not see, or will you not observe The strangeness of his alter'd countenance? With what a majesty he bears himself; How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself? We know the time since he was mild and affable; And if we did but glance a far-off look, Immediately he was upon his knee, That all the court admir'd him for submission: But meet him now, and, be it in the morn, When every one will give the time of day, He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye, And passeth by with stiff unbow'd knee, Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Small curs are not regarded when they grin, But great men tremble when the lion rears; And Humphrey is no little man in England. First note, that he is near you in descent, And should you fall, he is the next will mount. Me seemeth, then, it is no policy, Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears, And his advantage following your decease, That he should come about your royal person, Or be admitted to your highness' council. By battery hath he won the commons' hearts, And, when he請es to make commotion, 'T is to be feared, they all will follow him. Now 't is the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted; Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden, And choke the herbs for want of husbandry. The reverence I bear unto my lord Made me collect these dangers in the duke. If it be fond, call it a woman's fear: Which fear if better reasons can supplant, I will subscribe and say, I wrong'd the duke. My lords of Suffolk, Buckingham, and York, Reprove my allegations if you can, Or else conclude my words effectual.

Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke; And had I first been put to speak my mind, I think, I should have told your grace's tale. The duke by his subornation, Upon my life, began her devilish practices: Or if he were not privy to those faults, Yet, by repeating of his high descent, As next the king he was successional heir, And such high vaunts of his nobility, Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess, By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall. Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep, And in his simple show he harbours treason. The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man Unsounded yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law, Devise strange deaths for small offences done? York. And did he not, in his protectorship, Levy great sums of money through the realm, For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it? By means whereof the towns each day revolted.

Duck. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown. Which time will bring to light in smooth duke Humphrey.

K. Hen. My lords, at once: the care you have of to Mow down thorns that would annoy our foot, Is worthy praise; but shall I speak my conscience? Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent From meaning treason to our royal person, As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove. The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Q. Mar. Ah! what's more dangerous than this false affiance? Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd, For he's disposed as the hateful raven. Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him, For he's inelined as is the ravenous wolf, Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit? Take heed, my lords; the welfare of us all Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign! K. Hen. Welcome, lord Somerset. What's the news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories Is utterly bereft you: all is lost.

K. Hen. Cold news, lord Somerset; but God's will be done.

York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France

As firmly as I hope for fertile England. Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud, And caterpillars eat my leaves away; But I will remedy this gear ere long, Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king! Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long. Suf. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too soon. Unless thou went more loyal than thou art.
Act I.

KING HENRY VI.

\textit{Scene 2.}

\textbf{Glo.}  Well, Suffolk, yet 'tou shalt not see me blash,
Nor change my countenonce for this arrest:
A heart unspeot is not easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign.
Who can accuse me? \textit{wherein am I guilty?}
\textit{York.}  'T is thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France.
And, be my protector, stay the soldier's pay;
By means whereof his highness hath lost France.
\textbf{Glo.}  Is it but thought so? \textit{What are they that think it?}
I never rob'd the soldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.
So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,
\textit{Ay.}  night by night, in studying good for England.
That doth that ere I wrought from the king,
Or say great I boarded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial day.
\textit{No:}  many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I disbursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.
\textit{Car.}  It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.
\textbf{Glo.}  I say no more than truth, so help me God!
\textit{York.}  In your protectorship you did devise Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of,
That England was desam'd by tyranny.
\textbf{Glo.}  Why, \textit{tis well known that, whiles I was protector,}
Pity was all the fault that was in me;
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lowly words were ransom for their fault:
Unless it were a bloody murderer,
Or foul felonious thief that fleed poor passengers,
I never gave them condign punishment.
\textbf{Suf.}  Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I tortur'd
Above the felon, or what treaspe else.
\textbf{Glo.}  Why, \textit{tis is well known that, whiles I was protector,}
But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
I do arrest you in his highness' name;
And here commit you to my lord cardinal
To keep, until your farther time of trial.
\textbf{K. Hen.}  My lord of Gloster, \textit{tis is my special hope,}
That you will clear yourself from all suspect\textsuperscript{a}:
My o-menience tells me you are innocent.
\textbf{Glo.}  Ah, gracious lord! these days are dangerous:
Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition,
And charity chas'd hence by rancour's hand;
Foul subornation is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land.
I know, their complot is to have my life;
And if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play,
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.
Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,
And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;
Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart;
And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life.\textsuperscript{b}
And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
\textit{Causeless have laid disgrace on my head,}
And with your best endeavour have stir'd up
My liebest liege to be mine enemy.\textsuperscript{c}
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together:
Myself had notice of your conventicles.
And all to make away my guiltless life.
The ancient proverb will be well effect,\textsuperscript{d}
A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.
\textit{Car.}  My liege, his railing is intolerable,
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife, and traitor's rage,
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'T will make them cool in zeal unto your grace.
\textbf{Suf.}  Hath he not twit our sovereign lady, here,
With ignominious words, though clerily couch'd,
As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations to overthrow his state.
\textbf{Q. Mar.}  But I can give the loser leave to chide.
\textbf{Glo.}  Far truer spoke, than meant: I lose, indeed.
Beashrew the winners, for they played me false;
And well such losers may have leave to speak.
\textbf{Buck.}  He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day.
Lord Cardinal, he is your prisoner.
\textit{Car.}  Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.
\textbf{Glo.}  Ah! thus king Henry throws away his crust,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body:
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first.
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
For, good king Henry, thy decay I fear.
\textbf{Exeunt Attendants with Gloster.}
\textbf{K. Hen.}  My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,
Do, or undo, as if ourself were here.
\textbf{Q. Mar.}  What! will your highness leave the parliament?
\textbf{K. Hen.}  Ay, Margaret, my heart is drown'd with grief,
Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;
My body round engirt with misery,
For what's more miserable than discontent?
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see
The map of honour, truth, and loyalty:
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,
That e'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
What lowering star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong:
And as the butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beata it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;
Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence:
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling's loss;
Even so myself bewails good Gloster's case,
With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes
Look after him, and cannot do him good,
So mighty are his vowed enemies.
His fortunes I will weep; and \textit{twixt each groan,}
Say—\textit{Who's a traitor? Gloster he is none.}\textsuperscript{[Exit.}
\textbf{Q. Mar.}  Fair lords, cold snow melts with the sun's Hot beams.
Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
Too full of foolish pity; and Gloster's show

ACT III.

Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowing bank,
With shining chequ'r'd slough, doth sting a child.
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I,
(And yet herein I judge mine own wit good)
This Globe should be quickly rid the world,
To rid us from the fear we have of him.
Car. That he should die is worthy policy,
But yet we want a colour for his death:
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law.
Suf. But, in my mind that were no policy:
The king will labour still to save his life;
The commons haply rise to save his life:
As yet we have but trivial argument,
More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.
Suf. Ah! York, no man alive so faire as I.
York. 'Tis York that hath most reason for his death.—
But, my lord cardinal, and you, lord Suffolk,
Say, as you think, and speak it from your souls,
Wer't not all one an empty eagle were set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
As place duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
Suf. Madam, 'tis true: and wer't not madness.

To make the foxsurveyor of the fold?
Who, being accus'd a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly posted over,
Because his purpose is not executed?
No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood,
As Humphrey's prov'd by reasons to my liege.
And do not stand on quillet how to slay him:
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtily
Sleeping, or waking, 't is no matter how,
So he be dead: for that is good deceat
Which makes him first, that first intends deceit.
Q. Mar. Thrice noble Suffolk, resolutely spoke.
Suf. 'Tis not resolute, except so much were done,
For things are often spoke, and seldom meant;
But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,
Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,
Ere you take due order for a priest.
Say, you consent, and censure well the deed,
And I will provide his executioner:
I tender so the safety of my liege.
Suf. Here is my hand; the deed is worthy doing.
Q. Mar. And so say I.
York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
It skills bel not greatly who impugn's his doom.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,
To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword.
Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable.
For, being green, there is great hope of help.
Car. A breath that craves a quick expedient stop,
What shall I give you in this weighty cause?
York. That Somerset of my intent,
'Tis meet that lucky ruler be employ'd; 1

Witness the fortune he hath had in France.
Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,
Had been the regent there instead of me,
He never would have stay'd in France so long.
York. No, to lose it all, as thou hast done.
I rather would have lost my life betimes,
Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
By staying there so long, till all were lost.
Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
Men's flesh preserv'd so whole do seldom win.
Q. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with.—
No more, good York;—sweet Somerset, be still:—
Thy fortune, York, hast thou been regent there,
Might haply have prov'd far worse than his.
York. What, worse than nought? nay, then a shame take all.
Som. And in the number, thee, that wishest shame.
Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected chiefly, from each county some,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?
York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
Suf. Why our authority is his consent,
And what we do establish, he confirms:
Then, noble York, take upon this task in hand.
York. I am content. Provide me soldiers, lords,
While I take order for mine own affairs.
Suf. A charge, lord York, that I will see perform'd.
But now return we to the false duke Humphrey.
Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
That henceforth, he shall trouble us no more:
And so break off; the day is almost spent.
Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.
York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
At Bristol I expect my soldiers,
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.

[Exeunt all but York.

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution;
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying.
Let pale-face'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart.
Faster than spring-tide showers comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity.
My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well; 't is politely done,
To send me packing with an host of men:
I fear me you but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'T was men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet, be well assur'd,
You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
While I in Ireland march'd a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm,
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell;
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.
And, for my Somerset of my intent,
I have seduced a headstrong Kentishman;

KING HENRY VI.

SCENE II. —Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, running over the Stage.

1 Mar. Run to my lord of Suffolk: let him know, We have despatch’d the duke, as he commanded.

2 Mar. O, that it were so! —What have we done? Rist ever a man so penitent?

1 Mar. Here comes my lord. Enter Suffolk.

Suf. Now, sir, have you despatch’d this thing?

1 Mar. Ay, my good lord, he’s dead.

Suf. Why, that’s well said. Go, get you to my house; I will reward you for this venturous deed.

The king and all the peers are here at hand. Hie you laid fair the bed? are all things well, According as I gave directions?

1 Mar. ’Tis, my good lord.

Suf. I say! be gone! [Exit Maurers.] Sound Trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Somerset, Lords and others.

K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight: say, we intend to try his grace to-day, He be guilty, as ’tis published.

Suf. I’ll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit K. Hen. Lorde, take your places; and, I pray you all, Proceed not straiter ’gainst our uncle Gloucester, Than from true evidence, of good esteem, Be approved in practice culpable.

Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail, That faultless may condemn a noble man! By God he may acquit him of suspicion! K. Hen. I thank thee, Meg; these words content me much.—

Re-enter Suffolk.

Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloucester is dead. Q. Mar. Dear, God forfend! Or, God’s secret judgment! —I did dream to-night, The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.

The King swoons.
And would not dash me with their ragged sides,
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
When from the shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm;
And when the dusky sky began to rob
My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck,—
A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
And throw it towards thy land. The sea receiv'd it,
And so I wish'd thy body might my heart:
And even with this I lost fair England's view,
And bade mine eyes be packing with my heart,
And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,
For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue
(The agent of the foul inconstancy)
To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did,
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His father's acts, commen'd in burning Troy?
Am I not witch'd like her, or thou not false like him?
Ah me! I can no more! Die, Margaret,
For I have found that thou dost live so long.
Noise within. Enter Warwick and Salisbury. The Commons press to the door.
War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
That good duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk and the cardinal Beaufort's means.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down,
And care not who they sting in his revenge.
Myself have calm'd their sullen mutiny,
Until they hear the order of his death.
K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true;
But how he died, God knows, not Henry.
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And comment then upon his sudden death.
War. That I shall do, my liege.—Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude, till I return.
[Warwick goes into an inner Room, and Salisbury returns.
K. Hen. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts!
My thoughts that labour to persuade my soul,
Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life.
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God,
For judgment only doth belong to thee.
Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
With twenty thousand kisses, and to rain
Upon his face an ocean of salt tears,
To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling;
But in vain are these mean obsequies,
And to survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?
The Doors of an inner Chamber are thrown open, and Gloster is discovered dead in his Bed; Warwick and others standing by it.
War. Come hither, gracious sovereign; view this body.
K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made;
For with his soul fled all my worldly solace,
And, seeing him, I see my life in death.
War. As surely as my soul intends to live
With that dread King, that took our state upon him
To free us from his Father's wrathful curse,
I do believe that violent hands were laid
Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tense
What instance gives lord Warwick for his vow?
War. See, how the blood is settled in his face.
Of have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ahy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attraets the same for aiding 'gainst the enemy;
Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er return'd
To blush and beautify the cheek again.
But see, his face is black, and full of blood;
His eye-ball farther out than when he liv'd,
Staring full ghastly like a strangled man:
His hair upwards, his nostrils stretch'd with struggle
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd.
And tuggh'd for life, and was by strength subdued.
Look on the sheets his hair, you see, is sticking;
His well-proportion'd beard made rough and ragged,
Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.
It cannot be but he was murder'd here;
The least of all these signs were probable.
Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke's death?
Myself, or Beaufort, had him in protection,
And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.
War. But both of you were vow'd duke Humphrey's foes,
And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep:
't is like, you would not feast him like a friend,
And 't is well seen he found an enemy.
Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these nobles
As guilty of duke Humphrey's timeless death.
War. Who finds the beater dead, and bleeding
And fares fast by a butcher with an axe?
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soars with unbleeded beak?
Even so suspicious is this tragedy.
Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk? where's your knife?
Is Beaufort term'd a kite? where are his talons?
Suf. I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men; But here, but vengeful sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be secured in his rancorous heart,
That slanders me with murder's crimson badge—
Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwickshire,
That I am faulty in duke Humphrey's death.
[Exeunt Cardinal, Sax., and Q. Mar.
War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk
him?
Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious
Nor pease to be an arrogant controller;
Though Suffolk dares him twenty thousand times.
War. Madam, be still, with reverence may I
For every word you speak in his behalf
Is slander to your royal dignity.
Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blamefull bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou
And never of the Nevil's noble race.
War. But that the guilt of murder buckles the
And I should rob the deathman of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
And say, it was thy mother that thou meant'st;
That thou thyself wast born in bastardy;
And, after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell.

Psalm bloodsucker of sleeping men.

Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence.

Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to humblyr's ghost.

[Exeunt SCULFORD and WARWICK.]

K. Hen. What stronger breast-plate than a heart
Untainted?

This is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel.

Where conscience with injustice is corrupted. [A noise
Q. Mar. What noise is this?

[Exeunt SCULFORD and WARWICK, with their Weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn.

Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?—
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?
Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury,
Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Voice of a Crowd within. Re-enter SALISBURY.

Suf. Sirs, stand apart; [Speaking to those within.
the king shall know your mind.—

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
Unless lord Suffolk straight be done to death,
Or banished fair England's territories.

They will by violence tear him from your palace,
And torture him with grievous lingering death.

They say, by him the good duke Humfrye died;
They say, in him they fear your highness' death;
And mere instinct of love, and loyalty,
Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking.

Makes them thus forward in his banishment.
They say, in care of your most royal person,
That, if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge, that no man should disturb your rest,
In pain of your dislike, or pain of death,
Yet notwithstanding such a strait edict,
Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That slyly glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were wake'd;
Lost, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal:
And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, whe'er you will or no,
From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;

With whom envenomed and fatal stings,
Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, my lord of Salisbury!

Suf. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd hinds,
Could send such message to their sovereign;
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To shew how quaint an orator you are:
But all the honour Salisbury hath won,
Is that he was the lord ambassador,
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, or we will all break in!

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thank them for their tender loving care,
And had I not been 'cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;
For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means:
And therefore, by his majesty I swear,
Whose far unworthy deputy I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death. [Exit SA—
Q. Mar. O, King! let me plead for gentle Suffolk.
K. Hen. Ungoent queen, to call him gentle Suffolk
No more, I say: if thou dost plead for him,
Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.

Had I but said, I would have kept my word,
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable.—
If after three days space thou here be'st found
On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.—
Come, Warwick, come; good Warwick, go with me,
I have great need of thee, and am not impatient to thee.

[Exeunt K. Hen., WARWICK, LORDS, &c.

Q. Mar. Mischance, and sorrow, go along with you!

Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,
Be playwrights to keep you company.
There's two of you; the devil make a third,
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these exhortations,
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

Q. Mar. Peace, coward woman, and soft-hearted wretch!

Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan, I
I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
As curt, as harsh, and horrible to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd Envy in her losome cave.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
My hair be fix'd on end, as one distract.
Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:
And even now my burden'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!
Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch, as sharp as lizard's stings!
Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss,
And boding screech owls make the concert full!
All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk: thou torment'st thyself;
And these dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil,
And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where bitting cold would never let grass grow,
And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O! let me entreat thee, cease. Give me thy hand,

1 Company. "They do affirmme that this herb cometh of the seed of some convicted dead men, and also without the death of some strange things, it cannot be drawn out of the earth to man's use. Therefore, they did dye some dogge or other wyrmes beastes unto the wound, with a stone, and digged the earth in compass round about, and in the meanytyme stoppe their own ears for feare of the terrour and cry of this Mandrake, in which cry it doth not only die itselfe, but the thre thereof killeth the dogge or beast which pullets atst of the earth." —Bulletine's "Banquets of Defense against Sickness": folio, 1579; quoted by Reed. * smart : in f. e.
SECOND PART OF

ACT III.

That I may dew it with my mournful tears;
Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woeful monuments.
O! could this kiss be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,
Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee.
So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;
'Tis but surmis'd whilst thou art standing by,
As one that surfeits, thinking on a want.
I will repeal thee, or, be well assur'd,
Adventure to be banished myself;
And banished I am, if but from thee.
Go; speak not to me: even now be gone.—
O! go not yet.—Even thus two friends condemn'd
Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,
Leather a hundred times to part than die.
Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee.

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,
Jocne by the king, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou thence:
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company;
For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every pleasure in the world,
And where thou art not desolation.
I can no more.—Live thou to joy thy life;
Myself to joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pray thee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,
That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;
For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,
That makes him grasp, and stare, and catch the air,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talks as if duke Humphrey's ghost
Were by his side; sometime he calls the king,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his overcharged soul:
And I am sent to tell his majesty.
That even now he cries aloud for him.

Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exit VAUX.

Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?
But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,
Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?
Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,
And with the southern clouds contend in tears?
Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows.
Now, get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is coming:
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live;
And in thy sight to die, were it else,
But like a pleasant sluimer in thy lap?
Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips;
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth:

So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death.
O! let me stay, beaufal what may befal.

Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful com-

It is applied to a deathful wound.
To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from thee
For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.

Suf. I go.

Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woefulst casket
That ever did contain a thing of worth.
Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we:
This way fall to death.

Q. Mar. This way for me.

[Exeunt, severally.

SCENE III.—London. Cardinal Beaufort's bed chamber.

Enter King Henry, Salisbury, Warwick, and others.

The Cardinal in bed; Attendants with him.

Car. If thou be'st at death, I'll give thee England's treasure,
Enough to purchase such another island,
So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.

K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
Where death's approach is seen so terrible!
War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.
Car. Bring me unto my trias when you will.
Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
Can I make men live, wher they will or no?
O! torture me no more, I will consent.
Alive again? then show me where he is:
I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.
Comb down his hair: look! look! it stands upright.
Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.
Give me some drink; and bid the apotheary
Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
K. Hen. O, thou eternal mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!
O! beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair.
War. See, how the pangs of death do make him quail.
Sal. Disturb him not; let him pass peaceably.
K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure
Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss.
Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—Car dies.
He dies, and makes no sign.—O God, forgive him.
War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.
K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all.
Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close,
And let us all to meditation.

[Exeunt.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Kent. The Sea-shore near Dover.

Firing heard at Sea. Then enter from a Boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's-Mate, Walter Whitmore, and others; with them Suffolk, disguised; and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day is crept into the bosom of the sea, and now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades that drag the tragic melancholy night; who with their drowzy, slow, and flagging wings climb dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws breathe foul conglobate darkness in the air. Therefore, bring forth the soldiers of our prize; for whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs, here shall they make their ransom on the sand, or with their blood stain this distant shore. Master, this prisoner freely give I thee;—And, thou that art his mate, make boot of this;—The other, [Pointing to Suffolk,] Walter Whitmore, is thy share.

1 Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know.

Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.

Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours.

Cap. What! think you much to pay two thousand crowns, and bear the name and port of gentlemen?—Cut both the villains' throats!—for die you shall: Can't lives of those which we have lost in sight, Bootstrap with such a petty sum?—

1 Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life.

2 Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight. Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard, and, therefore, to revenge it shall thou die; [To Sue. And so should these, if I might have my will.

Cap. Be not so rash: take ransom; let him live.

Sue. Look on my George: I am a gentleman. Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

Whit. And so am I; my name is Walter Whitmore.

A cunning man did manufacture my birth, and told me that by water I should die: Yet let not this make thee be bloody minded; Thy name is Gaultier, being rightly sounded. Whit. Gaultier, or Walter, which it is, I care not; Never yet did base dishonesty blur our name, But with our sword we whip'd away the blot: Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge, Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defaced, And I proclaim'd a coward through the world! [Lay hold on Suffolk.

Sue. Stay, Whitmore: for thy prisoner is a prince, The duke of Suffolk, William de la Poole.

Whit. The duke of Suffolk muffled up in rags! Sue. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke: Jove sometime-was disguis'd, and why not I?

Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt see.

Sue. O, O, but to see King Henry's blood, The honourable blood of Lancaster, Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Haste thou not kisst' thy hand, and held my stirrup?

Baro-headed plodded by my foot-cloth mule, And thought thee happy when I shook my head? How often hast thou waited at my cup? Fed from my treacher, kneel'd down at the board, When I have feasted with queen Margaret? Remember it, and let it make thee cease-fall'n; Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood, And duly waited for my coming forth. This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf, And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue. Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the foul-tongued slave?

Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me. Sue. Base slave, thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long boat's side Strike off his head.

Sue. Thou dar'st not for thy own.

Cap. Yes, Poole.

Sue. Poole?

Cap. Poole, Sir Poole, lord? Ay, kennel, puddle, sink: whose filth and dirt Troubles the silver spring where England drinks. Now, will I dam up this thy yawning mouth, For swallowing the treasure of the realm: Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground; And thou, that smil'st at good duke Humphrey's death, Against the senseless winds shalt grin in vain, Who in contempt shall hiss at thee again: And wedded be thou to the hags of hell, For daring to affy a mighty lord Unto the daughter of a worthless king, Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem By devilish policy art thou grown great, And, like ambitious Sylla, overgord With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France: The false revolting Normans thorough thee Diastain to call us lord; and Picardy Hath slain their governors, surprise'd our forts, And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home. The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all, Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain, As hating thee, are rising up in arms: And now the house of York—thrust from the crown, By shameful murder of a guileless king, And lofty, proud, encroaching tyranny,— Burns with revenging fire: whose hopeful colours Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine: Under the which is writ—Invictus nubibus. The commons, here in Kent, are up in arms; And to conclude, reproach, and beggary, Are crept into the palace of our king, And all by thee. Away!—Convey him hence.

Sue. O, that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges! Small things make base men proud: this villain, here. Being captain of a pinnace, threatens more Than Bargulus the strong Ilyrian pirate.

Drones such not eagles' blood, but rob bee-hives. It is impossible, that I should die By such a lowly vessel as thyself. Thy words move rage, and not remorse, in me:

1 Embrace. 2 The: in f. o. 4 This line, not in the folio, is from the old play of the "Contention." 4 the forlorn swains: in f. o. 6 He works and the following Poole, are from the "Contention." 6 The device of Edward III., "the rays of the sun dispersing themselves out of a cloud." —Camden. 7 Bargulus, Ilyrian pirate.—Cicenianus Offic. Lib. III. f. 12.
i go of message from the queen to France;
I charge thee, wait me safely cross the channel.
Cap. Walter!—
Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must wait thee to thy death.
Suf. Pénis gelidus timor occupat artus:—it is thee I fear.
[thee.
Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear before I leave
What! are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?
1 Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him; speak him fair.
Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour.
Far be it we should honour such as these
With humble suit: no, rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;
And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,
Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar grooms.
True nobility is exempt from fear:
More can I bear, than you dare execute.
Cap. Hail he away, and let him talk no more.
Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can,
That this my death may never be forgot.—
Great men oft die by vile bezonians:—
A Roman swordier and banditto slave,
Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard hand
Stabb'd Julius Caesar; savage islanders
Pompey the great, and Suffolk dies by pirates.
[Exit Suf., with Whit., and others.
Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart:
Therefore, come you with us, and let him go.
[Exeunt all but the first Gentleman.
Re-enter Whitmore, with Suffolk's body.
Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen, his mistress, bury it.
[Exit.
1 Gent. O. barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king:
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.
[Exit, with the Body.

SCENE II.—Blackheath.
Enter GEORGE BEVIS and JOHN HOLLAND.
Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath: they have been up these two days.
John. They have the more need to sleep now then.
Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade, the clothes, means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.
John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentle men came up.
Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicrafts-men.
John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.
Geo. Nay more; the king's council are no good work men.
John. True; and yet it is said,—labour in thy voca tion: which is as much as to say,—let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magis trates.
Geo. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.
John. I see them! I see them! There's Beest's son,
the Tanner of Wingham.
Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies to make dog's leather of.
John. And Dick, the butcher.

Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and ini quity's throat cut like a calf.
John. And Smith, the weaver.
Geo. Argo. their thread of life is spun.
John. Come, come; let's fall in with them.
Drum. Enter Cade, Dick the Butcher, Smith the Weaver, and others in great number.
Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our suppos ter father,—
Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade's of herrings.
Cade. — For our enemies shall fall before us, is spired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes —Command silence.
Dick. Silence!
Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—
Dick. He was an honest man and a good bricklayer.
Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—
Dick. I knew her well; she was a midwife.
Cade. My wife descended of the Laces,— Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter; and not many laces.
Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with buried pack, she washes bicks here at home.
Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.
Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable, as there was he born under a hedge; for his father never a house, but the cage.
Cade. Valiant I am.
Smith. A must needs, for beggary is valiant.
Cade. I am able to endure much.
Dick. No question of that, for I have been him whipped three market days together.
Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.
Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is proof.
Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of being burnt the hand for stealing of sheep.
Cade. Be brave then; for your captain is brave at vows reformation. There shall be in England half-penny loaves sold for a penny: the threehobbed pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it drink small beer. All the realm shall be in con sue and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go 'o grass.
And when I am king, (as king I will be)—
All. God save your majesty!
Cade. I thank you, good people:—if ere shall be money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and will apparel them all in one livery, that they set agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.
Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawmen.
Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamens able thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled
'or, should undo a man? Some say, the bee sung but I say, 'tis the bee's wax, for I did but seal once a thing, and I was never mine own man since. He now! who's there?
Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.
Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write as read, and cast account.
Cade. O monstrous!
Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.
Cade. Here's a villain!
Smith. H's a book in his pocket, with red letters in Cade. Nay then, he is a conjurer.
Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court hand.

1 A term of contempt. 2 with infinite numbers: in folio. 3 Latin, cadus, a cloak. 4 Not in F.a.
KING HENRY VI.

Scene IV.

Code. I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, a mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not

* Clerk. * Emmanuel.

Code. Th' use you to write it on the top of letters. —

*T' will go hard with you.

Code. Let me alone. — Doest thou use to write thine name, or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plan-dealing man?

* Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain, and a traitor.

Code. Away with him, I say! hang him with his pr and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exeunt some with the Clerk.

Enter Michael.

Mick. Where's our general?

* Code. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mick. Fly, fly, fly! sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

* Code. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.

He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself; he is but a knight, is 'a?

Mick. No.

Code. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently. [Kneels.] — Rise up sir John Mortimer.

Rise! Now have at him.

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and William his Brother, with Drum and Forces.

Staff. Rebellious hind, the filth and scorn of Kent,

Mark'd for the gallows, lay your weapons down:

Home to your cottages, forsake this gown.

The king is merciful, if you revolt.

W. Staff. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to blood,

If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.

Code. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass* not;

It is to you, good people, that I speak,

Or whom in time to come I hope to reign;

For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staff. Villain! thy father was a platterer;

And thou thyself a shearmen, art thou not?

Code. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staff. And what of that?

Code. Marry, this: — Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,

Married the duke of Clarence's daughter, did he not?

A. Staff. Ay, sir.

Code. By her he had two children at one birth.

W. Staff. That's false.

Code. Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 't is true.

The elder of them, being put to nurse,

Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away;

And, ignorant of his birth and parentage,

Became a bricklayer when he came to age.

His son am I: deny it, if you can.

Dick. Nay, 't is too true; therefore, he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house,

And the bricks are alive at this day to testify it: therefore, deny it not.

Staff. And will you credit this base drudge's words,

That says he knows not what?

* All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore, get ye gone.

W. Staff. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you this.

Code. He lies, for I invented it myself. [Aside.]

So to, sirrah: tell the king from me, that for his father's sake, Henry the fifth, in whose time boys went

*Not in f. a. *Curs. *Butchers were only allowed to kill in Lent, by special license. * *Not in f. a. to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the lord Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

Code. And good reason; for thereby is England measured, and if he goes to war with a staff, but that my pains-sword holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you that that lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch; and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.

Staff. O, gross and miserable ignorance!

Code. Nay, answer, if you can: the Frenchmen are our enemies: go to, then, I ask but this; can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy be a good counsellor, or no?

*All. No, no: and therefore we'll have his head.

W. Staff. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail,

Assail them with the army of the king.

Staff. Herald, away; and, throughout every town,

Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;

That those which fly before the battle ends,

May, even in their wives' and children's sight,

Be hang'd up for example at their doors. —

All you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exeunt the two Stafford's and Forces.

Code. And you, that love the commons, follow me.—

Now show yourselves men; 't is for liberty.

We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:

Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon,

For they are thristy honest men, and such.

As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

Code. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come: march! forward! [Exeunt.

Scene III. — Another Part of Blackheath.

Alarums. The two Parties enter, and fight, and both the Staffords are slain.

Code. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Code. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen,

And thou behavest thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore, thus will I reward thee. — The Lent shall be as long again as it is;

and thou shalt have a license* to kill for a hundred years, lacking one.

Dick. I desire no more.

Code. And, to speak the truth, thou deservest no less.

This monument of the victory will I bear; [Putting on Stafford's armour,*] and the bodies shall be dragged at my horses' heels, till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the jails, and let out the prisoners.

Code. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come; let's march towards London. [Exeunt.

Scene IV. — London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, reading a Supplication; the Duke of Buckingham, and Lord Say with him: at a distance;

Queen Margaret mourning over Suffolk's Head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard that grief softens the mind,

[Aside.* And makes it fearful and degenerate;

Think, therefore, on revenge, and cease to weep.

But who can cease to weep, and look on this?

Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast;

But where's the body that I should embrace?
Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supposition?

K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat;
For God forbid, so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword! And I myself, Rain scholars, lawyers, gentlemen, cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade their general. —
But stay, I'll read it over once again.

Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Ru'd like a wandering planet over me,
And could it not enforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same?

K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have his head.

Say. Ay, but I hope, your highness shall have his.

K. Hen. How now, madam!
Lamenting still, and mourning Suffolk's death?
I fear me, love, if that I had been dead,
Thou wouldest not have mourn'd so much for me.

Q. Mar. No, my love; I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

in such haste?

Mess. The rebels are in Southwark: fly, my lord! Jack Cade proclaims himself lord Mortimer,
Descended from the duke of Clarence's house,
And calls your grace usurper openly,
And vows to crown himself in Westminster.
His army is a ragged multitude
Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death
Hath given them heart and courage to proceed.
All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call false catapillars, and intend their death.

K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenilworth,
Until a power be rais'd to put them down.

Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive,
These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.

K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with us to Kenilworth.
Say. So might your grace's person be in danger.
The sight of me is odious in their eyes;
And therefore in this city will I stay,
And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bridge: the Fly and forskate their houses.

[Citizens. The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor: and they jointly swear,
To spoil the city, and your royal court.

Buck. Then linger not, my lord: away, take horse.

K. Hen. Come, Margaret: God, our hope, will succour us.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd.

K. Hen. Farewell, my lord; [To Lord Say.] trust not the Kentish rebels.

Buck. Trust no body, for fear you be betray'd.

Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Tower.

Enter Lord Scales, and others, walking on the Walls.
Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?

1 Not in f.a. * Foles: Killingworth; the old pronunciation of the name. * Farewell, for I must haste again: in f.a. * A far or one-fifteenth

1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them. The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command,
But I am troubled here with them myself:
The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And hither I will send you Matthew Gough.
Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;
And so farewell: rebellion never thrives.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. Cannon Street.

Enter Jack Cade, and his Followers. He strikes his Staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, seated on London-stone, I charge and command, that, of the city's cost, the passing-conduit run noth ing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And no, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade! [They kill him.]

Cade. Knew him down there. [They kill him.]

Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more: I think, he hath a very fair warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them. But, first, go and set London-bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same. Smithfield.

Alarum. Enter, on one side, Cade and his Company:
on the other, the Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by Matthew Gough. They fight: the Citizens are routed, and Matthew Gough is slain.

Cade. So, sirs.—Now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court: down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Mass, 'twill be sore law, then; for he will thrust in the mouth with a spear, and it is not whole yet.

[Aside.

Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.

[Aside.

Cade. I have thought upon it; it shall be so. Away, burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out.

[Aside.

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the lord Say, which sold the towns in France; he that made us pay one and twenty fifteens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy by law.

Enter George Bevis, with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times. —Ah, thou say, thou serje, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto monsieur Basimeau, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presents, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the becorn that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the path of the realm in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before, our fore-fathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thee, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb, and such abominable words as Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before thee on matters they were not able to answer; moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them: when, indeed, for that cause they have been most worthy of life. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not? Say, Why is that? —
KING HENRY VI.

Scene VIII.

Code. Nay, he neols at us; as who should say, I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand steadfast on a pole, or no. Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me, wherein have I offended most? Have I affected wealth, or honour; speak? Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold? Is my apparel sumptuous to behold? Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death? These hands are free from guiltless blood-sounding, This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts. O, let me live.

Code. I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll bridle it; he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life.—Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue: he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your prayers, God shall be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls? And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Code. Away with him, and do as I command ye. [Exeunt some with Lord Say.]

The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute: there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead, ere they have it. Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills? —

Code. Marry, presently.

All. O brave! Re-enter Rebels, with the Heads of Lord Say and his Son-in-law.

Code. But is not this braver?—Let them kiss one another, for they loved well, when they were alive. [Jest them together.] Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night; for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets: and at every corner have them kiss. —Away! —

[Exeunt.]

Scene VIII.—Southwark.

Alarum. Enter Code, and all his Rabblemont.

Code. Up Fish-street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames! —[A Parley sounded, then a Retreat.] What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill? Enter Buckingham, and Old Clifford, with Forces.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare, and will disturb thee;

Know, Code, we come ambassadors from the king Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here pronounce free pardon to them all, That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Cleft. What say ye, countrymen? will ye repent? And yield to mercy, whilst it is offer'd you, Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths? Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon, Fling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty! Who hateth him, and honours not his father,
SECOND PART OF

ACT IV.

Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What! Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London Gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recovered your ancient freedom; but you are all recreants, and dustards, and make right to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break by your houses with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces. For me,—I will make shift for one; and so—God's curse 'light upon you all!

All. We'll follow Cade: we'll follow Cade.

Cliff. In Cade the son of Henry the fifth,
That thus you do exclaim, you'll go with him?
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meanest of you earls and dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to;
Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoyl,
Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.
Wer't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar,
The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you?
Methinks, already, in this civil broil,
I see them lording it in London streets,
Crying—Villagers! unto all they meet.

Better ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry,
Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy.
To France, to France! and get what you have lost:
Spare England, for it is your native coast.
Henry hath money, you are strong and manly:
God on our side, doubt not of victory.

All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king,
And Clifford.

Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro, as this multitude? the name of Henry the fifth hales them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me alone. I see them lay their heads together, to surprise me: my sword, make way for me, for here is no staying.—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you; and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels.

[Exit.

Buck. What! is he fled? go some, and follow him;
And he, that brings his head unto the king,
Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.

[Exit some of them.

Follow me, soldiers: we'll devise a mean
To reconcile you all unto the king.

[Exit.

SCENE IX.—Kenilworth Castle.

Sound trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and Somerset, on the Terrace of the Castle.

K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne,
And could command no more content than I?
No sooner was I crest out of my cradle,
But I was made a king, at nine months old:
Was never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buck. Health, and glad tidings, to your majesty!

K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor, Cade, surpris'd?

Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter, below, a number of Cade's Followers, with Haliers about their Necks.

Cliff. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom, of life, or death.

K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gate
To entertain my vows of thanks and praise!—
Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
And show'd how well you love your prince and country.
Continue still in this so good a mind,
And Henry, though he be unfortunate,
Assure yourselves, will never be unkind:
And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,
I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Please it your grace to be advertis'd.
The duke of York is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant, and united power Of Gallowsglass, and stout Irish kernes, Is marching hitherward in proud array;
And still doth proclaimeth, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee.
The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and Ye distress'd,
Like to a ship, that, having scap'd a tempest,
Is straightway calm'd, and boarded with a pirate.

But now is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd,
And now is York in arms to second him.—
I pray thee, Buckingham, then go and meet him,
And ask him, what's the reason of these arms?
Tell him, I'll send duke Edmund to the tower;—
And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

Som. My lord,
I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms.
For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.

Buck. I will my lord; and doubt not so to do.
As all things shall be redound unto your good.

K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better;
For yet may England curse my wretched reign. [Exeunt,

SCENE X.—Kent. Ides' Garden.

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself: that haughty word, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I bid me in these woods, and durst not peep on for all the country is laid for me; but now am I hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, o a brick-wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And, I think, this word sallet was born to do good: for, many a time, but for a sallet, my brain's had been left with a brown hill; and, many a time when I have been dry and bravely marching, it has served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and as the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter Ides, with Servants.

Iden. Lord! who would have turmoil'd in the cow
And may enjoy such quiet walks as these? This small inheritance, my father left me,
Cælenthe me, and 's worth a monarchy.
Seek not to war great by others' waning,
Gather wealth I care not with what envy:
I meant that I have maintains a state,
And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me,
A stry, for entering his fee-simple without leave.
I avail! thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand
Heads of the king by carrying his head to him; but I will make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my Sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

I. Why, rude companion, whatsoe'er thou be,
Know thee not; why should I betray thee?
't be not enough, to break into my garden,
And like a thief to come rob my grounds,
Limbing my walls in spite of me, the owner,
But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that ever
Broached, and heard thee too. Look on me well:
I have no meat these five days; yet, come thou and
By the men, and if I do not leave you all as dead
As a door-nail, I pray God I may never eat grass more.

I. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England stands,
That Alexander Ideon, squier of Kent,
Look odds to contend a poor fainch'd man.

Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion
That ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut
Not out the burly-boned clown in chines of beef ere Thee sleep in thy sheth, I beseech you on my knees,
Thou mayest be turned to hobnails. [They fight. Cade falls.]

I. O! I am slain. Famine, and no other, hath Slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me,
And give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd Defy them all, Withir, garden; and be henceforth
A burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

I. Is 't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

I. Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead:
Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
To embaze the honour that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory.
Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and Exhorts all the world to be cowards; for I, that never Feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour.

[Dies.]

I. How much thou wrong'st me, heaven be my Judge.

Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare thee!

And as I thrust thy body with my sword,
So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.

I. Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,
And there out of thy most ungracious head;
Which I will bear in triumph to the king,
Leaving thy trunk for cows to feed upon.

[Exit, dragging out the Body.]

ACT V.

CENE I.—The Same. The Fields between Dartford
And Blackheath.

In King's Camp on one side: on the other, enter York attended, with Drum and Colours; his Irish Forces at some distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right,
And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
In bells, aloud: burn, bonfires, clear and bright,
A entertain great England's lawful king.

A strange majesties! who would not buy thee dear?
On them obey, that know not how to rule;
His hand was made to handle nought but gold;
Can give due answer to my words,
Swerp a sword, or sceptre, balance it.
Sceptre shall it have, have I a soul,
Which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

York. Have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?
A king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee
well.

York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.

Thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,
Know the reason of these arms in peace;
Why, thou—being a subject as I am,—

[Exit; the correction was made by Pope.]
And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love;
I'll send them all, as willing as I live:
Lands, goods, horse, armour, any thing I have
Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:
We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King Henry attended.

K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?
York. In all submission and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness.
K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring?
York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence;
And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfitted.

Enter Iden, with Cade's Head.

Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,
May pass into the presence of a king,
Lo! I present your grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Hen. The head of Cade?—Great God, how just art thou!—
O! let me view his visage being dead,
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.
K. Hen. How art thou call'd, and what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 't were not amiss,
He were created knight for his good service.

K. Hen. Iden, kneel down: [He kneels.] Rise up a knight.
We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.
Iden. May I den live to merit such a bounty, [Rising.
And never live but true unto his liege.

K. Hen. Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen:
Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter Queen Margaret and Somerset.

Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
York. How now! is Somerset at liberty?
Then, York, unleash thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—
False king, why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;
Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.
That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a Palmer's staff,
And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
That gold must round engraft those brows of mine;
Whose crowns and browns, like to Achilles' spear,
Is able with the change to kill and cure.
Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
And with the same to act controlling laws.
Give place: by heaven, thou shalt rule no more
O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,

Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown.
Obey, audacious traitor: kneel for grace.
York. Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask these,
If they can brook I bow a knee to man?
SIRRAH, call in my sons to be my bail!

[Exit an Addenda

I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.
Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come among us.
To say, if that the bastard boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.
York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,
Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourgis,
The sons of York, thy betteries in their birth,
Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those
That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter Edward and Richard Plantagenet, with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces as old Clifford and his Son.

See where they come: I'll warrant they'll make good.
Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.
Cliff. Health and all happiness to my lord the king!

York. I thank thee, Clifford: say, what news with thee?
Nay, do not fright us with an angry look:
We are thy sovereign, Clifford; kneel again;
For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.
Cliff. This is my king, York: I do not mistake;
But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do.—
To bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?
K. Hen. Ay, Clifford: a bedlam and ambitious humour
Makes him oppose himself against his king.
Cliff. He is a traitor: let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his.
Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;
His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.
York. Will you not, sons?—
Edw. Ay, noble fathers, if our words will serve.
Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons.
Cliff. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here
York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.—
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
That with the very shaking of their chains
They may astonish these fell-looking cubs:
Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drums. Enter Warwick and Salisbury, with Force.
Cliff. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death.

And massacre the bear-ward in their chains,
If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.
Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld;
Who, having't suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs, and cry'd:
And such a piece of service will you do,
If you oppose yourselves to match lord Warwick.
Cliff. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indignated lump.
As crooked as thy manners are thy shape!
York. Nay, we shall beat you thoroughly anon.
Cliff. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn your selves.

K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot bow?—
Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,
KING HENRY VI.

SCENE II.

Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!—
What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,
And thus sorrow with thy spectacles?
O! where is faith? O! where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?—
Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honourable age with blood?
What art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,
That bows unto the grave with mickle age.
Sul. My lord, I have consider'd with myself
The title of this most renowned duke;
And in my conscience do repute his grace
The richful heir to England's royal seat.

K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
Sul. I have.

K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?
Sul. It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound in such a vow now
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotted virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no reason for this wrong, but that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Q. Mtr. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.
York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
Ams resolv'd for death, or dignity.

Clif. There is no warrant there, if dreams prove true.
War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm,
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I will write upon thy burgonet,
Dight I but know thee by thy household badge.

War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevill's crest,
A rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,
As on a mountains-top the cedar shows,
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

Clif. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy beard,
And tread it underfoot with all contempt,
Despite the bearward that protects the bear
Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,
'Q ellel the rebels, and their complices

Rick. Fie! charity! for shame! speak not in spite,
Or you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night.

Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you 'll surely sup in hell.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE II.—Saint Albans.

Actiums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Clifford of Cumberland! 'tis Warwick calls:
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
You shall not hear the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead men's ores do fill the empty air,
'Lossford, I say, come forth and fight with me!
'Round northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is houseto calling thee to arms.

Enter York.

Now, now, my noble lord! what all a-foot?—

York. The deadly-handed Clifford slow my steed;
But match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
York. Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other choice,
For I myself must hunt this deer to death.
War. Then, nobly, York: 'twas for a crown thou
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day, [fighting.
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.

Exit Warwick.

Clif. What seem'st thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?
York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.
Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,
But that 'tis shown ignobly, and in treason.
York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
As I in justice and true right express it.
Clif. My soul and body on the action both!—
York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly
Clif. La fin courrouces les autres.
[They fight, and Clifford falls and dies.
York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.
Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will! [Exit.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout:
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war! thou son of hell,
Whom angry heaven do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly:
He that is truly dedicate to war,
Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour.—O! let the vile world end,
[Seeing his Father's body.
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together!
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particulars and petty sounds
To cease!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
The silver livery of advised age,
And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus
To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight,
My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stone. York not our old men spare;
No more will I their babes: tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft proclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flux.
Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
Meet I an infant of the house of York,
Into as many goblets will I cut it,
As wild Medea young Abayrtus did:
In cruelty will I seek out my fame.
Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house;

Taking up the Body
As did Aeneas old Anchises bear,
So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then, Aeneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit

Enter Richard Plantagenet and Somerset, fighting

Somerset is slain.

Rich. So, lie thou there;—
For, underneath an althouse' paltry sign,
The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset.
Hath made the wizard famous in his death.
Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter King HENRY, Queen MARGARET, and others, flying.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow: for shame,
away!

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.

Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll nor fight,
nor fly:
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way; and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes; but if we haply escape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get; where you are lov'd,
And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
But fly you must: uncurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present friends.¹
Away, for your relief; and we will live
To see their day, and them our fortune give.
Away, my lord, away!

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Albans.

Alarum: Retreat. Flourish; then enter YORK, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, WARWICK, and Soldiers, with Drums and Colours.

York. Odf Salisbury, who can report of him?

THIRD PART OF
KING HENRY VI.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

KING HENRY THE SIXTH.
Edward, Prince of Wales, his Son.
Edward XI., King of France.
Duke of Somerset,
Duke of Exeter,
Earl of Oxford,
Earl of Northumberland,
Earl of Westmoreland,
Lord Clifford,
Edward, Earl of March, afterwards King Edward IV.,
Edmund, Earl of Rutland,
George, afterwards Duke of Clarence,
Richard, afterwards Duke of Gloucester,
Duke of Norfolk,
Marquess of Montague,
Earl of Warwick,
Earl of Pembroke,
Lord Hastings,
Lord Stafford.

Henry, Earl of Richmond, a Youth.
Queen Margaret.
Lady Grey, afterwards Queen to Edward IV.
Bona, Sister to the French Queen.

Soldiers, and other Attendants on King Henry and King Edward, Messengers, Watchmen, &c.

SCENE, during part of the Third Act, in France; during the rest of the Play in England.

ACT I.

War. I wonder how the king escap'd our hands.

York. While we pursued the horsemen of the north, lo stily stole away, and left his men:

Edw. The great lord of Northumberland, whose warlike ears could never brook retreat, cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself, Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all abreast, cheer'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in, were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham, either slain, or wounded dangerously. [Showing his bloody Sword.

Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood. [To York, showing his.

Thorn I encounter'd as the battles joined.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.
[Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's Head.

York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons. But is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt! Rich. Thus do I hope to shake king Henry's head.

War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York,

Rich. Before I see thee seated in that throne,

Norf. This is the palace of the fearful king,

Rich. For this is thine, and not king Henry's heirs'.

York. Assist me, then, sweet Warwick, and I will;

War. For hither we have broken in by force.

Norf. We'll all assist you: be, that dies, shall die.

York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk.—Stay by me, my lords:

And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence,

Unless he seek to thrust you out by force. [They retire.

York. The queen this day here holds her parliament,

But little thinks we shall be of her council.

By words or blows here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd;

Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king,

And bashful Henry depose'd, whose cowardice Hath made us by-words to our enemies.
York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute, I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best, The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dares stir a wing if Warwick shake his bells.¹ I’ll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares.— Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.

[WARWICK LEADS YORK TO THE THRONE, WHO SOUTHS HIMSELF.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Exeter, and others, with red Ros. in their Hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits, Even in the chair of state! belike, he means, Back’d by the power of Warwick, that false peer, To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.— Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;— And thine, lord Clifford: you have vow’d revenge
On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

North. If I be not, heavens be reveng’d on me! Clifford. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

West. What! shall we suffer this? let’s pluck him down:
My heart for anger burns: I cannot brook it.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.

Cliff. Patience is for poltroons, such as he:
He durst not sit there had your father liv’d.
My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be it so.

K. Hen. Ah! know you not, the city favours them, And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Exe. But when the duke is slain, they’ll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry’s heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house! Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,
Shall be the war that Henry means to use.

[They advance to the Duke.

Then factious duke of York, descend my throne, And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet: I am thy sovereign—

York. I am thine.

Exe. For shame! come down: he made thee duke of York.

York. ’Tis my inheritance, as the earldom² was.

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown

In following this usurping Henry.

Cliff. Whom should he follow, but his natural king?

War. True, Clifford; that is Richard, duke of York.

K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

York. It must and shall be so. Content thyself.

War. Be duke of Lancaster: let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster; And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget, That we are those which chas’d you from the field, And slew your fathers, and with colours spread March’d through the city to the palace gates.

North. Yet, Warwick, I remember it to my grief; And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons, Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I’ll have more lives, Than drops of blood were in my father’s veins.

Cliff. Urge it no more; lest that instead of words I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger, As shall revenge his death before I stir.

War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats.

York. Will you, we show our title to the crown? If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown? Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York; Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March. I am the son of Henry the fifth, Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop, And set him upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.

K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I:
When I was crown’d, I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks you lose.

Father, bear the crown from the usurper’s head.

Ede. Sweet father, do so: set it on your head.

Mont. Good brother, [To York,] as thou lovest honour’s arms,

War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him, lords And be you silent and attentive too,
For he that interrupts him shall not live.

K. Hen. Think’st thou, that I will leave my king’s throne,
Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?
No: first shall war unpeople this my realm; Ay, and their colours—often borne in France, And now in England, to our heart’s great sorrow.— Shall be my winding sheet.—Why faint you, lords? My title’s good, and better far than his.

War. Prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Hen. Henry the fourth by conquest got his crown.

York. ’Tis was by rebellion against his king.

K. Hen. No; know not what to say: my title’s good.

[Aside. Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

York. What then?

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king; For Richard, in the view of many lords, Resign’d the crown to Henry the fourth, Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

York. He rose against him, being his sovereign. And made him to resign his crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstraining. Think you, ’twere prejudicial to his crown?

Exe. No: for he could not so resign his crown, But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?

Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer me. My conscience tells me he is lawful king. K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou layst. Think not, that Henry shall be so depos’d.

War. Done; he shall be in despite of all.

North. Thou art deceiv’d: ’tis not thy south’s power.

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent, Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud, Can set the duke up in despite of me.

Cliff. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong, Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:

¹ An allusion to the falcon. ² The "True Tragedy of Richard, Duke of York," the old play on which this drama was founded.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I should kneel to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!
York. Henry of Lancaster, resign my crown.—
What manner you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely duke of York,
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And, o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.

[He stamps, and the Soldiers show themselves.]

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word.
Let me for this my life-time reign as king.
York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou liv'st.
K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England, and to himself?
West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!
Clif. How hast thou injuri'd both thyself and us!
York. I cannot stay to hear these articles.
North. Nor I.
Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,
In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.
North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in bands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome,
Or live in peace, abandon'd and despis'd!

[Exeunt Northumberland, Clifford, and Westmoreland.]

War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.
Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not yield.
K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!
War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my son,
Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.
But be it as it may, I here entreat
The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever; [To York.
Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and whilst I live,
To honour me as thy king and sovereign;
And, either by treason, nor hostility,
To seek to put me down and reign thyself.
York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.

[Coming from the Throne.]

War. Long live king Henry!—Plantagenet, embrace him.
K. Hen. And long live thou, and those thy forward sons!
York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.
Exe. Accurs'd be he, that seeks to make them foes!
[Exeunt The Lords come forward.
York. Farewell, my gracious lord: I'll to my castle.
War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers.
Norf. And I to Norfolk with my followers.
Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.
[Exeunt York, and his Sons, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, Soldiers, and Attendants.

K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.
Enter Queen Margaret and the Prince of Wales.
Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger;
I'll steal away.

Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me; I will follow thee.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.
Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremities?
Ah, wretched man! would I had died a maid.

And never seen thee, never borne thee son,
Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father!
Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus?
Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I,
Or felt that pain which I did for him once,
Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood,
Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,
Rather than have made that savage duke thine heir,
And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me.
If you be king, why should not I succeed?
K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son.
The earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforce'd me.
Q. Mar. Enforce thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd?
I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!
Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me,
And given unto the house of York such head,
As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.
'T is well entailing his heirs unto the crown,
And what is this, but to make thy sepulchre,
And creep into it far before thy time?
Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calais;
Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas;
The duke is made protector of the realm;
And yet shalt thou be safe? such safety finds
The trembling lamb, environ'd with wolves.
Had I been there, which am a silly woman,
The soldiers should have tossed me on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act;
But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour:
And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself,
Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,
Until that act of parliament be repeal'd,
Whereby my son is disinherited.

The northern lords, that have forewarn'd thy colours,
Will follow mine, if once they see them spread;
And spread they shall be, to thy foul disgrace,
And utter ruin of the house of York.
Thus do I leave thee. Come, son, let's away:
Our army is ready: come, we'll after them.
K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.
K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?
Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.
Prince. When I return with victory from the field,
I'll see your grace; till then, I'll follow her.
Q. Mar. Come, son; away! we may not linger thus.

[Exeunt Queen Margaret, and the Prince.
K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son,
Hath made her break out into terms of rage.
Revenge'd may she be on that hateful duke,
Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,
Will o'er my crown, and like an empty eagle
Tire* on the flesh of me, and of my son!
The loss of those three lords torments my heart:
I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair.—
Come, cousin; you shall be the messenger.
Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield.

Enter Edward, Richard, and Montague.
Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave
Edw. No; I can better play the orator.
Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter York.
York. Why, how now, sons, and brother! at a strafe?
What is your quarrel? how began it first?
Edu. No quarrel, but a slight contention.
York. About what?
Rich. About that which concerns you: grace, and us;
The crown of England, father, which is yours.
Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.
Edu. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:
By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.
York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.
Edu. But for a kingdom any oath may be broken:
I would break a thousand oaths to reign one year.
Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn.
York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.
Rich: I’ll prove the contrary, if you ‘ll hear me speak.
York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.
Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took
Before a true and lawful magistrate.
That hath authority over him that swears:
Henry had none, but did usurp the place;
Then saw he the grace that made you to depose,
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.
Therefore, to arms! And, father, do but think,
How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown,
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.
Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,
Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed
Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry’s heart.
York. Richard, enough: I will be king, or die.—
Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
And what on Warwick to this enterprise.—
Thou, Richard, shalt to the duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.—
You, Edward, shall unto my lord Cobham,
Whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise:
In them I trust; for they are soldiers,
Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—
While you are thus employ’d, what resteth more,
But that I seek occasion how to rise,
And yet the king not privy to my drift,
Nor any of the house of Lancaster?
Enter a Messenger.
But, stay.—What news? Why com’st thou in such post?
Mess. The queen, with all the northern earls and lords,
Intends here to besiege you in your castle.
She is hard by with twenty thousand men,
And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.
York. Ay, with my sword. What, think’st thou then,
that we fear them?—
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;
My brother Montague shall post to London.
Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we have left protectors of the king,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.
Mont. Brother, I go; I’ll win them, fear it not:
And thus most humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.
Enter Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.
York. Sir John, and sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncle,
You are come to Sandal in a happy hour;
The army of the queen mean to besiege us.
Sir John. She shall not need, we’ll meet her in the field.
York. What, with five thousand men?
Rick. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.
A woman’s general; what should we fear?
[A March after off.]

Edw. I hear their drums: let’s set our men in order
And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.
York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be great
I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.
Many a battle have I won in France,
When as the enemy hath been ten to one:
Why should I now not have the like success?

[Alarum. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains near Sandal Castle.
Alarum: Excursions. Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.
Rut. Ah! whither shall I fly to escape their hands
Ah, tutor! look, where bloody Clifford comes.
Enter Clifford and Soldiers.
Clif. Chaplain, away: thy priesthood saves thy life
As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father, he shall die.
Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.
Clif. Soldiers, away with him.
Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child,
Lest thou be hated both of God and man.
[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.
Clif. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear
That makes him close his eyes?—I’ll open them.
Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o’er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws:
And so he walks, insulting o’er his prey,
And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.—
Ah, gentle Clifford! kill me with thy sword,
And not with such a cruel threatening look.
Sweet Clifford! hear me speak before I die:
I am too mean a subject for thy wrath;
Be thou revenged on men, and let me live.
Clif. In vain thou speak’st, poor boy: my father’s blood
Hath stopp’d the passage where thy words should enter.
Rut. Then let my father’s blood open it again:
He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.
Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and thine
Wore not revenge sufficient for me.
No; if I digg’d up thy forefathers’ graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not make mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;
And till I root out their accursed line,
And leave not one alive, I live in hell.
Therefore—
Rut. O! let me pray before I take my death.—
To thee I pray: sweet Clifford, pity me!
Clif. Such pity as my rapier’s point affords.
Rut. I never did thee harm: why wilt thou slay me?
Clif. Thy father hath.
Rut. But ’t was ere I was born.
Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me,
Lost, in revenge thereof, sith God is just,
He be as miserably slain as I.
Ah! let me live in prison all my days,
And when I give occasion of offence,
Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.
Clif. No cause?
Thy father slew my father: therefore, die.
[Clifford strikes his Tutor.
Rut. Dii faciant, laudis summa sit ista tua! [Dies.
Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!
And this thy son’s blood cleaving to my blade,
Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood
Congea’d with this do make me wipe ’t if both.
[Exit.}
SCENE IV.—The Same.

Alarum. Enter YORK.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:
My uncles both are slain in rescuing me;
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lame pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.
My sons—God knows, what hath bechanced them,
But this I know,—they have done me'themselves
Like men born to renounce by life or death
Three times did Richard make a lane to me,
And thrice cried,—"Courage, father! fight it out!"
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple face, painted to the hilt
In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
And when the hardiest warriors did retire,
Richard cried,—"Charge! and give no foot of ground!"

And cried,—"A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!"

With this, we charg'd again; but, out alas!
We bodg'd again: as I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

[A short Alarum within.

Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury;
And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury.
The sands are number'd that make up my life;
Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHBURNELAND, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage.
I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm
With downright payment show'd unto my father.
Now Phæton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noon-tide prink.

York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth
A bird that will revenge upon you all;
And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whate'er you can afflic us with.
Why come you not,—what! multitudes, and fear?

Clif. So coward fights when they can fly no farther;
So doves peck the falcon's piercing talons;
So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invidious 'gainst the officers.

York. O, Clifford! but bethink thee once again,
And in thy thought o'er-run my former time;
And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice,
Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this.

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word,
But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes
I would prolong awhile the traitor's life.

Wath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so much
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:
What valour were it, when a curse doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away?
It is war's prize to take all advantages.

And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

[They lay hands on York, who struggles.

Clif. Ay, ay; so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

[York is taken prisoner.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty,
So true men yield, with robbers so o'er-match'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,

Come, make him stand upon this molehills here,
That taught't at mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.

What! was it you, that would be England's king?
Was't you that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent?
Where are your nes of sons to back you now,
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where's that valiant crook-back prodigy,
Dick-your boy, that, with his grumbling voice,
Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?
Or, with the rest, where's thy adored heirin Rutland?

Look, York: I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And, if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal. [Throwing it.

Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I pr'ythee, grieve to make me merry, York:
What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou shouldst be mad;
And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou wouldst be fed, I see, to make me sport:
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—
A crown for York!—and, lords, bow low to him
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.—

[Putting a Paper Crown on his Head.

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king.
Ay, this is he that took king Henry's chair:
And this is he that shall wear it for a king.

But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be king,
Till our king Henry had shock hands with death.
And will you pale your head in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the diadem,
Now in his life, against your holy oath? O! 'tis a fault too, too unpardonable.

Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head!
And whilst we breathe take time to do him dead.

Clif. That is my office for my father's sake.

Q. Mar. Nay, stay: let's hear the orisons he makes.

York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France;
Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth,
How ill-beseeing is it in thy sex,
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their woes whom fortunes captivates?
But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds.

I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush:
To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.

Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;
Unless the adage must be verified,
That beggars mounted run their horse to death.
’T is beauty that doth oft make women proud;
But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small.
’T is virtue that doth make them most admired;
The contrary doth make thee wonder’d at.
’T is government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable.
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O, tiger’s heart, wrapp’d in a woman’s hide!
How couldst thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid ‘the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman’s face?
Women are so, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Did’st thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
Wouldst have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will;
For ruging wind blows up incessant showers,
And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland’s obsequies,
And every drop cries vengeance for his death,
’Gainst thee, fell Clifford, and thee, false French-woman.
North. Beshrew me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
York. That face of his
The hungry cannibals would not have touch’d,
Would not have stain’d the rose’s hue, with blood:
But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,
O! ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father’s tears:
This cloth thou dipt’st in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this;
[Throwing it back to him.] And if thou tell’st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—“Alas! it was a piteous deed.”—
There, take the crown, and with the crown my ear.
And in thy need such comfort come to thee,
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world:
My soul to heaven, my body upon your heads!
North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my ka,
I should not, for my life, but weep with him,
To see how my sorrow gripes his soul.
Q. Mar. What! weeping-ripe, my lord Northumberland?
Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry my melting tears.
Cliff. Here’s for my oath; here’s for my father’s death.
Q. Mar. And here’s to right our gentle-hearted
York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek out the.
Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York’s palm,
So York may overlook the town of York.
[Flourish. Exit

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Plain near Mortimer’s Cross in Herefordshire.

A March. Enter Edward and Richard, with their Poesy.

Edw. I wonder, how our princely father ‘scape’d;
Or whether he be ‘scape’d away, or no,
From Clifford’s and Northumberland’s pursuit.
Had he been ta’en, we should have heard the news;
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;
Or had he ‘scape’d, methinks, we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?
Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv’d
Where our right valiant father is become.
I saw him in the battle range about,
And watch’d him how he singed Clifford forth.
Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,
As doth a lion in a herd of neat:
Or as a bear encompass’d round with dogs,
Who having pinch’d a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.
So far’d our father with his enemies:
So fled his enemies my warlike father:
Methinks, ’t is prize’d enough to be his son.
See, how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm’d like a younger, prancing to his love!
Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?
Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,

1 Would not have touch’d, would not have stain’d with; in f. e. “True Tragedy”; pride. 2 in haste: not in f. e. Kneel
Hew down, and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.
By many hands your father was subdued;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm.
O'uncleering Clifford, and the queen,
Who crownd the gracious duke in high despite;
Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief he wept,
The ruthless queen gave him, to dry his cheeks,
A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of his, young Rutland, by foul Clifford slain:
And, after many scorns, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of York
They set the same: and there it doth remain,
The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet duke of York! our prop to lean upon,
Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay.
O Clifford! boisterous Clifford! thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry;
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
For hand to hand he would have vanquish'd thee.
Now, my soul's palace is become a prison:
Ah! would she break from hence, that this my body
Might in the ground be closed up in rest,
For never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never! O! never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep, for all my body's moisture
Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart;
Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden,
For self-same wind, that I should speak withal,
Is kindling coals that fire all my breast,
And burn me up with flames that tears would quench.
To weep is to make less the depth of grief.
Tears, then, for babes; blows, and revenge, for me. —
Richard, I bear thy name; I'll venge thy death,
Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with thee;
His dukedom and his chair with me are left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun:
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say;
Either that is thine, or else thou wast not his.

March. Enter Warwick and Montague, with their Army.

War. How now, fair lords! What fare? what news abroad?

Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount
Our battleful news, and at each word's deliverance,
Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
O, valiant lord! the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O, Warwick! Warwick! that Plantagenet,
Which held thee dearly as his soul's redemption,
Is by the stern lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten days ago I drownd these news in tears;
And now, to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things aith then befallen.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
They bring'd me from the field, and his depart.
I, then in London, keeper of the king,
Must'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends; 1
March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen,
Bearin the king in my behalf along;
For by my scouts I was advertised,
That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late decree in parliament,

Touching king Henry's oath, and your succession.
Short tale to make,—we at Saint Albans met;
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought;
But, whether 't was the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,
That robb'd my soldiers of their heated spleen,
Or whether 't was report of her success,
Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour,
Who thunders to his captives blood and death
I cannot judge; but, to conclude with truth,
Their weapons like to lightning came and went:
Our soldiers', like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.
I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause.
With promise of high pay, and great rewards,
But all in vain; they had no heart to fight,
And we in them no hope to win the day;
So that we fled: the king unto the queen.
Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,
In haste, poste-haste, are come to join with you;
For in the marches here, we heard, you were,
Making another head to fight again.

Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle Warwick?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?
War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers;
And for your brother, he was lately sent
From your kind aunt, duchess of Burgundy,
With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick fled:
Oft have I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, doest thou hear;
For thou shalt know, this strong right hand of mine
Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,
And wring the awful sceptre from his flat,
Were he as famous, and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, lord Warwick; blame me not:
'T is love, I bear thy glories, makes me speak.
But in this troublous time what's to be done?
Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,
Numbering our Ave-Maries with our beads?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?
If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out,
And therefore comes my brother Montague.
Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford, and the haughty Northumberland,
And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
He swore consent to your succession,
His oath enrolled in the parliament;
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath, and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster:
Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong.
Now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself,
With all the friends that thou, brave earl of March,
Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,
Will but amount to five and twenty thousand.
Why, Vix! to London will we march again, 2
And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
And once again cry—Charge! upon our foes;
But never once again turn back, and fly.

Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I hear great Warwick speak.

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,
That cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

Edu. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean;
And when thou fail'st, (as God forbid the hour!)
Must Edward fall, which peril heaven forefend!
War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York:
The next degree is, England's royal throne;
For king of England shall thou be proclaimed
In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy,
Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—

Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,
As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine.

Edu. Then strike up, drums!—God, and Saint George,

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now: what news?
Mess. The Duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,
The Queen is coming with a puissant host,
And craves your company for speedy counsel.
War. Why then, it sorts: brave warriors, let's away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before York.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with Drums and Trumpets.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yor. 'tis the head of that arch-enemy,
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:
Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their
To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault;
Not witthoutly have I infring'd my vow.

Cliff. My gracious liege, this too much lenity
And harmful pity, must be laid aside.
To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
Not to the beast that would usurp their den.
Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick?
Not his that spoils her young before her face.
Who 'scapest the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
Not he that sets his foot upon her back.
The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on;
And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood.
Ambitious York did level at thy crown;
Thou smiling, while he knits his angry brows;
He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire;
Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to diisinherit him,
Which argued thee a most unloving father.
Unreasonable creatures feed their young;
And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,
Yet, in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not seen them, even with those wings
Which sometime they have us'd in fearful flight,
Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest,
Offering their own lives in their young's defences?
For shame, my liege! make them your precedent.
Were it not pity, that this godly boy
Should lose his birthright by his father's fault,
And long hereafter say unto his child,—
"What my great-grandfather and grandsire got,
My careless father fondly gave away."
Ah! what a shame were this. Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart
To lower thine own, and lease thine own with him.
Ful wel hast Clifford play'd the crier.
Inferring arguments of mighty force.
But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,
That things ill got had ever bad success?
And happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?
I'll leave my son my virous deeds behind,
And would my father had left me no more;
For all the rest is held at such a rate,
As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep,
Than in possession any jot of pleasure.—
Ah, cousin York! would thy best friends did know,
How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!
Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits: our foes are nigh,
And this soft carriage makes your followers faint.
You promised knighthood to our forward son:
Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently.—
Edward, kneel down.

K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
And hear this lesson. —Draw thy sword in right.
Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly leave,
I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it to the death.
Cliff. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:
For, with a band of thirty thousand men,
Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;
And, in the towns, as they do march along,
Proclaim his kingdom, and many fly to him.
Darrain the battle, for they are at hand.
Cliff. I would, your highness would depart the field
The queen hath best success when you are absent.
Q. Mar. Ay, my good lord, and leave us to our fortune.

K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I stay.

North. Be it with resolution, then, to fight.

Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence.
Unsheath your sword, good father: or, "Sai'st George!"

March. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Warwick:
NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, and Soldiers.

Edu. Now, perjur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace
And set thy diadem upon my head,
Or hide the mortal fortune of the field?

Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms,
Before thy sovereign, and thy lawful king?

Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted heir by his consent;
Since when, his oath is broke: for, as I hear,
You, that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in.
SCENE III.  KING HENRY VI.

Clif. And reason too:
Who should succeed the father, but the son?
Rich. Are you there, butcher?—O! I cannot speak.
Clif. Ay, crook-back; here I stand, to answer thee,
Or any he the profoundest of thy sort.
Rich. 'T was you that told 't that young Rutland, was it not?
Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.
Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.
War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?
Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongued Warwick! dare you speak?
When you and I met at Saint Albans last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.
War. 'Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.
Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.
War. 'T was not your valour, Clifford, drove me from the field.
North. No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.
Break off the parley; for scarce I can refrain
The execution of my big-swollen heart.
Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.
Clif. I slew thy father: call'st thou him a child?
Rich. Ay, like a dastard, and a treacherous coward,
As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;
But er sun-set I'll make thee curse the deed.
K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.
Clif. My liege, the wound, that bred this meeting here,
Cannot be cur'd by words: therefore be still.
Rich. Then, executioner, unheath thy sword.
By him that made us all, I am resolv'd,
That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.
Edeu. Say, Henry, shall I have my right, or no?
A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,
That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.
War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;
For York in justice puts his armour on.
Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right,
There is no wrong; but every thing is right.
Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;
For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.
Q. Mar. But though art near like thy sire, nor more;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venom toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.
Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gift,
Whose father bears the title of a king,
(As if a channel should be call'd the sea)
Shame'th thou not, knowing whence thou art extracted.
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?
Edeu. A web of straw were worth a thousand crowns.
To make this shameless callist know herself.
Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be Menelaus,
And no was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
By that false woman as this king by thee.
His father revel'd in the heart of France;
And 'mid the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;
And, had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day;
But, when he took a beggar to his bed,
And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal day,
Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd adition on his crown at home.
For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?
Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept,
And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had alipp'd our claim until another age.
Geo. But when we saw our sunshine made thy spring
And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root:
And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,
We 'll never leave, till we have hewn thee down,
Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.
Edeu. And in this resolution I defy thee;
Not willing any longer conference,
Since thou deniest the gentle king to speak.—
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colours wave,
And either victory, or a welcome grave.
Edeu. No, wrangling woman; we 'll no longer stay.
These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.
[Exeunt]

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle near Towton.

Alarms: Excursions. Enter Warwick.
War. Forpantz with toil, as runners win a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe;
For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repaid,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,
And, spite of spite, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.
Edeu. Smile, gentle heaven, or strike, ungentle death
For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.
War. How now, my lord! what hap? what hope of good?

Enter George.
Geo. Our hap is foes, our hope but sad despair:
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us.
What counsel give you? whither shall we fly?
Edeu. Bootless is flight; they follow us with wings
And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter Richard.
Rich. Ah, Warwick! why hast thou withdrawn thyself?
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steeply point of Clifford's lance;
And, in the very pangs of death he died,
Like to a dismal clangor heard from afar,
"Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!"
So, underneath the bellies of their steeds,
That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.
I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Wailing our losses, while the foe doth rage,
And look upon, as if the tragedy
Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?
Here on my knee I vow to God above.

Kneeling. I never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.
Edeu. O Warwick! I do beseech my knee with thine,
Kneeling. And in this vow do chain my soul to thine.
THIRD PART OF:ACT II.

And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou sett’rest up and pluck’st down of kings;
Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
That to my foes this body must be prey,—
Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul.—[Rising:
Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven, or in earth.
Rich. Brother, give me thy hand;—and, gentle
Warwick,
Let me embrace thee in my weary arms.
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe,
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, fare-
well.
Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
And give them leave to fly that will not stay,
And call them pillars that will stand to us;
And if we thrive promise them such rewards
As victors wore at the Olympian games.
This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life, and victory.—
Foresaw no longer; make we hence again. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Part of the Field.
Excerpts. Enter Richard and Clifford.
Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone.
Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York,
And this for Rutland: both bound to revenge,
Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.
Cliff. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone.
This the hand that stabb'd thy father York,
And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;
And here's the heart that triumphs in their death,
And cheers these hands, that slew thy sire and brother,
To execute the like upon thyself:
And so, have at thee.
[They fight. Warwick enters; Clifford flies.
Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;
For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.
Alerum. Enter King Henry.
K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light;
What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
Can neither call it perfect day nor night.
Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea.
Fore’d by the tide to combat with the wind:
Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea.
Fore’d to retire by fury of the wind:
Sometimes, the flood prevails; and then, the wind;
Now, one the better, then, another best;
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquer’d:
So is the equal poise of this fell war.
Here, on this molehill, will I sit me down.
To whom God will, there be the victory;
To Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle, swearing both,
They prosper best of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead! if God's good will were so;
For what is in this world but grief and woe?
O God! methinks, it were a happy life,
To be no better than a homely swain;
To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
Thereby to see the minutes how they run:
How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live.
When this is known, then to divide the times.
So many hours must I tend my flock;
So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate;
So many hours must I sport myself;
So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yeat;
So many months ere I shall shear the fleece:
So many hours, days, months and years,
Passed over to the end they were created.
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!
Gives not the Hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
To shepherds looking on their silly sheep,
Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
To kings that fear their subjects' treachery?
O! yes it doth; a thousand fold it doth.
And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,
His cool drink out of his leather bottle,
His wonted sleep under an ass' shade,
All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies,
His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
His body couched in a curious bed,
When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.
Alerum. Enter a son that hath killed his father, will the dead Body.
Son. Ill blows the wind that profits no body.
This man whom I stand to hand I saw in fight,
May be powered with some store of crowns;
And I, that haply take them from him now,
May yet ere night yield both my life and them.
To some man else, as this dead man to me.—
Who's this?—O God! it is my father's face,
Whom in this conflict I unware have kill'd.
O heavy times, begetting such events!
From London by the king was I press'd forth;
My father, being the earl of Warwick's man,
Came on the part of York, press'd by his master;
And I, with his hand receiv'd my life
Have by my hands of life bereaved him.
Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did;
And pardon, father, for I knew not thee.
My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks,
And no more words, till they have flow'd their fill.
K. Hen. O pitious spectacle! O bloody times!
While lions war and battle for their dens,
Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.
Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee, tear for tear,
And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war,
Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grie.

Enter a Father, who has killed his Son, bearing the Body.

Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold,
For I have bought it with an hundred blows.
But let me see:—is this a foeman's face?
Ah, no, no, no! it is mine only son!
Ah, boy, if any life be left thee,
Throw up thine eye: see, see, what showers arise.
Blown with the windy tempest of my heart.
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!
O, pity, God, this miserable age!—
What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural,
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
0 bee! thy father gave thee this life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.
K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief!
0, that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!—
0, pity, pity! gentle heaven, pity!—
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses:
The one his purple blood right well resembles,
The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presentseth;
When once we see, and let the other flourish!
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.
S'eat. 'How will my mother, for a father's death,
Take en with me, and ne'er be satisfied?
Fad. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
Sed seas of tears, and ne'er be satisfied?
K. Hen. How will the country, for these woful chances,
Wish'd the king, and not be satisfied?
S'eat. Was ever war so rue'd a father's death?
Fad. Was ever father so bonemisl a son?
K. Hen. Was ever king so griev'd for subjects' woe?
Misch is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.
S'eat. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill.
[Exit with the Body.
Fad. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
As from my heart shine image ne'er shall go.
My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so obsequious will thy father be
For the loss of thee, having more than will,
Praim was for all his valiant sons.
I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will,
I'we have murder'd where I should not kill.
[Exit with the Body.
K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overcome with care,
Leaves a king more woful than you are.
Exeunt: Excursions. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince
Warwick, and Exeter.
Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chafed bull.
way! for death doth hold us in pursuit.
Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord: towards Berwick post again.
award and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds,
Wing the fearful flying hare in sight,
Lash fiery eyes, sparkling for every wrath,
And bloody steel grasp'd in their ireful hands,
In our backs; and therefore hence amain.
Exeunt. Away! for vengeance comes along with them.
Stay not to expostulate; make speed,
Else come after: I'll away before.
K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:
That I fear to stay, but love to go
Bitter the queen intends. Forward! away!
[Exeunt.
SCENE VI.—The Same.
A loud Alarm. Enter Clifford, wounded.
Clif. Here burns my candle out; ay, here it dies, thick, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,
And my body's parting with my soul.
Love, and fear, glued many friends to thee;
Now I fall thy tough coministures melt,
Paring Henry, strengthening mis-proud York.
The common people swarm like summer-flies;*
And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
And who shines now but Henry's enemies?
O Phæbus! hast thou never given consent
That Phæton should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had scorched the earth;
And, Henry, hast thy sway'd as kings should do,
Or as thy father, and his father, did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York.
They never, then, had sprung like summer flies;
I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
Had left no mourning for the world's death,
And thou this day hast kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?
And what makes robbers bold but too much lenity?
Bootes are plaints, and cureless are my wounds.
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:
The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
For at their hands I have deserv'd no pitty.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.—
Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;
I stab'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.
[He faints.
Alarum and Retreat. Enter Edward, George, Richard
Montague, Warwick, and Soldiers.
Edw. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks.—
Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosy to stem the waves.
But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape;
For, though before his face I speak the words,
Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave,
And wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.
[Clifford grooms.*
Rich. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?
A deadly groan, like life and death's departing.
See who it is.
Edw. And, now the battle's ended,
If friend, or foe, let him be gently used.
[Clifford dies.
Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford;
Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch
In heaving Rutland when his leaves put forth,
But set his murdering knife unto the root
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring;
I mean, our princely father, duke of York.
War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head,
Your father's head, which Clifford plac'd there;
Instead whereof, let this supply the room:
Measure for measure must be answered.
Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our house,
That nothing sung but death to us and ours:
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.
[Soldiers bring the body forward
War. I think his understanding is bereft;—
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?
Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us, what we say.
Rich. O, would he do! and so, perhaps, he doth
'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
*This line was inserted by Theobald, from the "True Tragedy." * L. *md dies; and omit the stage direction a few lines below. * Attendants: in f. e.
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our father.
Geo. If so thou think'st, t'ax him with eager' words.
Rich. Clifford! ask me, say, and obtain no grace.
[They pull him to and fro.]
Edu. Clifford! repent in fruitless penitence.
War. Clifford! devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. Withal we devise fell fortunes for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Edu. Thou pitiedst Rutland; I will pity thee.
Geo. Where's a captain Margaret to fence you now?
War. They mock thee, Clifford: swear as thou wast wont.
Rich. What! not an oath? nay then, the world goes hard,
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.—
I know by that, he's dead; and, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
That I in all despite might ral at him.
[Blood
This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing
Stifle the villain, whose untaunted thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy.
War. Ay, but he's dead. Off with the traitor's head,
And rear it in the place your father's stands.—

And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned England's royal king:
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,
And ask the lady Bona for thy queen.
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;
And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread
The scatter'd foe that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them bus, t' offend thine ears.
First, will I see the coronation,
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,
To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.
Edu. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, as it is
For in thy shoulde do I build my seat,
And never will I undertake the thing,
Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—
Richard, I will create thee duke of Gloster;
And George, of Clarence.—Warwick, as ourself,
Shall do, and undo, as him pleaseth best.
Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence, George of Gloster.
For Gloster's dukedom is too ominous.
War. Tut! that's a foolish observation:
Richard, be duke of Gloster. Now to London,
To see those honours in possession.

ACT III.

Enter two Keepers, with Cross-bows in their Hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;
For through this lawn anon the deer will come,
And in this covert will we make our stand,
Culling the principal of all the deer.

2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

1 Keep. That cannot be; the noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.
Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,
In this self-place, where now we mean to stand.

2 Keep. Here comes a man; let's stay till he be past.

Enter King Henry, disguised as a churchman, with a Prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,
To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.
No, Harry, Harry, 't is no land of thine;
Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee,
Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed:
No bending knee will call thee Caesar now,
No humble suitors press to speak for right,
No, not a man comes for redress of thee,
For how can I help them, and not myself?

1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee.
This is the quondam king: let's seize upon him.

K. Hen. Let me embrace these sour adversities;
For wise men say, it is the wisest course.

2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.

1 Keep. Forbes a while; we'll hear a little more.

K. Hen. My queen and son are gone to France for aid;
And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick
Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister
To wife for Edward. If this news be true,
Poor queen and son, your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator,
And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.
By this account, then, Margaret may win him,
For she's a woman to be pitied much:
Her sighs will make a battery in his breast,
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;
The tiger will be mild whiles she doth mourn,
And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
To hear, and see, her plaints, her brinish tears.
Ay, but she's come to beg; Warwick, to give:
She on his left side craving aid for Henry,
He on his right asking a wife for Edward.
She weeps, and says—her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says—his Edward is install'd;
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more,
Whiles Warwick tells his title. smooths the wrong,
Infereth arguments of mighty strength;
And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,
With promise of his sister, and aught else,
To strengthen and support king Edward's place.
O Margaret! thus 't will be; and thou, poor soul,
Art then forsook, as thou went'st forthorn.

2 Keep. Say, what art thou talkest of kings and queens?

[Coming forw
K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I am born to:
A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and not why I?

2 Keep. Ay, but thou talkest as if thou wert a king.
K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough.

2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crowns?
K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my he t Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen: my crown is call'd, content;
A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy.

2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content
Your crown, content, and you, must be contented.
To go along with us; for, as we think,
You are the king, king Edward hath depos'd;
And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
KING HENRY VI. 495

Glo. Nay then, whip me; he’ll rather give her two. [Aside.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. You shall have four, if you’ll be rule’d by him. [Aside.

K. Edu. ‘T were pity, they should lose their father’s lands.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.

K. Edu. Lords, give us leave: I’ll try this widow’s wit.

Glo. Ay, good leave have you; for you will have leave
Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.

[Ghoster and Clarence stand back.

K. Edu. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edu. And would you not do much, to do them good?

L. Grey. To do them good I would sustain some harm.

K. Edu. Then, get your husband’s lands to do them harm.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edu. I’ll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness’ service.

K. Edu. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them?

L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.

K. Edu. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edu. But thou canst do what I mean to ask
L. Grey. Why then, I will do what your grace commands.

Glo. He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble.

[Aside.

Clar. As red as fire! may then, her wax must melt.

[Aside.

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edu. An easy task: ’tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That’s soon perform’d, because I am a subject.

K. Edu. Why then, thy husband’s lands I freely give thee.

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glo. The match is made: she seals it with a curt’sey.

[Aside.

K. Edu. But stay thee; ’tis the fruits of love I mean.

L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edu. Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.

What love, think’st thou, I sue so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death; my humble thanks, my prayers:

That love which virtue beggs, and virtue grants.

K. Edu. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

L. Grey. Why then, you mean not as I thought you did.

K. Edu. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive
Your highness aims at, if I aim aright.

K. Edu. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

L. Grey. To tell thee plain, I had rather lie in prison.

K. Edu. Why then, thou shalt not have thy husband’s lands.

L. Grey. Why then, mine honesty shall be my dower;
For by that loss I will not purchase them.

The words, in state, crowned: not in f. a.
L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and me.
Bnt, mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness of my suit;
Please you dismiss me, either with ay, or no.
K. Edu. Ay, if thou wilt say ay, to my request;
No. if thou dost say no, to my demand.
L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.
Glo. The widow likes him not, she knits her brow.

[Aside.]

Clar. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.

[Aside.]

K. Edu. Her looks do argue her replete with modesty:
Her words do show her wit incomparable,
All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
One way, or other, she is for a king.
And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—
Say, that king Edward take thee for his queen?
L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord:
I am a subject fit to jest withal,
But far unfit to be a sovereign.
K. Edu. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee,
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that, is to enjoy thee for my love.
L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.
I know, I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too good to be your concubine.
K. Edu. You cavil, widow; I did mean, my queen.
L. Grey. 'T will grieve your grace, my sons should call you father.
K. Edu. No more, than when my daughters call thee mother.
Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;
And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,
Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
To be the father unto many sons.
Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
Glo. The ghostly father now hath done his shift.

[Aside.]

Clar. When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift.

[Aside.]

K. Edu. Brothers, you must what chat we two have had. [GLOSTER AND CLARENCE COME FORWARD.]
Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks very sad.
K. Edu. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.
Clar. To whom, my lord?
K. Edu. Why, Clarence, to myself?
Glo. That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.
Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
Glo. By so much is the wonder in extremes.
K. Edu. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both,
Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.
K. Edu. See, that he be convey'd unto the Tower:—
And so we, brothers, to the man that took him,
To question of his apprehension.—
Widow, go you along—Lords, use her honourably.

[Exit King EDWARD, Lady GREY, CLA-RENCE, and Lord.

Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.
1Would he were wasted, narrow, bones, and all,
That from his lions no hopeful branch may spring,
To cross me from the golden time I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire, and me,
The lustful Edward's title buried,
Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,
And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,
To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my purpose.
Why then, I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands upon a promontory,
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,
Wishing he could only be with his eye;
And closes the sea that sunder him from thence,
Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off,
And so I chide the means that keep me from it;
And so I say I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.—
My eye's too quick, my heart o'erweans too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Well, say there is no kingdom, then, for Richard
What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments.
And with sweet ladies with my words and looks,
O miserable thought! and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns.
Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some briage
To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sit deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disfigure me in every part.
Like to a chace, or an unlick'd bear-whelp,
That carries no impression like the dam.
And am I, then, a man to be belov'd?
O, monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!
Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,
But to command, to check, to o'erbear such
As are of better person than myself,
I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown:
And, whiles I live, I account this world but hell,
Until my mis-shap'd trunk that bears this head,
Be round impaied with a glorious crown.
And yet I know not how to get the crown,
For many lives stand between me and home:
And I, like one lost in a thorny wood,
That rends the thorns, and is rent with the thorns,
Seeking a way, and straying from the way,
Not knowing how to find the open air,
But toiling desperately to find it out,
Tortured myself to catch the English crown:
And from that torment I will free myself,
Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.
Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile,
And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart,
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,
And frame my face to all occasions.
'l'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall,
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,
Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,
And like a Siren take another Troy.
I can add colours to the cameleon,
Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,
And send the murderous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
'Tut! were it further off, I'd pluck it down.

[Finis]
SCENE III.—France. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter LEWIS the French King, and Lady Bona, attended; the King takes his State. Then, enter Queen MARGARET, Prince EDWARD, and the Earl of OXFORD.

K. LEW. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret, Sit down with us: it ill beseems thy state,
And birth, that thou shouldst stand, while Lewis doth sit.

Q. MAR. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret Must strike her sail, and learn a while to serve,
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion’s queen in former golden days;
But now mischance hath trod my title down,
And with dishonour laid me on the ground,
Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. LEW. Why, say, fair queen, wheneverspringsthis deep despair?

Q. MAR. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears,
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown’d in cares.

K. LEW. Whate’er it be, be thou still like thyself,
And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck
[Seats her by him.]

To fortune’s yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
Be plain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas’d, if France can yield relief.

Q. MAR. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,
And give my tongue-tied sorrow leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,
That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
Is of a king become a banish’d man,
And forc’d to live in Scotland all forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
Turps the regal title, and the seat
Of England’s true-anointed lawful king.
This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,
With this my son, prince Edward, Henry’s heir,
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And if thou fail us all our hope is done.
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled;
Our treasure seiz’d, our soldiers put to flight,
And thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.

K. LEW. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,
While we bethink a means to break it off.

Q. MAR. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe.

K. LEW. The more I stay, the more I’ll succour thee.

Q. MAR. 0! but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter WARWICK, attended.

K. LEW. What’s he, approacheth boldly to our presence?

Q. MAR. The earl of Warwick, Edward’s greatest friend.

K. LEW. Welcome, brave Warwick. What brings thee to France?

[He descends. Queen MARGARET rises.

Q. MAR. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is he that moves both wind and tide.

WAR. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
I come in kindness, and unseign’d love,
First, to do greetings to thy royal person,
And, then, to crave a league of amity;
And, lastly, to confirm that amity
With mutual knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona, thy fair sister,
To England’s king in lawful marriage.

Q. MAR. If that go forward, Henry’s hope is done
War. And, gracious madam, [To Bona.] in our king’s behalf,
I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
To tell the passion of my sovereign’s heart;
Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
Hath plac’d thy beauty’s image, and thy virtue.

Q. MAR. King Lewis, and lady Bona, hear me speak
Before you answer Warwick. His demand
Springs not from Edward’s well-meant honest love
But from deceit, bred by necessity;
For how can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him tyrant this reason may suffice,—
That Henry liveth still: but were he dead,
Yet here prince Edward stands, king Henry’s son.
Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage
Thou draw not on thee danger and dishonour;
For though usurpers away the rule awhile,
Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.
War. Injurious Margaret! prince. And why not queen?
War. Because thy father Henry did usurp,
And thou no more act prince than she is queen.

Oxf. Then, Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt
Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And after that wise prince, Henry the fifth,
Who by his prowess conquered all France:
From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how hap it, in this smooth discourse,
You told not, how Henry the sixth hath lost
All that which Henry the fifth had gotten?
Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that.
But for the rest,—you tell a pedigree
Of three-score and two years; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom’s worth.

Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,
Whom thou obeyest thirty and six years,
And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
For shame! leave Henry, and call Edward king.

Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom
My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere,
Was done to death? and more than so, my father,
Even in the downfall of his mellow’d years,
When nature brought him to the door of death?
No, Warwick, no; while life upholdeth this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.
War. And I the house of York.

K. LEW. Queen Margaret, prince Edward, and Oxford,
Vouchsafe at our request to stand aside,
While I use farther conference with Warwick.

Q. MAR. Heaven grant, that Warwick’s words be-witness him not!

K. LEW. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy own science,
Is Edward your true king? for I were doleful,

20
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.
War. Thereon I pawn my credit, and mine honour.
K. Lew. But is he gracious in the people's eye?
War. The more, that Henry was unfortunately.
K. Lew. Then farther, all dissembling set aside,
Tell me for truth the measure of his love
Unto our sister Bona.
War. Such it seems,
As may beseech a monarch like himself.
Myself have often heard him say, and swear,
That this his love was an eternal plant;
Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,
The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun,
Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,
Unless the lady Bona quit his pain.
K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.
Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine.—
Yet I confess, [To War.] that often ere this day,
When I have heard your king's descent recounted,
Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.
K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus — our sister shall be Edward's!
And now forthwith shall articles be drawn
Touching the jointure that your king must make,
Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd.
Draw near, queen Margaret, and be a witness,
That Bona shall be wise to the English king.
Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.
Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device
By this alliance to make void my suit:
Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.
K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret:
But if your title to the crown be weak,
As may appear by Edward's good success,
Then 'tis but reason, that I be released
From giving aid which late I promised.
Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand,
That your estate requires, and mine can yield.
War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease,
Where having nothing, nothing can be lose.
And as for you yourself, our guandam queen,
You have a father able to maintain you,
And better 't was you troubled him than France.
Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick!
Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings,
I will get hence, till with my talk and tears,
Both full of truth, I make king Lewis behold
Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love;
For both of you are birds of self-same feather.
[K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.
Enter Post.]
Post. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you,
Sent from your brother, marquess Montague.—
These from our king unto your majesty.—
And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.
[They all read their letters.]
Orr. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress
Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.
Prince. Nay, mark how Lewis stamps as he were nettled:
I hope all's for the best.
K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen? [joys.
Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhop'd
War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.
K. Lew. What! has your king married the lady Grey,
And now, to soothe thy fury and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience?

Is this th' alliance that he seeks with France?
Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?
Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before.
This proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.
War. King Lewis, I here protest, in sight of leave
And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,
That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's:
No more my king, for he dishonours me,
But most myself, if he could see his shame.
Did I forget, that by the house of York
Thy lord was laid untimely to his death?
Did I let pass th' abuse done to my niece?
Did I impale him with the regal crown?
Did I put Henry from his native right,
And am I guerdon'd at the last with shame?
Shame on himself, for my desert is honour:
And to repair my honour lost for him,
I here renounce him, and return to Henry.
My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor.
I will revenge his wrong to lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former state.
Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd ray hat to love;
And I forgive and quite forget old faults,
And joy that thou becomest king Henry's friend.
War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend,
That if king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast,
And force the tyrant from his seat by war.
'Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him.
And as for Clarence, as my letters tell me,
He's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for worldly than honour,
Or than for strength and safety of our country.
Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be revenge,
But by thy help to this distressed queen?
Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live,
Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?
Bona. My quarrel and this English queen's are one.
War. And mine, fair lady Bona, joins with yours.
K. Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margaret's Therefore, at last I firmly am resolv'd
You shall have aid.
Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.
K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in post,
And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel with it and his new bride:
Thou seest what's past; go, fear thy king withal.
Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widow short.
I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.
Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are laid aside
And I am ready to put armour on.
War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong
And therefore I'll uncrown him ere 't be long.
There's thy reward: be gone.
[Exit Post.]
K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou
And Oxford, with five thousand warlike men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle:
And, as occasion serves, this noble queen
And prince shall follow with a fresh supply,
Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt:
What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?
War. This shall assure my constant loyalty.
That if our queen and this young prince agree,
I'll join mine eldest daughter and my joy,
SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Gloucester, Clarence, Somerset, Montague.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you
Of this new marriage with the lady Grey?

Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?

Clar. Alas! you know, 'tis far from hence to France:

How could he be till Warwick made return?

Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, attended; Lady Grey, as Queen; Pembroke, Stafford, and Hastings.

Glo. And his well-chosen bride.

Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

K. Edu. Now, brother Clarence, how like you our choice,

That you stand pensive, as half malcontent?

Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick;

Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment,
That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

K. Edu. Suppose they take offence without a cause,

They are but Lewis and Warwick; I am Edward,
Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.

Glo. And you shall have your will, because our king;

Yet hasty marriage seldom prove well.

K. Edu. Yes, brother Richard, are you offended too?

Glo. Not I.

No; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd
Whom God hath join'd together; ay, and 't were pity,
To sunder them that yoke so well together.

K. Edu. Setting your scorns and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason why the lady Grey
Should not become my wife, and England's queen.—
And you too, Somerset, and Montague,

Speak freely what you think.

Clar. Then this is mine opinion—that king Lewis
Becomes your enemy, for mocking him
About the marriage of the lady Bons.

Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,
Is now dishonour'd by this new marriage.

K. Edu. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appas'd
By such invention as I can devise?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance,
Would more have strengthen'd this our commonwealth,
'Gainst foreign storms than any home-bred marriage.

Hast. Why, knows not Montague, that of itself
England is safe, 'tis true within itself?

Mont. But the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.

[Exeunt all but Warwick.

War. I came from Edward as ambassador,
But I return his sworn and mortal foe:
Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadful war shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a state but me?
Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again:
Not that I pity Henry's misery,
But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace.

Hast. 'Tis better using France, than trusting France.
Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their help only defend ourselves:
In them and in ourselves our safety lies.

Clar. For this one speech lord Hastings well deserves
To have the heir of the lord Hungerford.

K. Edu. Ay, what of that? it was my will, and grant;

And for this once my will shall stand for law.

Glo. And yet, methinks, your grace hath not done well,

To give the heir and daughter of lord Scales
Unto the brother of your loving bride:
She better would have fitted me, or Clarence;

But in your bride you bury brotherhood.

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir
Of the lord Bonville on your new wife's son,
And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edu. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife,
That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.

Clar. In choosing for yourself you show'd your judgment;

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave
To play the broker in mine own behalf;

And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edu. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,
And not be tied unto his brother's will.

Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleas'd his majesty
To raise my state to title of a queen,

Do me but right, and you must all confess
That I was not ignoble of descent:

And meaner than myself have had like fortune.

But as this title honours me and mine,
So your dislike, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.

K. Edu. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frown.

What danger, or what sorrow can befal thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
And their true sovereign whom they must obey?

Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
Unless they seek for hatred at my hands;

Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.

Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.

[Asides.

Enter a Messenger.

K. Edu. Now, messenger, what letters, or what news,
From France?
Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters, and few words; But such as I, without your special pardon, Dare not relate.

K. Edu. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief, Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them. What answer makes king Lewis unto our letters?

Mess. At my depart these were his very words:—
"Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Lewis of France is sending over maskers, To revel with him and his new bride."

K. Edu. Is Lewis so brave? belike, he thinks me
Henry.

But what said lady Bona to my marriage?

Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain:—
"Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly, I'll wear the willow garland for his sake." K. Edu. I blame not her, she could say little less; She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen? For I have heard, that she was there in place.

Mess. "Tell him," quoth she, "my mourning weeds are done, And I am ready to put armour on."

K. Edu. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon. But what said Warwick to these injuries?

Mess. He, more incensed against your majesty Than all the rest, discharg'd me with these words:—
"Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong, And therefore I'll uncrown him ere 't be long."

K. Edu. Hadst thou the traitor breathe out so proud words?

Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd: They shall have war, and pay for their presumption. But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?

Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign: they are so link'd in friendship, That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Clar. Belike, the elder; Clarence will have the younger. [Aside.]

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast, For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter; That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may not prove inferior to yourself.— You, that love me and Warwick, follow me. [Exit CLARENCE, and SOMERSET follows.]

Glo. Not I. [Aside.]

My thoughts aim at a farther matter: I Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown.

K. Edu. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick! Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen, And haste is needful in this desperate case.— Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf Go levy men, and make prepare for war; They are already, or quickly will be landed: Myself in person will straight follow you. [Exit PEMBROKE and STAFFORD.

But, ere I go, Hastings, and Montague, Resolve my doubt: you twain, of all the rest, Are near to Warwick by blood, and by alliance: Tell me if you love Warwick more than me? If it be so, then both depart to him: I rather wish you foes, than fellow friends; But, if you mind to hold your true obedience, Give me assurance with some friendly vow, That I may never have you in suspect.

Mont. So God help Montague as he proves true!

Hast. And Hastings as he favours Edward's cause!

K. Edu. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you

K. Edu. Why so? then, am I sure of victory. Now, therefore, let us hence; and lose no hour, Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford with French and English Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well: The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter CLARENCE and SOMERSET.

But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come! Speak sure, my lords; are we all friends again? Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick; And welcome, Somerset.—I hold it cowardice, To rest mistrustful where a noble heart Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love; Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brook, Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings: But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall bide thine.

And now what rests, but in night's coverture, Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd, His soldiers lurking in the towns about, And but attended by a simple guard, We may surprise and take him at our pleasure? Our scouts have found the adventure very easy: That as Ulysses, and stout Diomed, With slieght and manhood stole to Rheus' tents, And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds; So we, well over'd with the night's black mantle, At unawares may beat down Edward's guard, And seize himself; I say not slaughter him, For I intend but to surprise him.— You, that will follow me to this attempt, Applaud the name of Henry with your leader. [They all cry, Huzzah!

Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort: For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George! [Exeunt]

SCENE III.—Edward's Camp near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's tent.

1 Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand:
The king by this is set him down to sleep.

2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?

1 Watch. Why, no; for he hath made a solemn vow Never to lie and take his natural rest, Till Warwick or himself be quite suppress'd.

2 Watch. To-morrow then, belike, shall be the day.

If Warwick be so near as men report.

3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that, That with the king here resteth in his tent?

1 Watch. 'T is the lord Hastings, the king's chief friend.

3 Watch. 0! is it so? But why commands the king That his chief followers lodge in towns about him, While he himself keeps in the cold field?

2 Watch. 'T is the more honour, because more dexterous.

3 Watch. Ay, but give me worship and quietness, I like it better than a dangerous honour. If Warwick knew in what estate he stands, 'T is to be doubted, he would waken him.

1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his pate.
SCENE V.

KING HENRY VI.

2 Watch. Ay; wherfore else guard we his royal tent? But to defend his person from night-foes?

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and Forces.

War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his guard.

Courage, my masters! honour now, or never! But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1 Watch. Who goes there?

2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

[Warwick, and the rest, cry all—Warwick! Warwick! and set upon the Guard; who fly, crying—Arm! Arm! Warwick! and the rest, following them. 1 Shouts and confusion.

Drums beating, and Trumpets sounding, re-enter Warwick, and the rest, bringing the King out in his Gown, sitting in a Chair: Gloucester and Hastings fly over the stage.

Som. What are they that fly there?

War. Richard, and Hastings: let them go; here's the duke.

K. Edu. The duke! why, Warwick, when we parted last,

Thou call'st me king?

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:

When you disregard'd me in my embassade,
Then I degraded you from being king,
And come now to create you duke of York. Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,
That know not how to use ambassadors,
Nor how to be contented with one wife,
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly,
Nor how to study for the people's welfare,
Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies?

K. Edu. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too? Nay then, I see that Edward needs must down.—
Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,
Of thee thyself, and all thy complies,
Edward will always bear himself as king:
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind be Edward England's king:

[Takes off his Crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,
And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—

My lord of Somerset, at my request,
See that withthwithstanding duke Edward be convey'd
Unto my brother, Archbishop of York.

When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,
I'll follow you, and tell what answer
Lewis, and the lady Bona, send to him:—

Now, for a while farewell, good duke of York.

K. Edu. What fates impose, that men must needs abide:
It boot's not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit King Edward, led out forcibly; Somerset with him.

Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do,
But march to London with our soldiers?

War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do;
To free king Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the regal throne.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth and Rivers.

Riv. Madam, what makes in you this sudden change?

Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn,
What late misfortune is befallen king Edward?

1 The rest of this direction is not in 1.
Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.

Glo. Come then; swa! let's have no more ado.

K. Edw. Bishop, farewell; shield thee from Warwicke's foes,
And pray that I may possess the crown. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.

Enter King HENRY, CLARENCE, WARWICK, SOMERSET;
young HENRY of RICHMOND, OXFORD, MONTAGUE;
Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends
Have shaken Edward from the regal seat,
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Luc. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

But if an humble prayer may prevail,
I then crave pardon of your majesty.

K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?
Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,
For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure:
Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds
Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,
At last by notes of household harmony
They quite forget their loss of liberty.—
But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,
And chiefly therefore I thank God, and thee;
He was the author, thou the instrument.
Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,
By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punish'd by my thwarting stars,
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,
I here resign my government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous,
And now may seem as wise as virtuous,
By spying, and avoiding, fortune's malice;
For few men rightly temper with the stars:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,
For choosing me when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens in thy nativity
Adjudg'd an olive branch, and laurel crown,
As likely to be blest in peace, and war;
And, therefore, I yield thee my free consent.

War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.

K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts.

No dissension hinder government:
I make you both protectors of this land,
While I myself will lead a private life,
And in devotion spend my latter days,
To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.

War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?

Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent;
For on thy fortune I repose myself.

War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be convinced.

We'll yoke together, like a double shadow
To Henry's body, and supply his place;
I mean, in bearing weight of government,
While he enjoys the honour, and his ease.
And, Clarence, now then, it is more than needful,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a traitor,
And all his lands and goods confiscate. 1

Clar. What else? and that succession be deter-mund'd.

War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,
Let me entreat, (for I command no more)
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,
Be sent for to return from France with speed;
For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear
My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.

Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed.

K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that,
Of whom you seem to have so tender care?

Soms. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond.

K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope: if secret powers
Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.
His looks are full of peaceful majesty;
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a sceptre; and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne.
Make much of him, my lords; for this is he,
Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.

War. What news, my friend?

Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

War. Unavourable news! but how made he escape?

Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloucester,
And the lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the forest side,
And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him,
For hunting was his daily exercise.

War. My brother was too careless of his charge.—
But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt King HENRY, WARWICK, CLARENCE,
LIEUTENANT, AND ATTENDANTS.

Soms. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's,
For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help,
And we shall have more wars, before 'tis long.
As Henry's late preaching prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond,
So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
What may befal him, to his harm and ours:
Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence to Britannia,
Till storms be past of civil enmity.

Offt. Ay; for if Edward reposesthe crown,
'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall dow.

Soms. It shall be so; he shall to Britannia.
Come therefore; let's about it speedily. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter King EDWARD, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, AND FOREIGN Forces.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, lord Hastings, and the rest,
Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,
And says that once more I shall interchange
My wedded state for Henry's regal crown.
Well have we pass'd, and now repas'se the seas,
And brought desired help from Burgundy:
What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenspurgh haven before the gates of York,
But that we enter as into our dukedoms?

Glo. The gates made fast.—Brother, I like not this.
For many men, that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

K. Edw. Tush, man! abolements must not now
affright us:

By fair or foul means we must enter in,

For hither will our friends repair to us.

Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more to summon

[Knocks.]

Enter, on the Walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brothers.

May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,

And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;

For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.

K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,

Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.

May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.

K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my duk

As being well content with that alone.

[dom. Glo. But when the fox hath once got in his nose,

He'll soon find means to make the body follow. [Aside.

Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

Open the gates: we are king Henry's friends.

May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd.

[Exeunt from above.

Glo. A wise stout captain he, and soon persuaded.

Hast. The good old mad would fain that all were well.

So 't were not long of him; but, being enter'd,

I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade

Both him and all his brothers unto reason.

Re-enter the Mayor, and Two Aldermen, below.

K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut,

But in the night, or in the time of war.

What! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys,

[ Takes his Keys.

For Edward will defend the town, and thee,

And all those friends that deign to follow me.

March. Enter Montgomery, and Forces.

Glo. Brother, this is sir John Montgomery,

Our trusty friend, unless I be deceive'd.

K. Edw. Welcome, sir John; but why come you in arms?

Mont. To help king Edward in his time of storm,

As every loyal subject ought to do.

K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but we now

Our title to the crown, and only claim

Our dukedom, till God please to send the rest.

Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again:

I came to serve a king, and not a duke.—

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

[ A March begun.

K. Edw. Nay, stay, sir John, a while; and we'll debate,

By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.

Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,

If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,

I'll leave you to your fortune, and be gone

To keep them back that come to succour you.

Why shall we fight, if you pretend no title?

Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points?

K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim:

Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous wit, now arms must rule.

Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.

Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand:

The bribe thereof will bring you many friends.

K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 'tis my right,

And Henry but usurps the diadem.

Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself,

And now will I be Edward's champion.

Hast. Sound, trumpet! Edward shall be here pro

claim'd.—

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Sold. [Reads.] "Edward the fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c."

Mont. And whose'er gainsays king Edward's right,

By this I challenge him to single fight.

[ Throws down his Gauntlet.

All. Long live Edward the fourth!

K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery, and thanks unto you all:

If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.

Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York,

And when the morning sun shall raise his car

Above the border of this horizon,

We'll forward towards Warwick, and his mates:

For, well I wot, that Henry is no soldier.—

Ah, froward Clarence! how evil it beseems thee,

To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother!

Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.

Come on, brave soldiers: doubt not of the day

And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Warwick, Clarence,

Montague, Exeter, and Oxford.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgis,

With hasty Germans, and blunt Hollanders,

Hath passe'd in safety through the narrow seas,

And with his troops doth march amain to London;

And many giddy people flock to him.

K. Hen. Let's levy men, and beat him back again.

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out,

Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,

Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;

Those will I muster up:—and thou, son Clarence,

Shalt stir up in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,

The knights and gentlemen to come with thee:—

Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham;

Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find

Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:—

And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd

In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.

My sovereign, with the loving citizens,

Like to his island girl in with the ocean,

Or modest Dian circled with her nymphs,

Shall rest in London, till we come to him.—

Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—

Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true hope.

Clar. In sign of truth I kiss your highness' hand.

K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.

Mont. Comfort, my lord:—and so I take my leave

Oxf. And thus [Kissing Henry's hand] I seal my truth, and bid adieu.

K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,

And all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet lords: let's meet at Coventry

[Exeunt War, Clar, Oxf, and Mont.

* Not in e. ² This word is not in e. ³ Some mod. eds. have needlessly transferred this speech to OXFORD.
H. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a while.
Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?
Methinks, the power, that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine.
Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.
K. Hen. That's not my fear; my mind hath got me
I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands, [fame.
Nor pos'd off their suits with slow delays;
My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath assay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their bitter-flowing tears;
I have not been desirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,
Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd. Then, why should they love Edward more than me?
No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace;
And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,
The lamb will never cease to follow him.
[Shout within. A Lancaster! A Lancaster!

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.
Enter upon the Walls, Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, Two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford? How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?
1 Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.
War. How far off is our brother Montague?— Where is the post that came from Montague?
2 Mess. By this at Dainty, with a puissant troop.

Enter Sir John Somerville.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son? And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?
Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces, And do expect him here some two hours hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.
Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies: The drum your honour hears marcheth from Warwick.
War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for friends.

Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

March. Flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Forces. [parle.

K. Edu. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a Glo. Sep. how the surly Warwick mans the wall.
War. O, unbid spite! is sportful Edward come?
Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduc'd,
That we could hear no news of his repair? [gates?
K. Edu. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city
Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee,
Call Edward king, and at his hands beg mercy,
And he shall pardon these outrages.
War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence, Confease who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?
Call Warwick patron, and be penitent,
And thou shalt still remain—the duke of York.
Glo. I thought at least, he would have said the king:
Or did he make the jest against his will?
War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?
Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give:
I'll do thee service for so good a gift.
War. 'Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother. K. Edu. Why then, 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.
War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again; And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.
K. Edu. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner: And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this; What is the body, when the head is off?
Glo. Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast, But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten, The king was sily finger'd from the dock!'
You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace.

And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.
K. Edu. 'Tis even so: yet you are Warwick still.
Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time; kneel down, kneel down.

Nay, when? strike now, or else the iron cools.
War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow, And with the other fling it at thy face, Than bear so low a nail to strike to thee.
K. Edu. Sail how thou canst, have wind and thy friend, This hand, fast wound about thy coal-black hair, Shall, whiles thy head is warm, and new cut off, Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood.— "Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more."

Enter Oxford, with Drum and Colours.

War. O cheerful colours! see, where Oxford comes [Oxford and his Forces enter the City.

Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.
K. Edu. So other foes may set upon our backs.

Stand we in good array; for they, no doubt, Will issue out again, and bid us battle: If not, the city being but of small defence, We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.
War. O! welcome Oxford, for we want thy help.

Enter Montague, with Drum and Colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster!
[He and his Forces enter the City.

Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason,
Even with the dearest blood your bodies bear.
K. Edu. The harder match'd, the greater victory.
My mind presageth happy gain, and conquest.

Enter Somerset, with Drum and Colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!

[He and his Forces enter the City.
SCENE III.

KING HENRY VI.

Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset,
Have sold their lives unto the house of York;
And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter CLARENCE, with Drum and Colours.

War. And lo! where George of Clarence sweeps along,
Of force enough to bid his brother battle;
With whom an upright zeal to right prevails,
More than the nature of a brother's love.—

[GLOSTER and CLARENCE whisper.

Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick calls,
Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means?

Taking the red Rose out of his Hat.

Look here, I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lume the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou, Warwick,
That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural,
To bend the fatal instruments of war
Against his brother, and his lawful king?
Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath:
To keep that oath, were more impious
Than Jephtha's, when he sacrificed his daughter.
I am so sorry for my trespass made,
That to deserve well at my brother's hands,
I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe.
With resolution, whereas'er I meet thee,
(As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad)
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.
And so, proud-hearted Warwick. I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.

Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;
And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd,

Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate.

Glo. Welcome, good Clarence: this is brother-like.

War. O passing traitor, perjur'd, and unjust!

K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town and fight,
Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?

War. Alas! I am not coopt here for defence:
I will away towards Barnet presently,
And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

K. Edw. Yea, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way;
Lord, to the field! Saint George, and victory!

March. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Field of Battle near Barnet.

Alarums, and Excursions. Enter King Edward, bringing in Warwick wounded.

K. Edw. So, lie thou there: die thou, and die our fear,
For Warwick was a bus; that fear'd us all.

Now, Montague, sit fast: I seek for thee,
That Warwick's bones may keep thine company. [Exit. War.

War. Ah! who is nigh? come to me, friend or foe,
And tell me, who is victor, York, or Warwick?

Why ask I that? my mangled body shows,
My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows,
That I must yield my body to the earth,
And by my fall the conquest to my foes.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.
These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil,
Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,
To search the secret treasons of the world:
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,
Were like'd oft to kingly sepulchres;
For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?
And who durst smile when Warwick bent his brow?
Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood!
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Even now forsake me; and, of all my lands,
Is nothing left me, but my body's length.
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign. but earth and dust?
And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter OXFORD and SOMERSET.

Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as we are, we Might recover all our loss again.
The queen from France hath brought a puissant power;
Even now we heard the news. Ah, couldst thou fly!
War. Why, then I would not fly.—Ah, Montague!
If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile.
Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thou didst,
Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood,
That gles my lips, and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah, Warwick! Montague hath breath'd his last:
And to the latest gasp, cried out for Warwick,
And said—"Commend me to my valiant brother;" And more he would have said; and more he spoke,
Which sounded like a cannon in a vault,
That might not be distinguish'd: but, at last,
I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan,—
"Oh, farewell Warwick!"

War. Sweet rest his soul!—Fly, lords, and save yourselves;
For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in heaven.

[Dies. Ox. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power!

[Exeunt, bearing off Warwick's Body.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph; with CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,
And we are crown'd with wreaths of victory.
But in the midst of this bright shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his casewall western bed:
I mean, my lords, those powers, that the queen
Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast,
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,
And blow it to the source from whence it came:—
Thy very beams will dry those vapours up,
For every cloud engenders not a storm.

Glo. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand strong,
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd,
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

K. Edw. We are advertiz'd by our loving friends,
That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury.
We, having now the best at Barnet field,
Will thither straight, for willingness ride way;
And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
In every county as we go along.
Strike up the drum! cry—Courage! and away.

[Flourish Exeunt.]
SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewkesbury.

March. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men never sit and wail their loss,
But cheerily seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown over-board,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallowed’d in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still: I’ll meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea,
And give more strength to that which hath too much;
While in his moon the ship splits on the rock,
Which industry and courage might have sav’d?
Ah! what a shame, ah! what a fault were this.
Say, Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Montague our top-mast; what of him?
Our slaughter’d friends the tackles; what of these?
Why, is not Oxford here another anchor,
And Somerset another goodly mast?
The friends of France our shrouds and tackling?
And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I?
For once allow’d the skilful pilot’s charge?
We will not from the helm to sit and weep,
But keep our course, though the rough wind say so,
From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.
As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?
And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.
Say, you can swim; alas! ’tis but a while:
Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink:
Beside the rock; the tide will wash you off,
Or else you famish; that’s a threefold death.
This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
If case some one of you would fly from us,
That there’s no hop’d-for mercy with the brothers,
More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks.
Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided,
’Twere childish weakness to lament, or fear.

Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit
Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
I speak not this, as doubting any here;
For, did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away betimes,
Lost in our need he might infect another,
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any such be here, as God forbid!
Let him depart before we need his help.

Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage,
And warriors faint! why, ’t were perpetual shame.—
O, brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: long may’st thou live,
To bear his image, and renew his glories!

Som. And he, that will not fight for such a hope,
Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day,
If he arise, be mock’d and wonder’d at.

Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset:—sweet Oxford,
thanks.

Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand,
Ready to fight: therefore, be resolute.

Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy
To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he’s deceiv’d: we are in readiness.

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart to see your forwards
Oxf. Here pitch our battle: hence we will not bud.

Flourish and March. Enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloster, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorn wood,
Which, by the heavens’ assistance and your strength
May by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
I need not add more fuel to your fire.
For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out.
Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.

Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what should say,
My tears gainsay; for every word I speak,
Ye see, I drink the water of my eye.
Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your sovereign is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp’d,
His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain,
His statutes cancel’d, and his treasure spent;
And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil.
You fight in justice: then, in God’s name, lords,
Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

[Exeunt both Armies.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Same.

Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a Borm
Then enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloucester, and Forces; with Queen Margaret, Oxford, and Somerset, Prisoners.

K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous brook
Away with Oxford to Hammers’ castle straight:
For Somerset, off with his guilty head.
Go, bear them hence: I will not hear them speak.
Oxf. For my part, I’ll not trouble thee with word.
Som. Nor I: but stoop with patience to my force.
[Exeunt Oxford and Somerset.

Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublesome war,
To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made, that who sez
Edward
Shall have a high reward, and he his life.

Glo. It is: and, lo! where youthful Edward and Enter Soldiers, with Prince Edward.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant: let us hear him speak.

[Edw. What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?
Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,
For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn’d me to?

Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious;
Suppose that I am now my father’s mouth:
Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel thou,
Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,
Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.

Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv’d,
Glo. That thou might still have worn the petticoat
And ne’er have stoln the breech from Lancaster.
Prince. Let’s mock fable in a winter’s night;
His curios riddles sort not with this place.
Glo. By heaven, brat, I’ll plague you for that.
Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to
Glo. For God’s sake, take away this captive soul.
Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crookback rather.

K. Edw. Peace! willful boy, or I will charm thy tongue.
SCENE VI.—London. A Room in the Tower.

KING HENRY VI. 507

Glo. Good day, my lord. What, at your book so hard? K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: my lord, I should say rather: "Tis sin to flatter; good was little better: Good Glosster, and good devil, were alike, And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

Glo. Sirerah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer.

[Exit Lieutenant.

K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf. So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece, And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.— What scene of death hath Roceius now to act? Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind: The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

K. Hen. The bird, that hath been limed in a bush, With trembling wings misdoubteth every bough; And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird, Have now the fatal object in my eye, Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Glo. Why, what a peevish soul was that of Crete, That taught his son the office of a owl? And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd. K. Hen. I. Dædalus; my poor boy, Icarus; Thy father, Minos, that denied our course; The sun, that seal'd the wings of my sweet boy, Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea, Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life. Ah! I kill me with thy weapon, not with words. My breast can better brook thy dagger's point, Than can my ears that tragic history. But wherefore dost thou come? is 't for my life? Glo. Think'st thou I am an executioner? K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art: If murdering innocents be executing, Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption. K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd, when first thou didst presume, Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine. And thus I prophesy—the earth a thousand, Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear; And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's, And many an orphan's water-standing, eye,— Men for their sons', wives for their husbands', Orphans for their parents' timeless death, Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born. The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign; The night-crow cried, a boding luckless tune;* Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempest shook down trees: The raven rock'd her on the chimney's top, And chattering pines in dismal discord sung. Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain, And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope; To wit,—an indigest deformed lump, Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree. Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou wast born, To signify, thou canst not to bite the world: And, if the rest be true which I have heard, Thou canst't. Glo. I'll hear no more.—Dis, prophet, in thy speech.

[Stabs him.

SCENE VI. Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my duty: you are all unprofitable. Lascivious Edward, and thou perjur'd George, And thou mis-shapen Dick,—I tell ye all, I am your better, traitors as ye are; And thou, wast not my father's right and mine.

K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this railer here.

[Stabs him.

Glo. Spraw'list thou? take that, to end thy agony.

[Stabs him.

Clar. And there's for twittering me with perjury.

[Clar. stabs him.

Q. Mar. O, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. [Offers to kill her.

K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold! for we have done too much.

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king, my brother. I'll hence to London on a serious matter: Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.

Clar. What? what?

Glo. The Tower! the Tower! [Exit.

Q. Mar. O, Ned! sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy;

Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!— They, that stabb'd Caesar shed no blood at all, Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame, If this foul deed were by to sequel it: He was a man: this, in respect, a child; And men ne'er spend their fury on a child. What's worse than murderer, that I may name it? No, no; my heart will burst, an if I speak; And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.— Butchers and villains! bloody cannibals! How sweet a plant have you untimely crop'd! You have no children, butchers! if you had, The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse: But, if you ever chance to have a child, Look in his youth to have him so cut off, As, deathsmen, you have rid this sweet young prince! K. Edw. Away with her! go, bear her hence perforce. Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despacht me here; Here abhorr'd thy sword, I'll pardon thee my fear. What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou. Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.

Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear I would not do it? Q. Mar. Ay, but thou uset to forewear thyself: 'T was sin before, but now 't is charity. What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher, Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou? Thou art not here: murder is thy alma-deed; Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put't back.

K. Edw. Away, I say! I charge ye, bear her hence. Q. Mar. So come to you, and yours, as to this prince! [Exit.

K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess, To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head. Now discharge the common sort With pay and thanks, and let's away to London, And see our gentle queen how well she fares: By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. [Exeunt.

*equal: in f.s. * The scene in the folio is "on the walls of the Tower": that of the text from the "True Tragedy". 2 In f.s. the rest of the stage direction is: the Lieutenant attending. Enter Glosster. 3 See p. 506. 4 Shyly. 5 about luckless time: in f.s. 6 Reast
Glo. What! will the aspiring blood of Lancaster
Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.
See, how my sword weeps for the poor king’s death!
O, may such purple tears be always shed
From those that wish the downfall of our house!—
If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither,

[Stabs him again.

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.
Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of;
For I have often heard my mother say,
I came into the world with my legs forward.
Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
And seek their ruin that usurp’d our right?
The midwife wonder’d; and the women cried,
“O, Jesus bless us! he is born with teeth”;
And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Then, since the heavens have shap’d my body so,
Let hell make crook’d my mind to answer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother;
And this word love, which greybeards call divine,
Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am myself alone.—
Clarence, beware: thou keep’st me from the light;
But I will sort a pitchy day for thee:
For I will bus abroad such prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearful of his life;
And then, to purge his fear, I’ll be thy death.
King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:
Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest;
Counting myself but bad, till I be best.—
I’ll throw thy body in another room,
And triumph, Henry in thy day of doom.

[Exit with the Body.

SCENE VII.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

King Edward is discovered sitting on his Throne.¹
Queen Elizabeth; a Nurse with the Infant Prince,
Clarence, Hastings, and others.

K. Edu. Once more we sit in England’s royal throne.

Re-purchas’d with the blood of enemies.
What valiant fos-men, like to autumn’s corn,
Have we mow’d down, in tops of all their pride?
Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown’d
For hardy and redoubted² champions:

Two Cliffsords, as the father and the son;
And two Northumberlands; two braver men
Ne’er spurr’d their coursers at the trumpet’s sound:
With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Mus tague.
That in their chains fetter’d the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roard.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.—

Enter Gloster behind.³

Come hither, Bees, and let me kiss my boy.—
Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles, and myself,
Have in our armours watch’d the winter’s night;
Went all a-foot in summer’s scalding heat,
That thou mightest repose the crown in peace;
And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.
Glo. I’ll blast his harvest, if your head were hid;
[And
For yet I am not look’d on in the world.
This should was ordain’d so thick, to beave;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back—
Work thou the way, and that shall execute.

K. Edu. Clarence, and Gloster, love my lovely son,
And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.

Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty.
I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe. [Kissing
K. Edu. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother thanks.

Glo. And, that I love the tree from where the sprangst, [Exeunt the Infant.

Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit.—

[K. Edu.] To say the truth, so Judas kiss’d his master,
And cried—all hail! when as he meant—all harm.
K. Edu. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country’s peace, and brothers’ love.

Clar. What will your grace have done with Marcus Reignier, her father, to the king of France
Hath pawn’d the Sicilia and Jerusalem.
And hither have they sent it for her ransom.
K. Edu. Away with her, and waft her hence!
France.—

And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as beft the pleasure of the court?
Sound, drums and trumpets!—farewell, sour army;
For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exeunt

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.¹

But I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd thus of fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time,
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And so lamely and unfinished,
That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them;
Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
KING RICHARD III.

O! belike, his majesty hath some intent, Tho' you should be new christen'd in the Tower. But what's the matter, Clarence? May I know?

Clar. Yes, Richard, when I know; but I protest, As yet do not; but, as I can learn, He hearkens after prophesies and dreams; And from the cross-rod plucks the letter G, And says, a wizard told him, that by G His issue disinherited should be; And, for my name of George begins with G, It follows in his thought that I am he. These, as I learn, and such like toys as these, Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rule'd by women, 'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower: My lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she, That tempts him to this har' extremity. Was it not she, and that good man of worship, Antony Woodville, her same brother there, That made him send lord Hastings to the Tower, From whence this present day he is deliver'd? We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think, there is no man secure, But the queen's kindred, and night-walking herdsmen That trudge betwixt the king and mistress Shore. Heard you not, what an humble suppliant Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. I'll tell you what; I think, it is our way, If we will keep in favour with the king, To be her men, and wear her livery: The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself, Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen, Are mighty goasips in our monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me: His majesty hath straitly given in charge, That no man shall have private conference, Of what degree soever, with your brother.

Glo. Even so; an please your worship, Brakenbury, You may partake of any thing we say. We speak no treason, man: we say, the king Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen Well heeded in years; fair, and not jealous:— We say that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot, A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue; And the queen's kindred are made gentlefolk. How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do.

Glo. Nought to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee, fellow, He that doth naught with her, excepting one, Were best to do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord?

Glo. Her husband, knave. Wouldst thou betray me?

Brak. I do beseech your grace to pardon me; and withal, Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey.

Glo. We are the queen's abjects, and must obey.— Brother, farewell: I will unto the king; And whatsoever you will employ me in, Were it to call king Edward and his widow sister, I will perform it to enfranchise you. Mean time, this deep disgrace in brotherhood Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Clar. I know, it pleaseth neither of us well.

Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long; I will deliver you, or else lie for you.

Mean time, have patience. [Embracing his Clar. I must performe: fare-well!

[Exeunt CLARENCE, BRAKENBURY, and GLOUCESTER.

Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt never return Simple, plain Clarence.—I do love thee so, That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven, If heaven will take the present at our hands.

But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord.

Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain.

Well are you welcome to this open air.

How hath your Lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must. But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks, That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too, For they that were your enemies are his, And have prevail'd as much on him as you.

Hast. More pity, that the eagles should be mew'd, While kites and buzzards prey on liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so sad abroad, as this at home:— The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy, And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by Saint Paul!, that news is bad indeed O! he hath kept an evil diet long, And over-much consum'd his royal person: 'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

Where is he? in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit HASTINGS.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die, Till George be pack'd with posthaste up to heaven. I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence, With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments; And, if I fail not in my deep intent, Clarence hath not another day to live: Which done, God take king Edward to his mercy. And leave the world for me to bustle in, For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter. What though I kill her husband, and her father? The readiest way to make the wench amends, Is to become her husband, and her father: The which will I; not all so much for love, As for another secret close intent, By marrying her which I must reach unto. But yet I run before my horse to market: Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter the Corps of King HENRY THE SIXTH, borne in:

Open Coffin, Gentlemen, bearing Halberds, to guard s; and Lady Anne as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load, If honour may be shrouded in a hearse, Whilst I a while obscenously lament Th' untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.— Poor key could figurd of her beauty!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster! Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood, Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost, To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry,—
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus’d infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave
By circumstance to curse thy cursed self.

Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have
Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Fouler than heart can think thee, let us cast
No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glo. By such despair I should excuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excus’d
For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glo. Say, that I slew them not?

Anne. Then say they were not slain.⁶
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.

Glo. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward’s hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: queen Margaret saw
Thy murderous falsehood smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt upon my guileless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,
That never dream’d on aught but butcheries.

Didst thou not kill this king?

Glo. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedge-hog? then, God grant me too.

Thou mayst be damned for that wicked deed!
O! he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter⁴ for the King of heaven that hath him.

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glo. Let him thank me, that holp to send him thither,
For he was fitter for that place than earth.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.

Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name
Anne. Some dungeon.

Glo. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest.

Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glo. I know so.—But, gentle lady Anne,—
To leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fall something² into a slower method,
Is not the causer of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry, and Edward,
As blameful as the executioner?

Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accrues² effect.

Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect;
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live⁴ one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Glo. These eyes could not⁴ endure that³ beauty’s wreck;
You should not blemish it, if I stood by:
As all the world is cheered by the sun,
So by that; it is my day, my life.

Anne. Black night o’ershadow thy day, and death thy life!’

Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng’d on him that loveth thee.
Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be reveng’d on him that kill’d my husband.
Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.
Anne. His better death doth not breathe upon the earth.
Glo. He lives that loves you better than he could.
Anne. Name him. glo.
Plantagenet. Anne.
Glo. Why, that was he.
Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.
Anne. Where is he?
Glo. Here: [She spits at him.] Why
dost thou spit at me?
Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!
Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.
Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.
Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Anne. Would they were basliks, to strike thee dead!
Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once,
For now they kill me with a living death.
These eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham’d their aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear;
No, when my father York, and Edward went
To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,
When black-faced Clifford shook his sword at him;
Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father’s death,
And twenty times made pause to sob and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,
Like trees beda’d with rain; in that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear:
And what these sorrows could not thense exhale,
Thy beauty hails, and made them blind with weeping.
I never sued to friend, nor enemy;
My tongue could never learn sweet smoothing word;
But now thy beauty is propos’d my foe,
My proud heart ause, and prompts my tongue to speak.
[She looks scornfully at him.]
Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made
For kisings, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,
And let the soul forth that adoreth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.
[He lays his Breast open: she offers at it with his Sword.
Nay, do not pause; for I did kill king Henry:
But it was thy beauty that provok’d me.
Nay, now despacht; I was that stab’d young Edward;
But it was thy heavenly face that set me on.
[She lets fall the Sword.
Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death,
I will not be thy executioner.
Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.
[Taking up the Sword.
Anne. I have already.
Glo. That was in thy rage:
Speak it again, and even with the word,
This hand, which for thy love did kill thy love,
Shall for thy love kill a far truer love:
To both their deaths shalt thou be necessary.
Anne. I would I knew thy heart.
Glo. 'Tis figur’d in my tongue.
Anne. I fear me, both are false.
Glo. Then, never man was true.
Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.
Glo. For, then, my peace is made.
Anne. That shalt thou know hereafter.
Glo. But shall I live in hope? [Sheathing his Sword!
Anne. All men, I hope, live so.
Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.
Anne. To take, is not to give. [She puts on the Ring.
Glo. Look, how my ring encompasseth thy finger,
Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart;
Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy poor devoted servant may
But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.
Anne. What is it?
Glo. That it may please you leave these sad designs
To him that hath most cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby-place.
Where (after I have solemnly int’rd,
At Chertsey monastery, this noble king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears)
I will with all expedient duty see you:
For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this boon.
Anne. With all my heart; and much it joyes me too,
To see you are become so penitent.—
Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me.
Glo. Bid me farewell.
Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve;
But since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.
[Exeunt Lady Anne, Tressel, and Berkley.
Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?
Glo. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming.
[Exeunt the rest, with the Corp.
Was ever woman in this humour woc’d?
Was ever woman in this humour won?
I’ll have her, but I will not keep her long.
What! I that kill’d her husband, and his father,
To take her in her heart’s extremest hate;
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
The bleeding witness of my14 hatred by,
Having God, her conscience, and these bars against me,
And I no friends15 to back my suit with16,
But the plain devil, and dissembling looks,
And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing! Ha!
Hath she forgot already that brave prince,
Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since,
Stab’d in my angry mood at Tewksbury?
A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—
Framed in the prodigality of nature,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—
The spacious world cannot again afford:
And will she yet abuse17 her eyes on me,
That cropp’d the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward’s moiety?
On me, that halt, and am mis-shapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggarly denier,
I do mistake my person all this while:
not in the quarto.  4 nothing; in quarto.  5 bosom; in quarto.  6 are.

Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:
Since I am crept in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.
But, first, I 'll turn you' fellow in his grave,
And then return lamenting to my love—
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.

Grey. Have patience, madam: there's no doubt, his majesty
Will soon recover his accustom'd health.

Riv. Is it concluded, he shall be protector?

Grey. No. It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be. If the king miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace.

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Grey. The countess Richmond, good my lord of Stanley,
To your good prayer will scarcely say amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe
The envious slander of her false accusers;
Or, if she be accuse'd on true report,
Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no groundless malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?

Buck. Madam, good hope: his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him?

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement
Between the duke of Gloucester and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain;
And seeks to warm them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. Would all were well!—But that will never Fear our happiness, is the height.

Grey. Brother of Gloucester, stamping angrily, with Hastings, and Dorset.

Glo. They do me wrong. And I will not endure it.—
He are they, that complain unto the king, hat I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not?
holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly,

That fill his ears with such dissentious rumours
Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,

Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and aplish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemey.

CANNOT a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abus'd
With sullen, sly, insinuating Jacks?

Grey. The worm in all this presence speaks your grace?

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.
When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?
Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?
A plague upon you all! His royal grace, (Whom God preserve better than you would wish!) Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing-while.

But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloucester, you mistake the matter
The king, on his own royal disposition,
And not provok'd by any suitors else,
Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself.

Against my children, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather

The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell;—the world is grown so bad,
That wenches make prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloucester:

You envy my advancement, and my friends.

God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that I have need of you:
Our brother is imprison'd by your means;

Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while many great promotions
Are daily given, to ennable those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By him that rais'd me to this careful height
From that contended hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty
Against the duke of Clarence; but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspicions.

Glo. You may deny, that you were not the mean
Of my lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord: for—

Glo. She may, lord Rivers.—why, who knows not so?
She may do more, sir, than denying that:
She may help you to many fair preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high desert.

What may she not? she may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Riv. What, marry, may she?

Glo. What, marry, may she? marry with a king,
A bachelor, and a handsome striping too.

Riv. Wis, your grandson had a worser match.

Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloucester, I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs:
By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty,
Of those gross taunts that oft I have endure'd.
I had rather be a country serving-maid,
Than a great queen, with this condition,
To be thus taunted, scorn'd, and baited at:

Small joy have I in being England's queen.
Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech him!—[Aside.]

Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me.

Glo. What! threat you me with telling of the king?
Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said,
I will avouch in presence of the king:
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
'Tis time to speak; my pains are quite forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I do remember them too well. —[Aside.]

Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Tewkesbury.
Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,
I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;
A woe-der-out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends:
To royalize his blood, I spent mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or thine.

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband Grey,
Were factious for the house of Lancaster —
And, Rivers, so were you. — Was not your husband
In Margaret's battle at Saint Alban's plain?
Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What you have been ere this, and what you are;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A mur'drous villain, and so still thou art. —[Aside.]

Glo. For all Clarence did for sake his father Warwick,
Ay, and forewore himself,—which Jeach pardon! —
Q. Mar. Which God revenge! —[Aside.]

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the crown;
And, for his meed, poor lord, he is mew'd up.
I would to God, my heart were Clint like Edward's,
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine:
I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. Mar. Hee thee to hell for shame, and leave this world, —[Aside.]

Thou accurs'd! there thy kingdom is.

Riv. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days,
Which here you urge to prove us enemies,
We follow'd then our lord, our sovereign king;
So should we you, if you should be our king.

Glo. If I should be? — I had rather be a pedlar.
Far be it from my heart the thought thereof!
Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country's king,
As little joy you may suppose in me.

That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof; —[Aside.

For I am she, and altogether joyless.
I can no longer hold me patient. —[Coming forward. They all start.

Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd from me!
Which of you trembles not, that looks on me?
If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects,
Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like rebels? —

Aye! gentle villain, do not turn away. —[ight.

Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what mak'st thou in my
Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd;
That will I make, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished, on pain of death?
Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banishment,

A husband, and a son, thou ow'st to me,—
And thou, my kingdom,—all of you, allegiance!
This sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brow with paper
And with thy scorns drew'st rivers from his eyes;
And, then, to dry them, gay'dst the duke a clout
Sheep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland;
His curse, then from bitterness of soul
Denounce'd against thee, are all fallen upon thee,
And we, for what, hath plac'd us in thy bloody deed.
Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent
Haet! O! it was the foulest deed to slay that babe,
And the most merciless, that ere was heard of.
Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported
Dors. No man but prophesied revenge for it.
Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it
Q. Mar. What! were you snarling all, before I came Ready to catch each other by the throat.
And turn you all your hatred now on me?
Did York's dread curse prevail so much with heaven?
That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,
Their kingdom's loss, my woful banishment,
Should all but answer for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven? —
Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses! —
Though not by war, by surfeit die your king,
As ours by murder, to make him a king;
Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,
For Edward, our son, that was prince of Wales.
Die in his youth by like untimely violence!
Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self!
Long may'st thou live, to wail thy children's death; —
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine!
Long die thy happy days before thy death;
And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,
Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!
Riv. And well, thou, were you standers by,
And so wast thou, lord Hastings, when my son
Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live his natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off!
Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd hag,
Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for the shalt hear me.
If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O! let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul!
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream
Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!
Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooted hog!
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The stain of nature, and the scar of hell!
Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!
Thou rag of honour! thou detested—
Glo. Margaret.
Q. Mar. Richard!
KING RICHARD III.

515

Glo. I cary thee mercy then; for I did think,
That thou had'st call'd me all these bitter names.
Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply.
I let me make the period to my curse.
Glo. 'Tis done by me, and ends in—Margaret.
Q. Eliz. Thus have you break'd thy curse against yourself.
Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune;
For what thou say'st thou sugar on that bottle, spider,
Those deadly web enwreath thee about?
O, fool! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself.
He day will come, that thou shalt wish for me
To help thee curse this pois'rous bunch-back'd toad.
Host. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse,
Let thy harm thou move our patience.
Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you; you have all mov'd mine.
Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty.
Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty,
Each to be your queen, and you my subjects.
Serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty.
Dor. Dispute not with her, she is lunatick.
Q. Mar. Peace, master marquess! you are malapser.
For new stamp of honour is scarce current.
That your nobility could judge,
'At were to lose it, and be miserable!
Yet that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
If they fail they dash themselves to pieces.
Glo. Good counsel, marry—learn it, learn it, marquess.
Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.
Glo. Ay, and much more; but I was born so high:
My every buildeth in the cedar's top,
My dainties with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade—alas! alas!
Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Beheld that out-shining beam thy cloudy wrath
In eternal darkness folded up.
My every buildeth in my every nest—
383! that seest it, do not suffer it:
It was won with blood, lost be it so!
Buck. Peace, peace! for shame, if not for charity.
Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
Charitably with me have you dealt,
Shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd,
Charity is outrage, life my shame,
In that shame still live my sorrow's rage!
Buck. Have done, have done.
Q. Mar. O, princely Buckingham! I'll kiss thy hand,
Sign of league and amity with thee:
My garments are not spotted with our blood,
Thou within the compass of my curse.
Buck. Nor one here; for curses never pass
The lips of those that breathe them in the air.
Q. Mar. I will not think but they ascend the sky,
And awake God's gentlesleeping peace.
Buckingham! I take heed of yonder dog:
K. when he fawne, he bites: and, when he bites,
Venom tooth will rankle to the death:
We not to do with him, beware of him;
Death, and hell, have set their marks on him,
And all their ministers attend on him.
Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Buckingham?
Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.
Q. Mar. What! dost thou scorn me for my gentle
counsel,
And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?
O! but remember this another day,
When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow,
And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess.—
Live each of you the subjects to his hate,
And he to yours, and all of you to God's! [Exit.
Host. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.
Riv. And so doth mine. I muse; why she's at liberty.
Glo. I cannot blame her: by God's holy mother,
She hath had too much wrong, and I repent
My part thereof, that I have done to her.
Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.
Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.
I was too hot to do somebody good,
That is too cold in thinking of it now.
Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;
He is rank'd up to fasting for his pains—
God pardon them that are the cause thereof!
Riv. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion,
To pray for them that have done scath to us.
Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd;
For had I cur'd now, I had cur'd myself.
Enter Catesby.
Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,—
And for your grace, and you, my noble lords.
Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come.—Lords, will you go with me?
Riv. We wait upon your grace.
[Exeunt all but GLOSTER.
Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.
The secret mischief that I set abroach,
I lay unto the grievous charge of others.
Clarence, whom I, indeed, have cast in darkness,
I do beweep to many simple guls;
Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;
And tell them, 'tis the queen and her allies,
That stir the king's heart as against his brother.
Now, they believe it; and withal whet me
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey;
But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,
Tell them, that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villainy
With odd old ends stol'n ofthor of holy writ,
And seem a saint when most I play the devil.
Enter two Murderers.
Buck. So! here come my executioners.—
How now, my merry, stout resolved mates!
Are you now going to dispatch this thing?
1 Mard. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.
Glo. Well thought upon; I have it here about me.
[Give the Warrant
When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.
But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,
Withal obdurate: do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,
May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.
1 Mard. Tut, tut! my lord, we will not stand to prate:
Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

[End of text]
G't. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools' eyes kill tear.
I like 'out, lads—about your business* straight.
Go, go, d—спект.
1 Murd. We will, my noble lord. [Exeunt.

Enter CLARENCE and BRAINTREE.

Bra'k. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
Clar. O! I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,*
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not bring another soe night to night,
Though 't were to buy a world of happy days,
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Bra'k. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me.

Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloster,
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatchets: thence we look'd toward England,
And cried up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster,
That had befell us. As we pa'd along
Upon the gibby footing of the hatchets,
Methought, that Gloster stumbled: and, in falling*,
Struck me (that thought to stay him) over-board,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.
O Lord! methought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
What sights of ugly* death within mine eyes!
Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men that fishes gape'd upon
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea.:
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That wou'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.
Bra'k. Had you some lovers, in that time of death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?
Clar. Methought I had, and often did strive
To yield the ghost;* but still the envious flood
Stoop'd* in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find* the empty, vast, and wandering air; But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Bra'k. A wa'k'd you not in this sore agony?

Clar. No, no: my dream was lengthen'd after life.
O! then began the tempest to my soul! I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that sour* ferryman which posts wrote of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cried* aloud,* "What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?"
And so he vanish'd. Then, came wandering by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled blue: and he said* aloud,* "
Clarke is come,—false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,—
That stab'd me in the field by Tewksbury—
Seize on him, furious! take him unto torment!*"

With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise,
I trembling wa'k'd, and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell;
Such terrible impression made my* dream.

Bra'k. No marble, lord, though it affrighted you,
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. Ah, keeper, keeper! I have done these things
That now give* evidence against my soul.
For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites me—
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet the same thy wrath on me, my deadly,
O, spare my guiltless wife and my poor children!—"
Keeper, I pray thee, sit by me awhile;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

Bra'k. I will, my lord: God give your grace rest.—

[Clarence sleeps.

Sorrow breaks seasons, and repose hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noon-tide night.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares:
So that, between their titles, and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward name.

Enter the two Murderers.

1 Murd. Ho! who's here?

Bra'k. What wouldst thou, fellow, and how canst thou hinder?

1 Murd. I would speak with Clarence; and I can hither on my legs.

Bra'k. What! so brief?

2 Murd. 'Tis better, sir, than to be tedious—
Let him see our commission, and talk no more.

[Apaper delivered to Bra'kney, who reads it
Bra'k. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands.
I will not reason what is meant hereby.
Because I will be guiltless from the meaning:
There lies the duke's seal, and there the keys.
I'll to the guard-hovel, and signify to him.
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

1 Murd. You may, sir;* it is a point of wisdom:
Fare you well. [Exit Bra'kney.

2 Murd. What shall we stab him as he sleeps?

1 Murd. No; he'll say, 'tis done cowardly, will he wakes.

2 Murd. Why, he shall never wake until the said judgment day.

1 Murd. Why, then 'll he say, we stab'd him sleep.

2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgment, he bred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Murd. What! art thou afraid?

2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant; but to be damn'd for killing him, from the which no man can defend me.

1 Murd. I thought, thou hadst been remorseful.

2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

1 Murd. 'Tis that to the duke of Gloster, and him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I pray thee, stay a little: I hope a compassionate* humour of mine will change; it will not hold me in but while one tells twenty.

KING RICHARD III.

Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful.
I charge you, as you hope to have redemption
By Christ’s dear blood shed for our grievous sins,
That you depart, and lay no hands on me:
The deed you undertake is damnable.
1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command
2 Murd. And he, that hath commanded, is our king.
Clar. Erroneous vessels! the great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder: will you, then,
Spurn at his edict, and fulfill a man’s?
Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee.
For false forswearing, and for murder too.
Thou didst receive the sacrament, to fight
In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.
1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God,
Didst break the holy vow, in thy treacherous blade.
Unrippest the bowels of thy sovereign’s son.
2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.
1 Murd. How canst thou urge God’s dreadful law to us,
When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?
Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?
For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:
He sends you not to murder me for this;
For in that sin he is as deep as I.
If God will be avenged for the deed,
O! know you yet, he doth it publicly.
Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm:
He needs no indirect or lawless course,
To cut off those that have offended him.
1 Murd. Who made thee, then, a bloody minister,
When gallant-springing, brave Plantagenet.
That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?
Clar. My brother’s love, the devil, and my rage.
1 Murd. Thy brother’s love, our duty, and thy faults.
Provoke us, hither now to slaughter thee.
Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;
I am his brother, and I love him well.
If you are hir’d for meed, go back again,
And I will send you to my brother Gloster,
Who shall reward you better for my life,
Than Edward will for tidings of my death.
2 Murd. You are deceiv’d: your brother Gloster hates you.
Clar. O! no; he loves me, and he holds me dear.
Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Ay, so we will.
Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York
Bless’d his three sons with his victorious arm,
And charg’d us from his soul to love each other,
He little thought of this divided friendship:
Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep.
1 Murd. Ay, mill-stones; as he lesson’d us to weep.
Clar. O! do not slander him, for he is kind.
1 Murd. Right; as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself.
’Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.
Clar. It cannot be; for he bewept my fortune,
And hugg’d me in his arms, and swore, with sooth,
That he would labour my delivery.
1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth’s thraldom to the joys of heaven.

1 Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?
2 Murd. ‘Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.
1 Murd. Remember our reward, when this deed’s done.
2 Murd. Zounds! he dies: I had forgot the reward.
1 Murd. Where’s thy conscience now?
2 Murd. O! in the duke of Gloster’s purse.
1 Murd. When he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.
2 Murd. T’is no matter; let it go: there’s few or none, will entertain it.
1 Murd. What, if it come to thee again?
2 Murd. I’ll meddle with it; it is a dangerous thing, it makes a man a coward: a man cannot steal, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour’s wife, but it detects him: ‘tis a blushing shame-faced spirit, that on iniquities in a man’s bosom; it fills a man full of obstacles; it makes me once restore a purse of gold, that by three letters I beggar any man that keeps it; it turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man that means to live well, endeavors to trust to himself, and live without it.
1 Murd. Zounds! it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.
2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe me not: he would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh.
1 Murd. I am strong-framed; he cannot prevail with me.
2 Murd. Spoke like a tall man, that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work?
1 Murd. Take him on the coastrind with the hilts of his sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-butt in the next room.
2 Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of him.
1 Murd. Soft! he wakes.
2 Murd. Strike.
1 Murd. No; we’ll reason with him.
1 Murd. Thou shalt have wine enough, my lord, anon.
Clar. In God’s name, what art thou?
1 Murd. A man, as you are.
Clar. But not, as I am, royal.
1 Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.
Clar. Thy voice is thundery, but thy looks are humble.
1 Murd. My voice is now the king’s, my looks mine own.
Clar. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou speak.
‘Our eyes do mason: why look you pale?’
Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?
Both Murd. To, to, to——
Clar. To murder me?
Both Murd. Ay, Ay.
Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so, and therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.
Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?
1 Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.
Clar. I shall be reconcile’d to him again.
2 Murd. Never, my lord: therefore prepare to die.
Clar. Are you drawn forth among a world of men,
To slay the innocent? What is my offence?
Is there the evidence that doth accuse me?
That lawful quest have given their verdict up into the frowning judge? or who pronounce’d the bitter sentence of poor Clarence’ death?
2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.

Clar. Have you that holy feeling in your souls,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your own souls so blind,
That you will war with God by murdering me?—
O! sirs, consider, they that set you on
To do this deed, will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent, and save your souls.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,
Being pent from liberty, as I am now,
If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,
Would not entreat for life? As you would beg
Were you in my distress, so pity me.¹

Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.—
My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;
O! if thine eye be not a flatterer,
Come thou on my side, and entreat for me.

A beauteous prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

ACT II.

Enter King Edward, led in sick. Queen Elizabeth, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey,
and others.

K. Edu. Why, so:—now have I done a good day's work.—

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassage
From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;
And more at peace² my soul shall part to heaven,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Rivers, and Hastings, take each other's hand;
Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudg Ing hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like.

K. Edu. Take heed, you daily not before your king;
Lost he, that is the supreme king of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love.

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart.

K. Edu. Madam, youself are not exempt from this,— Nor you, son Dorset.—Buckingham, nor you;—
You have been factious one against the other.

Wife, love lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;
And what you do, do it unfeignedly.

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings:—I will never more re memor
Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I.

K. Edu. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league
With thy embracements to my wife's allies,

1 The words 'so pity me,' are not in the quarto. This and the four previous lines, are not in the quarto.

And make me happy in your unity.

Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, [To the Queen.] but with all due love

Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assured that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me. This do I beg of heaven,
When I am cold in love² to you, or yours.

K. Edu. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.

There wanteth now our brother Gloster here,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble in

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king, and quee n
And, princely peers, a happy time² of day!

K. Edu. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day:

Gloster, we have done deeds of charity;

Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate,
Between these swelling wrong-inenced peers.

Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign lord—
Among this princely heap, if any here,

By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,

Hold me a foe;

If I unwittingly, or in my rage,

Have spared committed that is hardly borne
To any in this presence, I desire

To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me, to be at enmity;

I hate it, and desire all good men's love.—

First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,

Which I will purchase with my dutiful service;—

Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,

If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us;

Of you, and you, lord Rivers, and of Dorset,

That all without desert have found'm on me;

Of you, lord Woodville, and lord Scales, of you;
Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all.
I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night.
I thank my God for my humility. [Aside.]
Q. Eliz. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter:—
I would to God, all strife were well compounded.—
My sovereign lord, I do beseech you to your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.
Glo. Why, madam, have I offered love for this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead?
[They all start.
You do him injury to scorn his corpse.
K. Edu. Who knows not, he is dead! who knows he is?
Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!
Buck. Look I so pale, lord Dorset, as the rest?
Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.
K. Edu. Is Clarence dead? or the order was revers’d.
Glo. But he, poor man, & by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy cripple bare the countermand,
That came too late to see him buried.
God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from suspicion.
[Enter Stanley.
Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!
Kneels.
K. Edu. I pr’ythee, peace: my soul is full of sorrow.
Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.
K. Edu. Then say at once, what is it thou request.
Stan. The forfeit, sovereign, of my servant’s life;
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant upon the duke of Norfolk.
K. Edu. Have I a tongue to doom my brother’s death,
And shall that tongue* give pardon to a slave?
My brother kill’d no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.
Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,
Kneel’d at my feet, and bade me be advis’d?
Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?
Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake
The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?
Who told me, in the field at Tewkesbury,
When Oxford had me down, he rescu’d me,
And said, “Dear brother, live, and be a king!”
Who told me, when we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me
Even in his garments; and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?
All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck’d, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.
But when your carter’s, or your waiting-vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac’d
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon; pardon;
And I, unjustly too, must grant it you.
But for my brother not a man would speak,
Nor I, ungracious, speak unto myself
For him, poor soul.—The proudest of you all
Have been beholding to him in his life,
Yet none of you would once beg* for his life—
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—
Come, Hastings, prithee* help me to my closet.
Ah, poor Clarence!
[Exeunt King, queen, Hastings, Rivers, Dorset, and Grey.
Glo. This is the fruit of rashness.—Mark’d you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look’d pale, when they did hear of Clarence’s death?
O! they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company?
Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London.
Enter the Duchess of York, with a Son and Daughter of Clarence.
Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?
Duch. No, boy.
Daugh. Why do you weep so? and oft beat your breast:
And cry—* O Clarence, my unhappy son!”
Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us—orphans, wretches, cast-aways,
If that our noble father were alive?
Duch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me both,
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father’s death.
It were lost sorrow to walk* one that’s lost.
Son. Then you conclude, my grandam, he is dead.
The king mine uncle is to blame for it:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.
Daugh. And so will I.
Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well.
Incapable and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caus’d your father’s death.
Son. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle Gloster
Told me, the king, provok’d to it by the queen,
Devis’d impeachments to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he wept,
And pitied me, and kindly kiss’d my cheek;
Bade me rely on him, as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as a child.
Duch. Ah! that deceit should steal such gentle shape,
And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice;* he
Is my son, ay, and therein my shame,
Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.
Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble, grandam.
Duch. Ay, boy.
Son. I cannot think it.—Hark! what noise is this!
Enter Queen Elizabeth, distractedly; Rivers and Dorset, following her.
Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep,
To chide my fortune, and torment myself?
I’ll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy.
Duch. What means this scene of rude impertinence?
Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence.
Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead!—
Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?*
Why wither not the leaves, that want their sap?*
If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;
That our swift-winged souls may catch the king’s;
Glo. Amen; [Aside.] and make me die a good old man!—
That is the butt-end of a mother’s blessing,
I marvel, that her grace did leave it out.

Buck. You cloudy princes, and heart-sorrowing peep
That bear this heavy mutual load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other’s love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swind hates;
But lately splinter’d, knit, and join’d together,
Must gently but cheer’d, and kept;
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be set
Hither to London, to be crown’d our king.

Riv. With some little train, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal’d wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet ungovern’d.
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glo. I hope the king made peace with all of us;
The compact is firm and true in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach.
Which, haply, by much company might be urg’d;
Therefore, I say with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Host. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that shall straight Shah post to Ludlow.
Madam,—and you my sister,—will you go
To give your censures in this business?

[Exeunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOSTER.]

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God’s sake, let us two stay at home:
For by the way I’ll sort occasion
As indert to the story we did talk’d of,
To part the queen’s proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel’s consistory,
My oracle, my prophet!—My dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.
Towards Ludlow then, for we’ll not stay behind.

[Exeunt]

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good morrow, neighbour; whither away so fast?
2 Cit. I promise you, I scarcely know myself.

Hear you the news abroad?
1 Cit. Yes; that the king is dead.
2 Cit. Ill news, by ’r lady; seldom comes the better.

I fear, I fear, ’t will prove a giddy* world.

Enter another Citizen.

3 Cit. Neighbours, God speed!

1 Cit. Give you good morrow, sir.
3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good king Edward’s death?

2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help, the whole.
3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublewold* world.

1 Cit. No, no; by God’s good grace, his son shall return.
3 Cit. Woe to that land that’s govern’d by a child.*

SCENE IV.

KING RICHARD III. 521

2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government, Which, in his nature, council under him; And, in his full and ripest years, himself, No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.

1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

3 Cit. Stood the state so? no, no, good friends, God wot;

For then this land was famously enrich'd With politic grave counsel: then the king Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mother.

3 Cit. Better it were they all came by his father, Or by his father there were none at all;

For emulation, who shall now be nearest, Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.

O! full of danger is the duke of Gloster; And the queen's sons, and brothers, haught and proud: And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule, This sickly land might solace as before.

1 Cit. Come, come; we fear the worst: all will be bold.

3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their cloaks;

When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand:

When the sun sets, who doth not look for night?

Untimely storms make men expect a death.

All may be well; but, if God so will it so,
'T is more than we deserve, or I expect.

3 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear:

You cannot reason almost with a man

That looks not heavily, and full of dread.

3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so.

By a divine instinct men's minds mistrust

Pursuing danger; as by proof we see

The water swell before a boisterous storm.

But leave it all to God. Whither away?

2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.

3 Cit. And so was I: I'll bear you company.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, the young Duke of York, Queen Elizabeth, and the Duchess of York.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Straitford.

And at Northampton they do rest to-night:

To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long wish all my heart to see the prince:

I hope he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no: they say, my son of York

Hath almost over-en him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow.

York. Grandam, one night, as we did sit at supper,

My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow

More than my brother; "Ay," quoth my uncle Gloster,

(Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:"

And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast.

But sweet flowers grow slow, and weeds make haste.

Duch. 'Good faith,' good faith, the saying did not hold

In him that did object the same to thee;

He was the wretched'st thing when he was young,

So long a growing, and so leisurely,

That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Duch. I hope he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd,

I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,

To touch his growth nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pr'ythee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say, my uncle grew so fast,

That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old:

'T was full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I pr'ythee, pretty York, who told thee this?

York. Grandam, his nurse.

Duch. His nurse! why, she was dead ere thou wast born.

York. If 't were not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy. Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes our messenger. What news with you?

Mess. Such news, my lord, as grieves me to report.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers and lord Grey are sent to Pomeroy,

And with them sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes, Gloster and Buckingham.

Arch. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can I have disclose'd:

Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,

Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me! I see the ruin of my house.

The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;

Insulting tyranny begins to set

Upon the innocent and awless throne:

Welcome, destruction, blood, and massac're!

I see, as in a dream, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days,

How many of you have mine eyes beheld?

My husband lost his life to get the crown;

Too often up and down my sons were lost,

For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss:

And being seated, and domestic broils

Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors,

Make war upon themselves: brother to brother,

Blood to blood, self against self:—O! preposterous

And frantic outrage, and thy damned spleen;

Or let me die, to look on death no more.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy: we will to sanctuary.—

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go, [To the Queen.

And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep: and so beside to me,

As well I tender you, and all of yours.

Go; I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exit.
ACT III

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

The Trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales.

GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, CARDINAL BOURCHIER, and others.

BUCK. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.\(^1\)

GLO. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign.

The weary way hath made you melancholy.

PRINCE. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way

Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:
I want more uncles here to welcome me.

GLO. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit:
No more can you distinguish of a man,
Than of his outward show; which, God he knows,
Seldom, or never, jumpheth with the heart.
Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous;
Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,
But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:
God keep you from them, and from such false friends!

PRINCE. God keep me from false friends! but they were none.

GLO. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.

Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.

MAY. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

PRINCE. I thank you, good my lord; and thank you all.—[Exeunt Mayor, &c.

I thought my mother, and my brother York,
Would long ere this have met us on the way:
Fie! what a slugg is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell us whether they will come or no.

Enter HASTINGS.

BUCK. And in good time here comes the sweating lord.

PRINCE. Welcome, my lord. What, will our mother come?

HAST. On what occasion, God he knows, not I,
The queen, your mother, and your brother York,
Have taken sanctuary: the tender prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace,
But by his mother was performe withheld.

BUCK. Fie! what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers.—Lord cardinal, will your grace
Persuade the queen to send the duke of York
Unto his princely brother presenty?
If she deny, lord Hastings, go with him,
And from her jealous arms pluck him performe.

CARD. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory
Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expect him here: but if she be obdurate
To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land,
Would I be guilty of so great a sin.

BUCK. You are too strict and abstinent,\(^2\) my lord,
Too ceremonious, and traditional:
Weigh it but with the goodness of his age,
You break not sanctuary in seizing him.
The benefit thereof is always granted
To those whose dealings have deserved the place,
And those who have the wit to claim the place:

This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserved it; Therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it:
Then, taking him from thence, that is not there, You break no privilege nor charter there.
Oft have I heard of sanctuary men, But sanctuary children, ne'er till now.

CARD. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for once:
Come on, lord Hastings; will you go with me?

HAST. I go, my lord.

PRINCE. Good lords, make all the speedy haste in may.

Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come,
Where shall we sojourn till our coronation?

GLO. Where it seems best unto your royal self.
If I may counsel you, some day, or two,
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower
Then, where you please, and shall be thought most:
For your best health and recreation.

PRINCE. I do not like the Tower, of any place.—

Did Julius Cæsar build that place, my lord?

BUCK. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place,
Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.

PRINCE. Is it upon record, or else reported
Successively from age to age, he built it?

BUCK. It is upon record, my gracious lord.

PRINCE. But say, my lord, it were not registred,
Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,
As 't were retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.

GLO. So wise so young, they say, do ne'er live long.

PRINCE. What say you, uncle?

GLO. I say without characters fame lives long.

Thus, like the formal Vice, Inquity,\(^3\)

I moralize two meanings in one word.

PRINCE. That Julius Cæsar was a famous man:

With what his valour did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his valour live:
Death makes no conquest of his conqueror,
For now he lives in fame, though not in life.—
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham.

BUCK. What, my gracious lord!

PRINCE. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.

GLO. Short summers lightly* have a forward spring.

Enter York, Hastings, and the Cardinal.

BUCK. Now, in good time here comes the duke of York.

PRINCE. Richard of York! how fares our nat brother?

YORK. Well, my dread lord; so must I call you as Prince. Ay, brother; to our grief, as it is yours.

Too late he died that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty.

GLO. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York?

YORK. I thank you, gentle uncle. O! my lord,
You said, that idle weeds are fast in growth:
The prince my brother hath outgrown me far.

GLO. He hath, my lord!

YORK. And therefore is he idle.

GLO. O! my fair cousin, I must not say so.

YORK. Then he is more beholding to you, than I.\(^4\)

SCENE II.

KING RICHARD III.

Glo. He may command me as my sovereign,
But you have power o'er me as a kinsman.
York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.
Glo. My dagger, little cousin? with all my heart.
York. A beggar, brother? A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.
York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give;
And being but a toy, which is no grief to give.
Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.
York. A great gift! for we two to-morrow hold divided council;
Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.
Glo. Command me to lord William: tell him,
Catesby,
His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle;
And bid my lord, for joy of this good news,
Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go: effect this business soundly.

Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.
Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby; ere we sleep?
Cate. You shall, my lord.
Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both.

[Exit Catesby.

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive
Lord Hastings will not yield to our compots?
Glo. Chop off his head, man:—somewhat we will do:—
And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford, and all the movable
Whereof the king, my brother, was possess'd.
Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.
Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kind.
Come, let us sup betimes, that afterwards
We may digest our compots in some form.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Before Lord Hastings' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord! my lord! [Knocking at the door.

Hast. [Within].—Who knocks?

Mess. One from the lord Stanley.
Hast. [Within]. What's o'clock?
Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Cannot lord Stanley sleep these tedious nights?
Mess. So it appears; by that I have to say.
First, he commends him to your noble self.
Hast. What then?
Mess. Then certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the boar had rased off his helm;
Besides, he says, there are two councils kept;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th'o other.
Therefore, he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,—
If you will presently take horse with him,
And with all speed post with him toward the north,
To shun the danger that his soul divineis.
Hast. Go, fellow, go; return unto thy lord.
Bid him not fear the separated council:
His honour and myself are at the one,
And at the other is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceed that toucheth us,
Whereof I shall not have intelligence.
Tell him, his fears are shallow, without instance:
And for his dreams—I wonder he's so simple;
To tryst the mockery of unquiet slumbers.
To fly the boar, before the boar pursue,
To be incense the boar to follow us,
And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase.

Go, bid thy master rise and come to me;
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say.

[Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord!
Hast. Good morrow, Catesby: you are early stirring.
What news now, in this our tottering state?
Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord;
And, I believe, will never stand upright,
Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
Hast. How? wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?
Cate. Ay, my good lord.
Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.
But cannot thou guess that he doth aim at it?
Cate. Ay, on my life; and hope to find you forward
Upon his party for the gain thereof:
And thereupon he sends you this good news,—
That this same very day your enemies,
The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.
Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries:
But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it, to the death.
Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind.
Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence,
That they which brought me in my master's hate,
A live to look upon their tragedy.
Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
I'll send some packing that yet think not on 't.
Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,
When men are unprepared, and look not for it.
Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 'twill do
With some of them, who think themselves as safe
As thou and I; who, as thou knowest, are dear
To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.
Cate. The princes both make high account of you;
For they account his head upon the bridge.
[Aside.
Hast. I know they do, and I have well deserved it.

Enter STANLEY.

Cate. Come on, come on; where is your boar-spear, man?
Fear you the boar, and go unprovided?
Stan. My lord, good morrow,— good morrow, Catesby,—
You may jest on, but, by the holy rood,
I do not like these several councils, I.
Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as yours;
And never, in my days, I do protest,
Was it so precious to me as 'tis now.
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?
Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London,
Were jovial, and supposed their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet you, see, how soon the day overcast.
This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt:
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.
Hast. Come, come, have with you.—Wot you what, my lord?

To-day, the lords you talk of are beheaded.
Stan. They for their truth might better wear their heads,
Than some that have accus'd them wear their hair.
But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before; I'll talk with this good fellow.
[Exit STANLEY and CATESBY.
How now, sirrah! how goes the world with thee?
Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.
Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now.
Than when thou met'st me last, where now we met.
Then, was I going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now, I tell thee, (keep it to thyself,)
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than ere I was.
Purs. God hold it to your honour's good content.
Hast. Gramercy, fellow. There, drink that for me.
[Throwing his Purse.
Purs. I thank your honour.
[Exit Pursuivant.

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.
Hast. I thank thee, good sir John, with all my heart.
I'm in your debt for your last exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.
Pr. I'll wait upon your lordship.

Enter BUCHINGHAM.
Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?
Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest:
Your honour hath no shriving work in hand.
Hast. 'Good faith, and when I met this holy man
The men you talk of came into my mind.
What, go you toward the Tower?
Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there.
I shall return before your lordship thence.
Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.
Buck. And supper too, although thou knowest it so.

[Aside.
Hast. Come, will you go?

Come, will you go?

Enter STANLEY.

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the Castle.

Enter RATCLIFF, with a Guard, conducting RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN, to execution.
Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this:—
To-day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.
Grey. God bless the prince from all the pack of you!
A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.
Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this base after.
Rat. Despatch! the limit of your lives is out.
Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O, thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!
Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the Second here was hack'd to death.
And, for more slander to thy dastard seat,
We give to thee our guiltless blood to drink.
Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads,
When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and me,
For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.
Riv. Then curst she Richard, then curst she Bed-ingham,
Then curst she Hastings.—O, remember, God,
To hear her prayer for them, as now for us!
And for my sister, and her princely son,
Besated, dear God, with our true blood,
With such desire, unquietly must be spilt.

Rut. Make haste, the hour of death is expir'd.

Rut. Come, Grey, — come, Vaughan; — let us here embrace.

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt.

Buckingham, Stanley, Hastings, the Bishop of Ely,
Catesby, Lovek, and others, sitting at a Table; officers of the Council attending.

Rut. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met
Is to determine of the coronation:
Whose name, speak, when is this royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for the royal time?

Stan. They are; and want but nomination.

lovek. Too-morrow, then, I judge, a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?
Who is most inward 2 with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts,
Is no more mine, than I of yours;
For I, my lord, than you of mine.

Lovek. Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Rut. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;
But for his purpose in the coronation,
Have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd
His gracious pleasure any way therein:
But you, my honourable lords, may name the time;
In the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,
Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Enter Gloster.

Ely. In happy time our duke comes himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins, all, good morrow.

Stan. Have you not come upon your cue, my lord,
William lord Hastings, which pronounce'd your part,
Mean, your voice, for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than my lord Hastings, no man might be bolder:
His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.

Lovek. When I was last in Holborn, saw good strawberries in your garden there;
Do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marty, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

Enter Gloster and Buckingham.

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Taking him aside.

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Taking him aside.

Catesby hath sound'd Hastings in our business,
Advises the testy gentleman so hot,
That he will lose his head, ere give consent,
Is master's child, as worshipfully he terms it,
Ball lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile; I'll go with you.

[Exeunt Gloster and Buckingham.

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.
O-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;
Or myself I am not so well provided,
As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

[Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord, the duke of Gloster?
Have sent for these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning:
There's a some conceit or other likes him well,
When that he bids good morrow with such spirit.
I think, there's never a man in Christendom
Can lesser hide his love, or hate, than he;
For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Stan. What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any livelihood he show'd to-day?

Hast. Marry, that with no man, so he is offended,
For, were he, he had showed it in his looks.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve,
That do conspire my death with devilish plots
Of damned witchcraft and that have prevail'd
Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,
Makes me most forward in this princely presence
To doom th' offenders, whose he they be,
I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then, be your eyes the witness of their evil.
Look how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up:
And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,
Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,
That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord—
Glo. If! thou protector of this damned strumpet,
Talk'st thou to me of ifs? — Thou art a traitor.

Off with his head! — now, by Saint Paul I swear,
I will not dine until I see the same.

Lovek, and Ratcliff, look that it be done:
The rest, that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exeunt Council, with Gloster and Buckingham.

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a whit for me:
For, too fond, might have prevented this.
Stanley did dream the bear did raise his helm;
And I did scorn it, and disdained to fly.
Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.
O! now I need the priest that spake to me:
I now repent I told the pursuivant,
As too triumphing, how mine enemies,
To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I myself secure in grace and favour.
O, Margaret, Margaret! now thy heavy curse
Is lightened on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Rut. Come, come; despatch, the duke would be at dinner.
Make a short shrift, he longs to see your head.

Hast. O, momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your good looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with every nod to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lovek. Come, come, despatch: 'tis boisterous to exclaim.

Hast. O, bloody Richard! - miserable England!
I prophesy the fearful' time to thee.
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.

Come, lead me to the block; bear him my head:
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — The Same. The Tower Walls.

Enter Gloster and Buckingham, in rusty armor, marvellous ill-favoured, and in haste.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murther thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou Wert distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut! I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak and look back, and pry on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending 2d suspicion: ghastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time to grace my stratagems.

But what is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Buck. Lord Mayor.

Glo. Look to the drawbridge there!

Buck. Hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord Mayor, the reason we have sent—

Glo. Look back, defend thee: here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocency defend and guard us!

Enter Lord Mayor and Catesby

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Rattcliff, and Lovel.

Lor. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep.
I took him for the plainest harmless creature,
That breath'd upon the earth a Christian;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,
That, his apparent open guilt omitted,
I mean his conversation with Shore's wife,
He liv'd from all atinder of suspects.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covertest shelter'd traitor
That ever liv'd.—
Would you imagine, or almost believe,
Were't not that by great preservation
We live to tell it, that the subtle traitor
This day had plotted, in the council house,
To murder me, and my good lord of Gloucester?

May. Had he done so?

Glo. What think you we are Turks, or infidels?
Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death,
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England, and our persons' safety,
Enforced us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befal you! he deserv'd his death;
And your good graces both have well proceeded,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.

Buck. I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with mistress Shore;
Yet had we not determin'd he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his end,4
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Something against our meanings, hath prevented:
Because, my lord, I would have had you hear
The traitor speak, and timorously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply, might have Misled us in him, and wept his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's words shall serve,
As well as I had seen, and heard him speak:
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,

But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here
To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you come too late of our intent,
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Lord Mayor

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.

The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post:
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Infor the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying—he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house,
Which by the sign thereof was termed so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives,
Even where his raging eye, or savage heart,
Without control husted to make a prey.
Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:
Tell them, when that my mother went with child
Of that instate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France;
And by true computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father.
Yet touch this sparingly, as 't were far off;
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I'll play the oracle
As if the golden tree, for which I plead,
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's castle,
Where you shall find me well accommodated,
With reverend fathers, and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and, towards three or four o'clock,
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit Buckingham

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw:—
Go thou [To Cat.] to friar Raker: bid them both
Meet me within this hour at Baynard's castle.

[Exeunt Lovel and Catesby

Now will I go, to take some privy order,
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;
And to give order, that no manner person
Have any time recourse unto the prince.

[Exit

SCENE VI.—A Street

Enter a Scrivener3, with a writing.

Scriv. Here is the indictment of the good

Hastings;
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's:
And mark how well the sequel hangs together
Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me.
The precedent was full as long a doing;
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,
Untainted, unexam'd, free, at liberty.
Here's a good tale for the while: what is so gross,
That cannot see this palpable device?

Yet who so bold? but says he sees it not?

Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such ill dealing must be seen or thought. [Exit

SCENE VII.—The Same. The Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER at one Door, and BUCKINGHAM at another.

Glo. How now, how now! what say the citizens? BucK. Now by the holy mother of our Lord, the citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?

BucK. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy, and his contract by deputy in France. I unseat the greediness of his riches, and his enforcement of the city wives: his tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy, as being got, your father then in France; and dis-resemblance, being not like the duke. I shall not infer your linesaments, the right idea of your father, your name and nobleness of mind: I have open all your victories in Scotland, our discipline in war, wisdom in peace, our military and naval excellencies; set, left nothing fitting for your purpose touch'd, or slightly handled in discours: when my oratory drew toward end, bade them that did love their country's good, say, 'God save Richard, England's royal king!' Glo. And did they so?

BucK. No, so God help me, they spake not a word; at, like dumb statues, or breathing stones, and each on other, and look'd deadly pale. How when I saw: I reprehended them, and asked the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? 'Was answer was, the people were not us'd to be spoken to, but by the recorder. ben. he was urg'd to tell my tale again:—Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inferred.' At nothing spoke in warrant from himself. ben. he had done, some followers of mine own, to lower end of the hall, hurled up their caps, and some ten voices cried, 'God save king Richard!' thus I took the vantage of those few.—Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I; this general applause, and cheerful shout, gave your wisdom, and your love to Richard! and even here brake off, and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak? ill not the mayor, then, and his brethren, come?

BucK. The mayor is here at hand. Intend some fear; not you spoke with, but by mighty suit: look you get a prayer-book in your hand, stand between two churchmen, good my lord; on that ground I'll make a holy descent: be not easily won to our requests; by the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it. Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them, I can say nay to thee for myself, doubt we bring it to a happy issue.

[Knocking heard.] BucK. Go, go, up to the leads! the lord mayor knocks.

[Exit GLOSTER. Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens. Glo.]

Come, my lord: I dance attendance here; the duke will not be spoke withal.—

Enter from the Castle, CATESBY.

w. Catesby! what says your lord to my request?

Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord, to visit him to-morrow, or next day. He is within, with two right reverend fathers, Divinely bent to meditation; and in no worldly suits would he be mov'd, to draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke: Tell him, myself, the mayor, and aldermen, in deep designs, in matter of great moment, no less importing than our general good, are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cate. I'll say so much more, to bring him straight. [Exit.

Buck. Ah, he, my lord, this prince is not an Edward: He is not lulling on a loved love-bed, but on his knees at meditation; not dallying with a brace of courtezans, but meditating with two deep divines; not sleeping to engross his idle body, but praying to enrich his watchful soul. Happy were England, would this virtuous prince take on his grace the sovereignty thereof; but sure! I fear we shall not win him to it. May Mary, God defend his grace should we say nav! Buck. I fear, he will. Here Catesby comes again.—

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled such troops of citizens to come to him: His grace not being warn'd thereof before, He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him. Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should suspect me, that I mean no good to him: By heaven, we come to him in perfect love; and so once more return, and tell his grace. [Exit CATESBY.

When holy and devout religious men Are at their beads, 'tis much to draw them thence; So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, with a book, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'twixt two clergy-men. Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian prince, To stay him from the fall of vanity; And, see, a book of prayer in his hand; True ornament to know a holy man.—Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince, Lord favourable ear to our requests, and pardon us the interruption Of thy devotion, and right-christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology; I do beseech your grace to pardon me, Who, earnest in the service of my God, Deferr'd the visitation of my friends. But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure? Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above, And all good men of this ungodly isle. Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence, That seems disgraceful in the city's eye; And that you come to reprend my ignorance. Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace.

On our entreaties to amend your fault.

Glo. Else wheresoe'er breathe I in a Christian land? Buck. Know then, it is your fault that you resign The supreme seat, the throne majestical, The scepter's office of your ancestors;
Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} The lineal glory of your royal house, To the corruption of a blemish'd stock;\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} While's, in the mildness of your sleepily thoughts, Which here we wakon to our country's good, This noble isle doth want her proper limbs;\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Her face defac'd with scars of infancy, Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,\footnote{This line is only found in the quarto.} And almost shoul'der'd in the swallowing gulf Of dark'" forgetfulness, and deep debirion. Which to recure, we heartily solicit Your gracious self to take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land: Not as protector, steward, substitute,\footnote{E. O. add: and Citizens.} Or lowly factor for another's gain; But as successively from blood to blood, Your right of birth, your empery, your own. For this, conso'd with the citizens, Your most worshipful and loving friends, And by their vehement instigation, In this just cause come I to move your grace.\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.}

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence, Or bitterly to speak in your reproach, Best fitteth my degree, or your condition: If, not to answer,—you might haply think, Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded,\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty, Which fondly you would here impose on me: If to reprieve you for this suit of yours,\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} So seced'd with your faithful love to me, Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends. Therefore, to speak, and to avoid the first, And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Definitively thus I answer you. Your love deserves my thanks, but my desert, Unmeritable, shuns your high request. First, if all obstacles were cut away, And that my path were even to the crown, As the ripe revenue and due of 'birth; Yet so much is my poverty of spirit, So mighty, and so many, my defects, That I would rather hide me from my greatness, Being a bark to brook no mighty sea, Than in my greatness covet to be hid, And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me; And much I need to help you, were there need: The royal tree hath left us royal fruit, Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Will well become the seat of majesty, And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign. On him I lay that you would lay on me, The right and fortune of his happy stars;\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Which God defend that I should wring from him.\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.}

Buck. My lord, this arguses conscience in your grace; But the respects thereof are nice and trivial, All circumstances well considered. You say, that Edward is your brother's son: So say we too, but not by Edward's wife; For first was he contract to lady Lucy;\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Your mother lives a witness to his vow: And afterward by substitute betroth'd To Bona, sister to the king of France.\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} These both put off, a poor petitioner, A caru-craz'd mother to a many sons, A beauty-waning and distressed widow,\footnote{This line is only found in the quarto.} Even in the afternoon of her best days, Made prize and purchase\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} of his wanton eye, Seduce'd the pitch and height of his degree\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} To base declension and loath'd bigamy.\footnote{This line is only found in the quarto.} By her, in his unlawful bed, he got This Edward, whom our manners call the prince. More bitterly could I expostulate, Save that, for reverence to some alive, I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Then, god's my lord, to you, your royal self This proffer'd benefit of dignity; If not to bless us and the land withal,\footnote{This line is only found in the quarto.} Unto to draw forth your noble ancestry From the corruption of abusing times, Unto a lineal true-derived course. May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love. Cate. O! I make them joyful; grant their lawful wish. Glo. Also! why would you heap this care on me I am unfit for state and majesty.\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} I do beseech you, take it not amiss; I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you. Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal, Loath to depose the child, your brother's son; As well we know your tenderness of heart, And gentle, kind, effeminate remore,\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Which we have noted in you to your kindred, And equally, indeed, to all estates,— Yet know, who's you accept our suit or no. Your brother's son shall never reign our king; But we will plant some other in our throne, To the disgrace and downfall of your house,\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} And, in this resolution, here we leave you.\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} Zounds!\footnote{This line is not in the quarto.} citizens! we will entreat no more. Glo. O! do not swear, my cousin Buckingham.\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} [Exit Buckingham.]

Cate. Call him again, sweet prince; accept them.\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} If you deny them, all the land will rue it. Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares? Call him again: I am not made of stone, But penetrable to your kind entreaties. [Exit Cates Albeit against my conscience, and my soul.— Re-enter Buckingham.\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} Cousin of Buckingham, and sage, grave men, Since you will buckle fortune on my back, To bear her burden, who's I will, or no,\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} I must have patience to endure the load: But if black scandal, or foul-loc'd reproach, Attend the sequel of your imposition, Your more enforcement shall acquaint once me From all the impure blots and stains thereof; For God doth know, and you may partly see, How far I am from the desire of this. May. God bless your grace! we see it, and say it. Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth. Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,— Long live king Richard, England's worthy king! All. Amen. Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be crown'd.\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} Glo. Even when you please, for you will have it. Buck. To-morrow, then, we will attend your gracious will. And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} Glo. Come, let us to our holy work again. [To the Bishop.]\footnote{E. O. add: and the rest.} Farewell, my counsin,—farewell gentle friends. [Exit.}
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, Queen Elizabeth, Duchess of York, and Marquess of Dorset; on the other, Anne, Duchess of Gloucester, leading Lady Margaret Plantagenet, Clarence's young Daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here?—my niece Plantagenet, Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloucester! Now, for my life, she's wandering to the Tower, In pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince.—

Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day.
Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister: whither away?

Anne. No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess, Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks: we 'll enter all together:

Enter BRABNLEY.

And in good time here the lieutenant comes.—

Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brack. Right well, dear madam. By your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them:
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?

Brack. I mean the lord protector.

Q. Eliz. The Lord protect me from that kingly title!

Hath he set bounds between their love, and me?
I am their mother; who shall bar me from them?

Duch. I am their father's mother; I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:
Then, bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame,
And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brack. No, madam, no; I may not leave it so:
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exeunt BRABNLEY.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
And reverend looker-on of two fair queens—

Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster,

[To the Duchess of Gloucester.

There to be crowned Richard's royal queen.

Q. Eliz. Ah! cut my face asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Despairful tidings! O, unpleasing news!

Dor. Be of good cheer:—mother, how fares your grace?

Q. Eliz. O Dorset! speak not to me, get thee gone;
Death and destruction dog thee at thy heels:
Thy mother's name is ominous to her children.

I thou wilt outstrip death, cross the sea, the land live with Richmond from the reach of hell.
Lo, lie thee, lie thee, from this slaughter-house, est thou increase the number of the dead, and make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,— for mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam—

[Here the Fool.] take all the swift advantage of the hours:

You shall have letters from me to my son
In your behalf, to meet you on the way:—
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!—
O, my accursed womb, the bed of death! A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unaided eye is murderous!

Stan. Come, madam, come: I in all haste was sent Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—
O! would to God, that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
And die, ere men can say—God save the queen.

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory,
To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.
[Now, Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband
Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands,
Which issu'd from my other angel husband,

And that dear® saint which, then, I weeping follow'd;—
O! when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—" Be thou," quoth I, I accurs'd,
For making me, so young, so old a widow;
And, when thou woe'dst, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife (if any be so mad)
More miserable by the life of thee,'
Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!°°

Le ! are I can repeat this curse again,
Within so small a time!® my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse:
Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.

Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu; I pity thy complaints.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.

Dor. Farewell, thou woeful wellcome of glory.

Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that tak'st thy leave of it.

Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!—

[To DORSET.

Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee! —

[To Anne.

Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!—

[To QUEEN ELIZABETH.

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wock'd with a week of teem".

Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Tower.—

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babe's,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls;
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse, old sullen play-fellow,
For tender princes, use my babies well!—
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. [Exeunt.

1 How fares the prince: in quarto. 8 Well, madam, and in health but by your leave: in quarto. 3 Then, fear not thou: in quarto. 9 de beseech your grace all, is pardon me: in quarto. 4 Not in quarto. 7 time: in quarto. 7 The quartos, for this line, read: To set you on the way, and welcome you. 10 dead: in quarto. 9 death: in quarto. 11 Even in so short a space: in quarto. 12 guard: quartos. 13 Sorrow.
SCENE II.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Sound a Senet. RICHARD, crowned upon his Throne;
BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham!
BUCK. My gracious sovereign.
K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high by thy advice,
[Trumpets sound.]

And thy assistance, is king Richard seated:
But shall we wear these glories* for a day,
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?
BUCK. Still live they, and for ever let them last!
K. Rich. Ah! Buckingham, now do I play the
To try if thou be current gold, indeed.—
Young Edward lives.—Think now what I would speak.
BUCK. Say on, my loving lord.
BUCK. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned lord.
K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'Tis so; but Edward lives.
BUCK. True, noble prince.
K. Rich. O bitter consequence!

That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince.—
Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:
Shall I be plain?—I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly performed.
What say'st thou now? speak suddenly; be brief.
BUCK. Your grace may do your pleasure.
K. Rich. Tut, tut! thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.
Say, have I thy consent that they shall die?
BUCK. Give me some little breath, some pause.

Before I positively speak in this:
I will resolve you herein presently. [Exit BUCKINGHAM.

Cate. The king is angry: see, he gnaws his lip.

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools, [Descends from his Throne.
And unrespective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes.
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.

Boy!—
Page. My lord.

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting gold
Will tempt unto a close exploit of death?
Page. I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit:
Gold were as good as twenty orators,
And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.
K. Rich. What is his name?
Page. His name, my lord, is Tyrell.
[Exit Page.

The deep-revolving, witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels.
Hath he so long held out with me untill'd,
And stops he now for breath?—Well, be it so.—

Enter STANLEY.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news with you?
STAN. Know, my lord, those words, my lord.
The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled.
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.
K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad,
That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;
I will take order for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some mean poor gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:
The boy is fool, and I fear not him.
Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it; for it stands me much upon,
To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.—

[Exit Catesby.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass.—
Murder her brothers, and then marry her?
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck out sin.
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

Re-enter Page, with TYRREL.

Is thy name Tyrell?
TYR. James Tyrell, and your most obedient subject.
K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?
TYR. Prove me, my gracious lord.
K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
TYR. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies
K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it: two deep enemies,
Foes to the state, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon,
Tyrell, I mean those bastards in the Tower.
TYR. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll find you from the fear of them. [Kneeling.
K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, comrade, hither, Tyrell:
Go, by this token.—Rise, and lend thine ear.
[TYRREL rises, and Richard whispers.

There is no more but so:—easy, it is done,
And there will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

 TYR. I will dispatch it straight.

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM.

BUCK. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.
K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.
BUCK. I hear the news, my lord.
K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son:—well let BUCK. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by press int.

For which your honour and your faith are paven;
Th' earldom of Hereford, and the moveables,
Which you have promised I shall possess.
K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife: if she commends
Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.
BUCK. What says your highness to my just request?
K. Rich. I do remember me.—Henry the sixth
Did prophecy that Richmond should be king,
When Richmond was a little peevish boy.
A king!—perhaps—
BUCK. My lord!—
K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at the time
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?
BUCK. My lord, your promise for the earldom.—
K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter.
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Bouge-mont: at which name I start'd
Because of Ireland, told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.
BUCK. My lord,—
K. Rich. Ay; what's o'clock?
BUCK. I am thus bold to put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.

But. Upon the stroke of ten.
K. Rich. Well, let it strike.
But. Why, let it strike?
K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st the stroke without thy begging and my meditation.
I am not in the giving vein to-day.
But. Why then resolve me whether you will or no.
K. Rich. Thou troublest me: I am not in the vein.
Exeunt King Richard angrily, and his Train.
But. And is it thus? repays he my deep service with such contempt? made I him king for this?
I'll let me think on Hastings, and be gone his blackcock, while my fearful head is on. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done:
the most act deed of piteous massacre,
that ever yet this land was guilty of.

I have been Tyrrel, and to my soul
a piece of ruthless butchery, lest they were flesh'd villains, blooded* dogs, filled with tenderness and mild compassion,
plaited like two* children in their death's sad story.
O! thus, quoth Dighton, "lay the gentle babes,"— thus, then, quoth Forrest, "girdling one another than their alabaster innocent arms:
their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
so in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.

Look round their pillow lay;[mind; high once, quoth Forrest, "almost chang'd my O! the devil where the villain stopp'd;—he Dighton thus told on,—we were сборt most replenished sweet work of nature,

nee both are gone: with conscience and remorse, ey could not speak; and so I left them both,
bear this tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King Richard.

Richard. He here comes.—All health, my sovereign lord!
K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel, am I happy in thy news?
Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge get your happiness, be happy then, it is done.

K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?
Tyr. I did, my lord.
K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?
Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;
where, to say the truth, I do not know.
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, and after supper, en thou shalt tell the process of their death.
In time but think how I may do thee good,
be the inheritor of thy desire.

well, till then.

[Exit.

Tyr. The son of Clarence have I pent up close;
daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;
sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
Anne my wife hath bid this world good night.
For I know the Bretagne Richard aims young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter, by that knot looks proudly on the crown,
under, a jolly thriving woeer.

Enter Catesby, in haste.

Cates. My lord!—

K. Rich. Good or bad news, that thou com'st in so bluntly?
Cates. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to Richmond; And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen, is in the field, and still his power encreaseth.
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near,
Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Come; I have learned, that fearful commenting is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary:
Then, fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.
Go, muster men: my counsel is my shield:
We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Queen Margaret.

Q. Mar. So, now, prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confines silly have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine enemies.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping, the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret: who comes here?
[She stands back.

Enter Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of York.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If ye yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's laments.
Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for right
Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night. [Aside.

Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-earried tongue is still and mute.—
Edward Plantagenet! why; art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet; [Aside.
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.
Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God! fly from such gentle lambs,
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son. [Aside.

Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal living ghost,
Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life usurp'd,
Brief abstract and record of tedious days.
Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth, [Sitting down.
Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!
Q. Eliz. Ah! that thou wouldst as soon afford a grave,
As thou canst yield a melancholy seat:
Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here.
Ah! who hath any cause to mourn, but we?

[Aside. [Sitting down by her.

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
[Coming forward.
Give mine the benefit of seniory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society, [Sitting down by them.
Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:—
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
I had a husband, till a Richard kill'd him:

* See that struck the hours in the old clocks.
 May it please you to resolve me in my suit: in folio.

 This and the two preceding lines, are not in the quartos.
Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
That hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
_Duck._ I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him.
I had a Rutland too; thou holp'st to kill him.

_Q. Mar._ Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath erept
A hell-bound, that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood:
That foul defacer of God's handy-work,
That reigns in galley eyes of weeping souls,
That taints the fair stream with sordid chalk. 10
Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves,—
O! upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee, that this carnal ear
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow 11 with others' moan!

_Duch._ O, Harry's wife! triumph not in my woes:
God witness me, I have wept for thine.

_Q. Mar._ Bear with me: I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy brother Edward dead, and thy (himself) Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot, because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this frantic 12 play,
Th' adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligence,
Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,
And send them thither; but at hand, at hand,
Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd from hence. 13
Cancel his bond of life, dear God! I pray,
That I may live and say, the dog is dead.

_Q. Eliz._ O! thou didst prophesy, the time would come,
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That little spider, that foul bunch-back'd toad.

_Q. Mar._ I call'd thee then, vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was,
The flatter'd image of a direful pageant,
One hear'd o' high, to be hurl'd down below:
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where be thy two sons? 14 wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?
Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art.
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one that would to one that humbly sues;
For queen, a very caltiff'd crowd with cares:
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thou hast the course of justice whirled about,

And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wast
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place, and dost thou not
Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now, thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;
From which, even here, I slip my weary head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, York's wife, and queen of sad mischance:
These English woe's shall make me smile in France.

_Q. Eliz._ O! thou well skill'd in curses, stay a while
And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

_Q. Mar._ Fear not to slay the night, and fast the day,
Compare didst he save lives, and leave us dying:
Think that thy babes were fairer 15 than they were,
And he that slew them fouler than he is:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad-causer worse:
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

_Q. Eliz._ My words are dull; O! quicken them with thine.

_Q. Mar._ Thy woes will make them sharp, as pierce like mine.

[Exit Queen Maccadian Duch.
_With singed garment, and as cold as ashes._

_Q. Eliz._ Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy successors of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries.
Let them have scope: though what they do impart
Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.

_Duch._ If so, then be not tongue-tied: go with me.
And in the breath of bitter words let's soothe
My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd. 16

_Enter King Richard, and his Train, marching._

_K. Rich._ Who intercepts me in my expedition?

_Duch._ O! she, that might have intercept thee,
By strangling thee in her accusing womb,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

_Q. Eliz._ Hid'st thou that forefront with a golden crown
Where' tis should be branded, if that right were right.
For slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,
And the dire death of my poor sons and brothers?
Tell me, thou villain-slave, where are my children?

_Duch._ Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother Clarence.
And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

[Trumpet heard.

_K. Rich._ Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Grey, Duch.

Where is kind Hastings?

_K. Rich._ A flourish, trumpets! — strike alarum, drum,
Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rain on the Lord's anointed. Strike, I say! —

_Flourish. Alarum._

_Either be patient, and entreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war
Thus will I drown your exclamations.

_Duch._ Art thou my son?

_K. Rich._ Ay; I thank God, my father, and yours
_Duch._ Then patiently bear my impatience.

_K. Rich._ Madam, I have a touch of your condition
That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

_Duch._ O! let me speak.

_K. Rich._ O! let me speak.

_Duch._ Do then; but I'll not hear.

_Duch._ I will be mild and gentle in my words.

_K. Rich._ And brief, good mother, for I am in haste,
Art thou so hasty? I once 17 stay'd for the God knows, in torment and in agony.

_K. Rich._ And came I not at last to comfort you?
Duck. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it well; Thou canst on earth to make the earth my hell. A severe burden was thy birth to me; Tetchy and wayward was thine infancy: Thy school-days, frightful, desperate, wild and furious; Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and venturous: Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody, More mild, yet more harmful, kind in hatred: What comfortable hour canst thou name, That ever grace'd me with thy company? K. Rich. 'Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour, that called thy grace. To breakfast once forth of my company. If I be so disgracious in thy eye, Let me march on, and not offend you, madam. — Strike up the drum! K. Rich. You speak too bitterly. D.uch. Hear me a word; For I shall never speak to thee again. K. Rich. So. Duck. Either thou wilt die by God's just ordinance, Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror; Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish, And never look upon thy face again. Therefore, take with thee my most grievous curse; Which in the day of battle thee more, Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st. My prayers on the adverse party fight; And there the little souls of Edward's children Whisper the spirits of thine enemies, and promise them success and victory, Broadly thou art, bloody will be thy end; Name serves thy life, and doth thy death attend. [Exit.

Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Kisses me: I say amen to her.

[Going.

K. Rich. Stay, madam; I must talk a word with you. Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood, For thee to slay; for my daughters, Richard, They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens; And there the level not to hit their lives. K. Rich. Thou hast a daughter call'd Elizabeth, Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious. Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O! let her live, And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty; Tander myself as false to Edward's bed; Throw over her the veil of infamy: She may live unscarc'd of bleeding slaughter, Will confess she was not Edward's daughter. K. Rich. Wrong not her birth; she is a royal princess. Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so. K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth. Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers. K. Rich. Lo! at their birth good stars were opposite. Q. Eliz. No, to their lives ill friends were contrary. K. Rich. All unavoided is the doom of destiny. Q. Eliz. True, when avoided grace makes destiny,以其 babies were destin'd to a fairer death, grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life. K. Rich. You speak, as if that I had slain my cousins. Q. Eliz. Cousin, indeed; and by their uncle's cares, comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life; whose hands soever land'd their tender hearts, by head, all indirectly, gave direction: Doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt, ill it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart, so revel in the entails of my lands. But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame, My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys, Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes; And I, in such a desperate bay of death, Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reef, Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. K. Rich. Madam, so strive I in my enterprise, And dangerous success of bloody wars, As I intend more good to you and yours, Than ever you or yours by me were harm’d! Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven, To be discover'd that can do me good? K. Rich. 'Tis advancement of your children gentle. Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads. K. Rich. Unto the dignity and height of honour. The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrow with report of it: Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honour, Canst thou demise to any child of mine? K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all, Will I withal endow a child of thine; So in the Lethe of thy angry soul Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs, Which, thou supposest, I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness Last longer telling than thy kindness' date. K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul I love thy daughter. Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her soul. K. Rich. What do you think? Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul. So, from thy soul's love didst thou love her brothers; And from my heart's love I do thank thee for it.

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning. I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter, And do intend to make her queen of England. Q. Eliz. Well, then, who dost thou mean shall be her king? K. Rich. Even he that makes her queen: who else should be? Q. Eliz. What thou? K. Rich. Even so: how think you of it? Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her? K. Rich. That I would learn of you, As one being best acquainted with her humour. Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me? K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart. Q. Eliz. Send to her by the man that slew her brothers, A pair of bleeding hearts; thereon engraven Edward and York; then, haply will she weep: Therefore present to her, — as sometime Margaret Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood, A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain The purple sap from her sweet brother's body, And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal. If this inducement move her not to love, Send her a letter of thy noble deeds; Tell her thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence, Her uncle Rivers; ay, and, for her sake, Mustst quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne. K. Rich. You mock me, madam: this is not the way To win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way, Unless thou couldst put on some other shape, And not be Richard that hath done this all.
K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her.
Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed, she cannot choose but hate thee.

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.
K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended.

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent:
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,
To make amends I'll give it to your daughter.
If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
To quicken your increase, I will beget
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.

A grandam's name is little less in love,
Than is the doting title of a mother:
They are as children, but one step below,
Even of your mettle, of your very blood;
Of all one pain, save for a night of groans
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.
Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall all be comfort to your age.
The loss you have is but a son, being king,
And by that loss your daughter is made queen:
I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore, accept such kindness as I can.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul
Treads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions and great dignity:
The king, that calls your beauteous daughter wife,
Famly shall call thy Dorset brother;
Again shall you be mother to a king,
And all the ruins of distressful times
Repair'd with double riches of content.

What! we have many goodly days to see:
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl,
Advantaging their loan with interest
Of ten-times-double gain of happiness.

Go then, my mother; to thy daughter go:
Make bold her bashful years with your experience;
Prepare her ears to hear a worm's tale;
Put in her tender heart that aspiring flame
Of golden sovereign; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys:
And when this arm of mine hath chastised
The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retain my conquest,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.
Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's brother
Would be her lord? Or shall I say, her uncle?
Or he that slew her brothers, and her uncles?
Under what title shall I woo for thee,
That God, the law, my honour, and her love,
Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?
K. Rich. Inher' fair England's peace by this alliance.
Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting war.
K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command, en-treats.
Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's King forbids.
K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.
Q. Eliz. To wait the title, as her mother doth.
K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.
Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last?

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?
K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, lengthen it
Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, like of it.
K. Rich. Say I, her sovereign, am her subject low.
Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, shall sit so sovereignly.
K. Rich. Bo eloquent in my behalf to her.
Q. Eliz. An honest tale speed's best, being plainly told
K. Rich. Then, plainly to her tell my loving tale.
Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.
K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick
Q. Eliz. O! no, my reasons are too deep and dead;
Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.
K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam; that is past
Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I, till heart-strings break.
K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,
Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd
K. Rich. I swear—
Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.
Thy George, profan'd, hath lost its lordly honour;
Thy garter, blen'mish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue;
Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrace'd his kingly glory.
If something thou wouldst swear to believe'd
Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd
K. Rich. Now by the world,—
Q. Eliz. It is full of thy foul wrongs
K. Rich. My father's death,—
Q. Eliz. Thy life hath it dishonour'd
K. Rich. Then, by myself—
Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-mis-usur'd.
K. Rich. Why then, by God.—
Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.

If thou hast fear'd to break an oath with him,
The unity, the king my husband made,
Thou hast not broken, nor my brothers died.
If thou hast fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,
Had grace'd the tender temples of my child;
And both the princes had been breathing here,
Which now, two tender bed-fellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made the prey for worms.
What canst thou swear by now?—
K. Rich. The time to come.
Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'past:
For I myself have many tears to wash
Hereafter time, for time past wrong'd by thee.
The children live whose fathers thou hast slaughter'd,
Ungovern'd youth, to wait it with their age.
The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren plants, to wait it with their age.
Swear not by time to come: for that thou hast
Mis'ud's ere usd', by times ill-us'd o'er-past.
K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repeat,
So thrive I in my dangerous attempt!
Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!
Heaven and fortune bar me happy hours!
Day, yield me not thy light, nor, night, thy rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with purest heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!
In her consists my happiness and thine,
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
KING RICHARD III.

SCENE IV.

It cannot be avoided, but by this;
It will not be avoided, but by this.
Therefore, dear mother, (I must call you so)
Be the attorney of my love to her.
Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
Urg the necessity of state and times, ¹
And be not peevish² fond³ in great designs.
Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?
K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.
Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself, to be myself?
K. Rich. Ay, if your soul’s remembrance wrong yourself.
K. Rich. But in your daughter’s womb I’ll bury them:
Where, in that nest of spicery, they will breed
Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.
Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?
K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.
Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me Richard, very shortly,
And you shall understand from me her mind.⁴
K. Rich. Bear her my true love’s kiss, and so farewell.
Kissing her. Exit Q. Elizabeth.
Relenting fool, and shallow, changing woman!—
How now! what news?

Enter Ratcliff in haste,⁵ Catesby following.
Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm’d, and unresolv’d to beat them back.
’Tis thought that Richmond is their admiral:
And there they halt, expecting but the aid
Of Buckingham to welcome them ashore.
K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the duke of Norfolk:—
Ratcliff, thyself,—or Catesby; where is he?
Cat. Here, my good lord.
Cat. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste.⁶
K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither. Post to Salisbury:
When thou com’st thither,—Dull, unmindful villain,
To Catesby.

Why stay’st thou here, and go’st not to the duke?
Cat. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness’ pleasure,
What from your grace I shall deliver to him.
K. Rich. ‘Tis true, good Catesby.—Bid him levy straight
The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.
Cat. I go.

K. Rich. Why, what wouldest thou do there, before I go?
Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before.

Enter Stanley.

K. Rich. My mind is chang’d.—Stanley, what news with you?
Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;
Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.
K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad?
What needst thou run so many miles about,
When thou may’st tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.
K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him,
White-liver’d runagate! what doth he there?
Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.
K. Rich. Well,⁷ as you guess?
Stan. Stirr’d up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Morton,
He makes for England, here, to claim the crown.
K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsay’d?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossess’d?
What heir of York is there alive, but we,
And who is England’s king, but great York’s heir?
Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?
Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.
K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,
You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.
Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.
Stan. No, my good lord; therefore, mistrust me not.
K. Rich. Where is thy power, then, to beat him back?
Where be thy tenants, and thy followers?
Are they not now upon the western shore,
Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?
Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.
K. Rich. Coid friends to me: What do they in the north,
When they should serve their sovereign in the west?
Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty king.
Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave,
I’ll muster up my friends, and meet your grace.
Where, and what time, your majesty shall please.
K. Rich. Ay, thou wast to be gone to join with Richard:
But I’ll not trust thee.
Stan. Most mighty sovereign,
You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful.
I never was, nor never will be false.
K. Rich. Go, then, and muster men: but leave behind
Your son, George Stanley. Look your heart⁸ be firm,
Or else his head’s assurance is but frail.
Stan. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtenay, and the haughty prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates are in arms.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guildfordes are in arms,
And every hour more competitors
Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham—
K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death?
He strikes him.
There, take thou that, till thou bring better news.
3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty
Is that by sudden floods and fall of waters
Buckingham’s army is dispers’d and scatter’d;
And he himself wander’d away alone,
No man knows whither.
K. Rich. I cry thee mercy
There is my purse, to cure that blow of thine. Rising
Hath any well-advise friend proclaim’d
Reward to him that brings the traitor in?
3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my lord

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Salisbury. An open Place.

Enter the Sheriff, and Guard, with BUCKINGHAM led to Execution.

Buck. Will not king Richard let me speak with him? Sher. No, my good lord; therefore, be patient.

Buck. Hastings, and Edward’s children, Grey, and Rivers, Holy king Henry, and thy fair son Edward, Vaughan, and all that have miscarried By underhand corrupt foul injustice, I’th’that your moody discontented souls Do through the clouds beheld in present hour, Even for revenge mock my destruction!— This is All-Souls’ day, fellow, is it not? Sher. It is. Buck. Why, then, All-Souls’ day is my body’s dooms-day. This is the day, which, in king Edward’s time, I wish’d might fall on me, when I was found False to his children, or his wife’s allies: This is the day, wherein I wish’d to fall By the false faith of him whom most I trusted: This, this All-Souls’ day to my fearful soul Is the determin’d respite of my wrongs. That high All-Seer, which I dabbled with, Hath turn’d my feign’d prayer on my head, And given in earnest what I begg’d in jest. Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men To turn their own points in their masters’ bosoms. Thus Margaret’s curse falls heavy on my neck:— When he, quoteth she, shall split thy heart with sorrow. Remember Margaret was a prophetess.”— Come, lead me, officers, to the block of shame; Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame. [Exit BUCKINGHAM and Officers.

SCENE II.—A Plain near Tamworth.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, RICHMOND, OXFORD Sir JAMES BLUNT, Sir WALTER HERBERT, and others, with Forces, marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends, Brui’d underneath the yoke of tyranny, Thus far into the bowels of the land Have we march’d on without impediment; And here receive we from our father Stanley [Showing a Paper.] Lines of fair comfort and encouragement. The reckless, bloody, and usurping boar, That spoil’d your summer fields, and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough In your embowell’d bosoms, this foul swine Is now even in the centre of this isle, Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn: From Tamworth thither, is but one day’s march. In God’s name, cheerly on, courageous friends, To reap the harvest of perpetual peace By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Orf. Every man’s conscience is a thousand men, To fight against this guilty homicide. Herb. I doubt not, but his friends will turn to us. Blunt. He hath no friends, but what are friends for Which in his dearest need will fly from him. [rear. Richm. All for our vantage: then, in God’s name march True hope is swift, and flies with swallow’s wings, Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. [Exit

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter King RICHARD, and Forces; the Duke of NORFOLK, Earl of Surrey, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tent, even here in Bosworth field.
SCENE III.

KING RICHARD III.

537

ny lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?
Ser. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.
K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk,—
Nor. Here, most gracious liege.
K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knockes; ha! must we not?
Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.
K. Rich. Up with my tent! here will I lie to-night;
[Soldiers begin to set up the King’s Tent.]
where to-morrow? — Well, all’s one for that.—
The hath descried the number of the traitors?
Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
K. Rich. Why, our battalia treasres that account:
issues, the king’s name is a tower of strength,
which they upon the adverse faction want.
with the tent! —Come, noble gentlemen, let us survey the vantage of the ground.
ai for some men of sound direction.
’t a lack no discipline, make no delay, my lords, to-morrow is a busy day.
[Exeunt.]
ater, on the other side of the Field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and other Officers.
Some of the Soldiers pitch Richmond’s Tent.
Richm. The weary run hath made a golden set,
and by the bright track of his fiery ear,
this token of a goodly day to-morrow.—
William Brandon, ye shall bear my standard.
ive me some ink and paper in my tent:
will draw the form and model of our battle,
with each leader to his several charge,
part in just proportion our small power.
y lord of Oxford,—you, Sir William Brandon,— you, sir Walter Herbert, stay with me.
be earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment:
which, bear my good night to him,
by the second hour in the morning were the earl to see me in my tent.—
it one thing more, good captain, do for me:
here is lord Stanley quarter’d, do you know?—
Blunt. Unless I have mista’en his colours much, which, I am assured, I have not done)
a regiment lies half a mile, at least,
with the mighty power of the king.
Richm. If without peril it be possible, preet Blunt, make some good means to speak with
him,
d give him from me this most needful note.
Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I will undertake it;
d so, God give you quiet rest to-night.
Richm. Good night, good Captain Blunt.—Cowe, gentlemen.
us consult upon to-morrow’s business.
to my tent, the dew is raw and cold.
[They withdraw into the Tent.]
ter, to his Tent, King Richard, Norfolk, Ratcliff, and Catesby.
K. Rich. What is ’t o’clock.
Cate. It’s supper time, my lord; it’s nine o’clock.
K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—
me some ink and paper.
at, is my beaver easier than it was,
d all my armour laid into my tent?
Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.
Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge.
: careful watch; choose trusty sentinels.
Vor. I go, my lord.
K. Rich. Stir with the dark to-morrow, gentle Norfolk.
Vor. I warrant you, my lord.
[Exit.

K. Rich. Ratcliff!
Rat. My lord?
K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley’s regiment: bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind cave of eternal night.—
Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch:
Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.
Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.
Ratcliff!—
Rat. My lord?
K. Rich. Sawst thou the melancholy lord Northumber-land?
Rat. Thomas the earl of Surrey, and himself,
Much about cock-shut time, from troop to troop
Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.
K. Rich. So: I am satisfied
Give me a bowl of wine:
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—
[Wine brought.
Set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?
Rat. It is, my lord.
K. Rich. Bid my guard watch. Leave me,
Ratcliff, about the mid of night, come to my tent
And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say.
[King Richard retires into his Tent. Exeunt
Ratcliff and Catesby.
Richmond’s Tent opens, and discovers him and his Officers, &c.
Enfer Stanley.
Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!
Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford,
Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
Tell me, I pray, how fares our loving mother?
Stan. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother,
Who prays continually for Richmond’s good:
So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.
In brief, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy battle early in the morning;
And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
Of bloody strokes, and mortal-staring war.
I, as I may, (that which I would I cannot)
With best advantage will decide the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms.
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George,
Be executed in his father’s sight.
Farewell. The leisure and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love,
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so long sunder’d friends should dwell upon.
God give us leisure for these rites of love!
Once more, adieu.—Be valiant, and speed well.
Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment.
I’ll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest leden slumber peasé me down to-morrow;
When I should mount with wings of victory,
Once more, good night. kind lords, and gentlemen.
[Exeunt Lords, &c., with Stanley.
O! Thou, whose captain I account myself, [Kneeling.
Look on them forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising iron of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Their usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, O, defend me still!

[ Lies down and sleeps.]

The Ghost of Prince Edward, Son to Henry the Sixth, rises between the two Tents.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To King Richard.]

Think how thou stabb'st me, in my prime of youth,
At Tewksbury: despair, therefore, and die.
— Be cheerful, Richmond: for the wrong'd souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

The Ghost of King Henry the Sixth rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body
By thee was pumished full of deadly holes:
Think on the Tower, and me: despair, and die;
Harry the sixth bids thee despair and die.—
  Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror!

[To Richmond.]

Harry, that prophesy'd thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep: live thou, and flourish.

The Ghost of Clarence rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow.

[To King Richard.]

I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!
And fall thy edgeless sword. Despair, and die.—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To Richmond.]

The wrongful heirs of York do pray for thee;
Good angels guard thy battle! Live and flourish.

The Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan rise.

Riv. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow.

[To King Richard.]

Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair.

[To Richmond.]

Vaugh. Think upon Vaughan, and with guilty fear
Let fall thy pointless lance. Despair, and die —

[To King Richard.]

All. Awake! and think our wrongs in Richard's bosom
Will conquer him.—Awake! and win the day!

The Ghost of Hastings rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake;

[To Richard.]

And in a bloody battle end thy days.
Think on lord Hastings: spelt repair, and die.
Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!

[To Richmond.]

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake.

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins oder'm in the Tower:
Let us be lean within thy bosom, Richard,
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death.
Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.
Sleep, Richard, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy
Live, and begat a happy race of kings.
Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of Queen Anne rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,
That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy powerless arm. Despair, and die.—
Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep —

[To Richmond.]

Dream of success and happy victory:
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of Buckingham riseth.

Ghost. The first was I that help'd thee to the crown
The last was I that felt thy tyranny.
O! in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness.
Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death:
Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath.
— I died for hope ere I could lend thee aid;

[To Richmond.]

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:
God, and good angels fight on Richmond's side;
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish.]

K. Rich. Give me another horse!—bind up my wounds!—
Have mercy, Jeu!—Soft! I did but dream.—
O, coward conscience, how dost thou affright me!—
The lights burn blue.—It is now dead midnight.
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
What do I fear? myself? there's none else by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
Is there a murderer here? No; yea; I am:
Then fly,—What, from myself? Great reason: why!
Lest I revenge. What! Myself upon myself?
Alack! I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,
That I myself have done unto myself?
O! no: alas! I rather hate myself,
For hateful deeds committed by myself.
I am a villain. Yet I lie; I am not.
Fool, of thyself speak well:—Fool, do not flatter.
My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.
Perjury, foul! perjury, in the highest degree;
Murder, stern murder, in the dirtiest degree:
All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
Throng to the bar, crying all,—Guilty! guilty!
I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me;
And if I die, no soul shall pity me.—
Nay, what should they? since that I myself Find in myself no pity to myself.
Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd Came to my tent; and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

Rat. My lord.—
K. Rich. Who's there?

Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village e'en
Hath twice done salutation to the morn;
Your friends are up, and buckles on their armour.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I have dream'd a fear'd dream.—
What think'st thou? will our friends prove all true?

Rat. No doubt, my lord.
Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows
K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.

KING RICHARD III

It is not yet near day. Come, go with me:
Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To hear if any mean to shrug from me.

[Exeunt King Richard and Ratcliff.

Enter Oxford and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond.

Riccm. Cry mercy, lords, [Waking] and watchful
gentlemen,
That ye have taken a tardy sluggard here.

Lords. Pewn have ye slept, my lord?

Riccm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding dreams,
That ever enter'd in a drowsy head,
Have I since your departure had, my lords.
Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard murder'd,
Came to my tent, and cried—On! victory!
I promise you, my heart! is very joyous
In the remembrance of so fair a dream.

How far into the morning is it, lords?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Riccm. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give directions. [He advances to the Troops.

More than I have said, loving countrymen.
The leisure and enforcement of the time.

Forbid to dwell on: yet remember this,—
God and our good cause fight upon our side;
The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls,
Like high-rear'd bulwarks stand before our faces.
Richard except, those whom we fight against
Had rather have us win, than him they follow.

For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant, and a homicide;
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him;
A base foul stone, made precious by the foul
Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever God's enemy.

Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers:
If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foe,
Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire;
If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;
If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit it in your age.
Then, in the name of God, and all these rights,
Advance your standards, draw your willing swords.
For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;
But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt,
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly, cheerfully;
God, and Saint George! Richmond, and victory!

Re-enter King Richard, Ratcliff, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching
Richard?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.

K. Rich. He said the truth: and what said Surrey then?

Rat. He smiled and said, the better for our purpose.

K. Rich. He was 't the right; and so, indeed, it is.

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.

[Clock strikes.

[Calendar brought.

Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine: for, by the book,
He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.—

Ratcliff!—

Rat. My lord.

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day:
The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.
I would, these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me.
More than to Richmond? for the self-same heaven,
That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord! the foe vaunts in the field.

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle.—Caparison my horse.—

Call up lord Stanley, bid him bring his power.
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered.

My foreswear'd shall be drawn out in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot:
Our archers shall be placed in the midst,
John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of the foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will follow them
In the main battle; whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou,
Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—

This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a Paper.

K. Rich. "Jockey of Norfolk be not too bold,

Rats. For Dicken thy master is bought and sold.'

A thing devised by the enemy.—
Go, gentlemen; every man to his charge.
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;
For conscience is a word that cowards use,
Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe:
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.
March on, join bravely, let us to 't pell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—
What shall I say more than I have inferred?

Remember who you are to cope withal;—
A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways,
A seum of Bretagnes, and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assured destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;
You having lands, and bless'd with beauteous wives,
They would distrain the one, distain the other.
And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost;
A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives.
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves
If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Bretagnes; whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd,
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?

Ravish our daughters?—Hark, I hear their drum.
Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!
Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head;
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves.

Enter a Messenger.
What says lord Stanley? will he bring his power?
Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.
K. Rich. Off with his son George's head.
Nor. My lord, the enemy is past the marsh:
After the battle let George Stanley die.
K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom.
Advance our standards! set upon our foes!
Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!
Upon them! Victory sit on our helms! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarum: Excursions. Enter Norfolk, and Forces; to him Catesby.

Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk! rescue, rescue!
The king enacts more wonders than a man,
Daring an opposite to every danger.
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death.
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!
Cate. Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.
K. Rich. Slave! I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die.
I think there be six Richmonds in the field;
Five have I slain to-day, instead of him.—
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter King Richard and Richmond; and exeunt, fighting. Retreat and flourish. Then enter Richmond, Stanley bearing the Crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces.

Richm. God, and your arms, be prais'd, victorious friends,
The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead.

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acqui-
thee.

Lo! here, this usurped royalty,
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal:
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all!—
But, tell me, is young George Stanley living?
Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;
Whither, if you please, we may withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side!
Stan. John duke of Norfolk, Walter lord Ferrers,
Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births.
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,
That in submission will return to us;
And then, as we have taken the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose and the red:—
Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,
That long hath frowned upon their eminence!—
What traitor hears me, and says not, amen?
England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;
The brother blindly sheds the brother's blood,
The father rashly slays his own son,
The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire;
All this divided York and Lancaster,
Divided in their dire division.
O! now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together:
And let their heirs, (God, if they be so)
Enrich the time to come with smooth-faced peace.
With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!
Rebate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again,
And make poor England weep in streams of blood:
Let them not live to taste this land's increase,
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace.
New civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again:
That she may long live here, God say, amen! [Exeunt.
KING HENRY VIII.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

KING HENRY THE EIGHTH;
CARDINAL WOLSEY. CARDINAL CAMPELUS.
CAPUCIUS, Ambassador from Charles V.
CRANMER, Archbishop of Canterbury.
DUKE OF NORFOLK. EARL OF SURREY.
DUKE OF SUFFOLK. DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM.
LORD CHAMBERLAIN. LORD CHANCELLOR.
GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester.
BISHOP OF LINCOLN. LORD ABERGAVENNY. LORD SANDS.
SIR HENRY GUILDFORD. SIR THOMAS LOVELL.
SIR ANTHONY DENTY. SIR NICHOLAS VAUX.
Secretaries to Wolsey.
CROMWELL, Servant to Wolsey.

Several Lords and Ladies in the Dumb Shows; Women attending upon the Queen; Spirits, which appear to her; Scribes, Officers, Guards, and other Attendants.

SCENE, chiefly in London and Westminster; once, at Kimbolton.

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh: things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it: such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too: those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree:
The play may pass, if they be still and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shining
Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets, or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded1 with yellow,

Will be deceiv'd; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
To make that only true we now intend,
Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known,
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad as we would make ye: think, ye see
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living; think, you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng, and swear
Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery:
And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding day.

ACT I.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, at one door; at the other,
the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Abergavenny.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have you done,
Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace,
Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw here

Buck. An untimelyague

1 End of line.

Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those sums of glory, those two lights of men,
Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback,
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they slung,
In their embrace, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost

541
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time, pomp was single; but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders it's: to-day the French
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and to-morrow they Made Britain, India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gilt: the madams, too,
Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this mask
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
'T was said, they saw but one: and no discern
Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these suns
(For so they praise 'em) by their heralds challenge'd
The noble spirits to armour, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,
Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That Bevis 1 was believ'd.

Buck. 2 O! you go far.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discourser lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal:
To the disposing of it ought rebell'd;
Order gave each thing view.

Buck. The office did
Distinctly his full function. 3 Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, or three, that promises no element
In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?

Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion
Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder,
That such a koch 4 can, with his very bulk,
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends;
For, being not prop'd by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way, nor call'd upon
For high festivities done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistants, but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he 6 gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives him, and which buys
A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him: let some graver eye
Pierce into that; but I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him: whence has he that?
If not from hell, the devil is a naggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
(Without the privity o' the king) 7 I appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the idle

Of all the gentry: for the most part such
Too, 8 whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon; and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sick'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O! many
Have broke their backs, with laying manors on them.
For this great journey. What did this vanity,
But minister the consummation 9 of
A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievously I think,
The peace between the French and us not valued
The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy,—that this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, abode
The sudden breach on 't.

Nor. Which is bidden out;
For France hath faw'd the league, and hath staid'd
Our merchants' goods at Bordeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
Th' ambassador is silenc'd?

Nor. Marry, is 't.

Aber. A proper title of peace, and purchase'd
At a superfluous rate.

Buck. Why, all this business.
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. Like it you grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety) that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together: to consider farther, that
What his high hatred would effect wants not
A minister in his power. You know his nature,
That he's revengeful; and, I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and 't may be said,
It reaches far; and where 't will not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosoam up my council;
You 'll find it wholesome. Lo! where comes that not
That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal Wolsey (the Purse borne before him, certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries wi Papers. The Cardinal in his passage fash't his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, but full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor? ha!
Where 's his examination?

1 Serc. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

1 Serc. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buckingham Shall lessen this big look. [Exit Wolsey, and Then Buck. This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd: and Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore, best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's brood
Out-worths a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance; that 's th' appliance only,
Which your disease requires.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE II.

Buck. I read in's looks Matter against me; and his eye revil'd Me, as his object object: at this instant He borne me with some trick. He's gone t' the king: 'll follow, and out-stare him
Nor. Stay, my lord, And let your reason with your choler question 'What's it you go about? To climb steep hills, Requires slow pace at first: anger is like A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his way, Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England Can advise me like you: be to yourself, As you would to your friend.
Buck. I'll to the king; And from a mouth of honour, quite cry down This I.awich fellow's insolence, or proclaim There's difference in no persons.
Nor. Be advis'd.
Buck. Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot That it do singe yourself: we may outrun By violent swiftness that which we run at, And lose by over-rushing. Know you not, The fire that mounts the liquor till 't run o'er, In coming to augment it wastes it? Be advis'd: I say again, there is no English soil More strong to direct you than yourself, If with the sap of reason you would quench, Or but alay, the fire of passion.
Buck. Sir, I am thankful to you, and I'll go along By your prescription; but this top-proud fellow, Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but From sincere motions, by intelligence, And proofs as clear as fountains in July, when We see each grain of gravel, I do know To be corrupt and treasounous.
Nor. Say not, treasounous.
Buck. To the king I'll say 't, and make my vouch as strong As shore of rock. Attend: this holy fox, Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravenous, As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief, As able to perform t', his mind and place Infecting one another, you (reciprocally) Only to show his pomp, as well in France As here at home, suggests the king, our master, To this last costly treaty, th' interview That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass Did break t' the raining.
Nor. Faith, and so it did.
Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal
The articles o' the combination drew, As himself pleas'd: and they were ratified, As he cried, "Thus let be," to as much end, As give a crusth t' the dead. But our count-cardinal Has done this, and 't is well: for worthy Wolsey, Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows, (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy To the old dam, treason) Charles the emperor, Under pretence to see the queen, his aunt, (For 't was, indeed, his colour, but he came To whisper Wolsey) here make visitation: His fears were, that the interview between England and France might, through their amity, Breed him some prejudice; for from this league, Peep'd harms that menace him. He privily Deals with our cardinal, and, as I trow, Which I do well; for, I am sure, the emperor Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his suit was granted, Ere it was ask'd: but when the way was made, And pay'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd:— That he would please to alter the king's course, And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know, (As soon he shall by me) that thus the cardinal Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases, And for his own advantage.
Nor. I am sorry To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in't.
Buck. No, not a syllable: I do pronounce him in that very shape, He shall appear in proof.
Enter Brandon; a Sergeant at Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.
Buck. Your office, sergeant; execute it.
Serg. Sir, My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I Arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.
Buck. Lo, you, my lord! The net has fall'n upon me: I shall perish Under device and practice.
Buck. I am sorry To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on The business present. 'Tis his highest pleasure, You shall to the Tower.
Buck. It will help me nothing To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me, Which makes my whist part black. The will of heaven Be done in this and all things.—I obey.— O! my lord Abercany', fare you well.
Buck. Nay, he must bear you company.—The king [To ABERCANY] Is pleas'd you shall to the Tower, till you know How he determines farther.
Serg. As the duke said, The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure By me obey'd.
Buck. Here is a warrant from The king t' attach lord Montague; and the bodies Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car, And Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—
Buck. So, so; These are the limbs o' the plot.—No more, I hope.
Buck. A monk o' the Chartreuse.
Buck. O! Nicholas Hopkins?
Buck. He.
Buck. My surveyor is false: the o'er-great cardinal Hath show'd him gold. My life is span'd already: I am the shadow of poor Buckingham, Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on, By darkening my clear sun.—My lord, farewell. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Council-Chamber.
Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder; WOLSEY, the Lords of the Council, Sir THOMAS LOVELL, Officers, Secretary.
K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it, Thank you for this great care. I stood t' the level Of a full charg'd condely, and give thanks To you that chok'd it.—Let be call'd before us That gentleman of Buckingham's: in person I' ll hear him his confessions justify, And point by point the treasons of his master He shall again relate. The King takes his State. The Lords of the Council occupy their several Places: the Cardinal places himself under the King's Feet on his right Side.

A Noise within, crying Room for the Queen! Enter the Queen, whered by the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk: she kneels. The King rises from his State, takes her up, kisses her, and places her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a suitor.

K. Hen. Aries, and take place by us.—Half your suit
Never name to us; you have half our power;
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;
Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.

That you would love yourself, and in that love
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance. There have been commissions
Sent down among them, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties: wherein, although,
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter-on
Of these exactions, yet the king our master,
Whose honour heaven shield from soil! even he escapes not Language unwmannerly; yea, such which breaks
The ties of royalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
It doth appear; for upon these taxes,
The cloathiers all; not able to maintain
The many to them long'ning, have put off
The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers, who,
Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger
And lack of other means, in desperate manner
Daring th' event to the teeth, are all in uproar,
And danger serves among them.

K. Hen. Taxation! Wherein, and what taxation?—My lord cardinal,
You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir,
I know but of a single part, in ought
Pertains to the state; and front but in that file
Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. No, my lord,
You know no more than others; but you frame
Things, that are known, belike, which are not wholesome
To those which would not know them, and yet must perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions, Whereof my sovereign would have note, they are most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear them, the back is sacrifice to the load. They say, They are devils' by you, or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction! The nature of it? In what kind, let 's know,
Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturous
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. The subjects' grief
Comes through commissions, which compell from each
The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay; and the pretence for this Is near, your wars in France. This makes bold mouths:

Tongues spit their dutes out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegiance in them: their curses now,
Live where their prayers did; and it's come to pass
Their tractable obedience is a slave.
To each incensed will. I would, your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business.

K. Hen. By my life, This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no farther gone in this, than by
A single voice, and that not pass'd me but
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am
Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. let me say,
'T is but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. We must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope malicious censurers; which ever,
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd, but benefit no farther
Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters (once weak ones) is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft,
Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or car'd at,
We should take root here, where we sit, or sit
State statutes only.

K. Hen. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear:
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trebling contribution! Why, we take,
From every tree, hop, bark, and part of the timber,
And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd,
The air will drink the sap. To every county
Where this is question'd, send their letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied
The force of this commission. Pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you. [To the Secretary.
Let there be letters writ to every thing
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd common
Hardly conceive of me: let it be nois'd,
That through our intercession this revokement
And pardon comes. I shall anon advise you
Farther in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the duke of Buckingham
Is one in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker;
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself: ye see,
When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. This man so complete,
Who was enrol'd amongst wonder, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd list'n, could not find
His hour of speech; a minute, 'twas my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black
As if besmeard'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear
This was his gentleman in trust of him
Things to strike honour sauc'd. — Bid him recount
The fore-recited practices, whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.
Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what you,
Most like a careful subject, have collected
Out of the duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.

Sur. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his. These very words
I've heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Abergav'ny, to whom by oath he menace'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous concepcion in this point.
Not favoured by his wish, to your high person
He felt it most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learned lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen. Speak on.

Sur. He was brought to this
By the prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Sur. Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessour; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?

Sur. Not long before your highness sped to France,
The duke being at the Rose, within the parish
Saint Lawrence Poulney, did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners
Concerning the French journey? — I replied,
Men fear'd the French would prove pernicious,
To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Said, 't was the fear, indeed; and that he doubted,
T would prove the verity of certain words
Said by a holy monk; "that oft," says he,
'Nath to me sent, wishing me to permit
John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour
To hear from him a matter of some moment:
Whom after, under the confession's seal,
He solemnly had sworn, that what he spake
By his chaplain to no creature living, but
'Om, should utter, with demure confidence
His pausingly ensued. — Neither the king, nor his heir, Tell you the duke) shall prosper: bid him strive
'Gain the love of the commonalty: the duke shall govern England.

Q. Kath. If I knew you well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
In the complaint of the tenants. Take good heed,
On charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And revel your nobler soul: I say, take heed;
Ea. heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Let him on.

Sur. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
Told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions
He monk might be deceive'd; and that 't was dangerous
From this to ruminate on it so far, until Forg'd him some design, which, being believ'd,
It was much like to do: He answered, "Tush!
It can do me no damage:" adding farther,
That had the king in his last sickness fail'd.
The cardinal's and sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ha!
There's mischief in this man.—Canst thou say farther?

Sur. I can, my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Sur. Being at Greenwich,
After your highness had reprov'd the duke
About sir William Blomer,—

K. Hen. I remember,
Of such a time: being my sworn servant,
The duke retain'd him his. — But on: what hence?

Sur. "If," quoth he, "I for this had been committed,
As, to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
Th' usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in 's presence, which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him."

K. Hen. A giant traitor!

Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom,
And this man out of prison?

Q. Kath. God mend all!

K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee:
What say'st?*?

Sur. After "the duke his father," with "the knife,
He stretch'd him, and with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on a breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenor
Was,—were he evil us'd, he would out-go
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period,
To sheathe his knife in us.—He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may
Find mercy in the law, 't is his; if none,
Let him not seek 's of us. By day and night,
He is a daring traitor to the height. *[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, and Lord Sands.

Cham. Is't possible, the spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mysteries?

Sands. New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let 'em be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English
Have got by the late voyage is but merely
A fit or two of the face; but they are shrewd ones,
For when they hold 'em, you would swear directly,
Their very noses had been counsellors
To Popin or Clotharius, they keep state so.

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones: one
Would take it,
That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin,
Or springhalt reign'd among them.

Cham. Death! my lord, their clothes are after such a paper cut too,
That, sure, they've worn out Christendom.—How now!

What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lov. *'Faith, my lord, I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.

Cham. What is 't for?
Lou. The reformation of our travell'd gallants, That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.

Cham. I am glad 'tis there: now, I would pray our monseurs
To think an English courtier may be wise, And never see the Louvre.

Lou. They must either
(For so run the conditions) leave those remnant
Of fool, and feather, that they got in France, With all their honourable points of ignorance Pertaining thereunto, as lights and fireworks; Abusing better men than they can be, Out of a foreign wisdom; renouncing clean The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings, Short blister'd breeches, and those types of travel, And understand again like honest men, Or pack to their old playfellows; there, I take it They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their统领ness, and be laugh'd at.

Sanis. 'Tis time to give 'em physic, their diseases Are grown so catching.

Cham. What a loss our ladies Will have of these trim vanities.

Lou. Ay, marry, There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly whoresones Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies; A French song and a fiddle have no fellows.

Sanis. The devil fiddle them! I am glad they're going, For, sure, there's no converting of them: now, An honest country lord, as I am, beaten A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song, And have an hour of hearing, and by-'r-lady, Hold current music too.

Cham. Well said, lord Sands: Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

Sanis. No, my lord; Nor shall not, while I have a stump.

Cham. Sir Thomas, Whither were you a going?

Lou. Your lordship is a guest too.

Sanis. O! 'tis true: This night he makes a supper, and a great one, To many lords and ladies: there will be The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.

Lou. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed; A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us; His dews fall everywhere.

Cham. No doubt, he's noble; 'He had a black mouth that said other of him. Sands. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal: in him Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine. Men of his sway should be most liberal; They are sent here for examples.

Cham. True, they are so; But few now give so great ones. My barge stays; Your lordship shall along.—Come, good sir Thomas, We shall be late else; which I would not be, For I was spoke to, with sir Henry Guildford, This night to be comptrollers.

Sanis. I am your lordship's. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Presence-Chamber in York-Place.

Hautboys. A small Table under a State for the Cardinal, a longer Table for the Guests; then enter Anne Bullen, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen, as Guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir Henry Guildford.

Gild.—Ladies, a general welcome from his grace

Sanites ye all: this night he dedicates To fair content, and you. None here, he hopes, In all this noble bevy, has brought with her One care abroad; he would have all as merry As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome Can make good people.—O, my lord! y' are tardy; Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sand, and Sir Thom

A Lovell.

The very thought of this fair company Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, sir Harry Guildford, and Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rest'd, I think, would better please 'em: by my life, They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lou. O! that your lordship were but now confessor To one or two of these.

Sanis. I would, I were; They should find easy penance.

Lou. Faith, how easy?

Sanis. As easy as a dawn-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this. His grace is entering.—Nay, you must not freeze; Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:— My lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking; Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sanis. By my faith, And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies [Seats himself between Anne Bullen and another Lady: If I choose to talk a little wild, forgive me; I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Sanis. O! very mad, exceeding mad; in love too; But he would bite none: just as I do now, He would kiss you twenty with a breath. [Kisses her. Cham. Well said, my lord:— So, now you are fairly seated—Gentlemen, The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies Pause away frowning.

Sanis. For my little cure, Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, attended, and takes his State.

Wol. Ye are welcome, my fair guests: that noble lady Or gentleman, that is not freely merry, Is not my friend. This, to confirm my welcome; And to you all good health. [Drinks.

Sanis. Your grace is noble: Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks, And save me so much talking.

Wol. My lord Sands, I am beholding to you: cheer your neighbours.— Ladies, you are not merry,—gentlemen, Whose fault is this?

Sanis. The red wine first must rise In their fair cheeks, my lord; then, we shall have 'e Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamestater, My lord Sands.

Sanis. Yes, if I make my play.

Here's to your ladyship; and pledge it, madam, For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.

Sanis. I told your grace how they would talk and [Drum and Trumpets within; Chambers discharge Wol. What's the Cham. Look out there, some of you. [Exit a Seren
KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I. — A Street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?
2 Gent. O! — God save you.

1 Gent. On to the hall, to hear what shall become of the great duke of Buckingham.
2 Gent. I'll save you that labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony of bringing back the prisoner.

1 Gent. Were you there?
2 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.
1 Gent. Pray, speak what hath happened.
2 Gent. You may guess quickly what.
1 Gent. Is he found guilty?
2 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon it.
1 Gent. I am sorry for 't.
2 Gent. So are a number more.
1 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

ACT II.

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke came to the bar; where, to his accusations, he pleaded still not guilty, and alleged many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary, urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions of divers witnesses, which the duke desir'd to have brought, even soe, to his face:

At which appeared against him, his surveyor; Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Car, confessor to him; with that devil-monk, Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2 Gent. That was he, that led him with his prophecies.

1 Gent. The same.

All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could not: and so his peers, upon this evidence, have found him guilty of high treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.

2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?

1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirred
With such an agony, he sweat extremely,
And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty:
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly
In all the rest show’d a most noble patience.

2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.

1 Gent. Sure, he does not;
He was never so womanish: the cause
He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent. Certainly.

The cardinal is the end of this.

1 Gent. 'Tis likely
By all conjectures: first, Kildare’s attainer,
Then deputy of Ireland; who remov’d,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Least he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep ensnaring one.

1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally:—whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment.
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and, o’ my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much
They love and dote on; call him, bounteous Buckingham,

The mirror of all courtesy—

1 Gent. Stay there, sir;
And see the noble ruin’d man you speak of.

Enter Buckinham from his Arraignment; Tipstaves before him; the Axe with the edge towards him;
Halberds on each side; accompanied with Sir Thomas
Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sandys, and common People.

2 Gent. Let’s stand close, and behold him.

Buck. All good people,
You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I have this day receiv’d a traitor’s judgment,
And by that name must die: yet, heaven bear witness,
And if I have a conscience let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful.
The law I bear no malice for my death,
It has done upon the premises but justice;
But those that sought it I could wish more Christians:
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them.
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
For farther life in this world I ne’er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have merces
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov’d me,
And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends and followers, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorces of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o’ God’s name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all:
There cannot be those numberless offences
‘Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with: no black envy
Shall make my grave. Command me to his grace;
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him,
You met him half in heaven. My vows and prayers
Yet are the king’s; and, till my soul forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him: may he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years.
Ever kind, and loving, and just,
And when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your grace;
Then, give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there!
The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, sir Nicholas,
Let it alone: my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Boscawen;
Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant. I now seal it;
And with that blood will one day make them groan’s los’t
My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first raise’d head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister;
Being distress’d, was by that wretch betray’d,
And without trial fell: God’s peace be with him!
Henry the seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father’s loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor’d me to my honours, and out of ruins
Made my name once more noble. Now, his son,
Henry the eighth, life, honour, name, and all
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father;
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes,—both
Fall’d by our servants, by those men we lov’d most;
A most unnatural and faithless service.
Heaven has an end in all; yet, you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain:
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsel,
Be sure, you be not loose; for those you make friends
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But when’ they mean to sink ye. All good people
Pray for me. I must now forsake ye: the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me.

Farewell: and when you would say something that said,
Speak how I fell.—I have done, and God forgive me.

[Exit Buckingham.]

1 Gent. O! this is full of pity. Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads
That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inkling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
What may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 't will require
A strong faith to conceal it.
1 Gent. Let me have it:
I do not talk much.
2 Gent. I am confident:
You shall, sir. Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Katharine?
1 Gent. Yes, but it held not;
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That last dispersed it.
2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now; for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was, and held for certain
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal, or some about him near, have out of malice
To the good queen possess'd him with a scruple,
That will undo her: to confirm this, too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately,
As all think, for this business.
1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpose'd.
2 Gent I think, you have hit the mark: but 'tis not cruel,
That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal
Will have his will, and she must fall.
1 Gent. 'Tis woful.
Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a letter.

Cham. "My lord,—The horses your lordship sent be with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. When they were sent to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinall's, by commission and main power, took them from me:
with this reason,—his master would be served before a subject, not before the king; which stopped our mouths. sir;"
I fear, he will, indeed. Well, let him have them:
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Nor. Well met, my lord chamberlain.
Cham. Good day to both your graces.
Nor. How is the king employ'd?
Cham. I left him private,
full of sad thoughts and troubles.
Suf. What's the cause?
Cham. 'Tis seems, the marriage with his brother's wife has crept too near his conscience.
Suf. Has he crept too near another lady.
Nor. 'Tis no
Nor. Has the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal?
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,
Whose what he list. The king will know him one day.
Suf. Pray God, he do: he'll never know himself else.
Nor. How holily he works in all his business.
And with what zeal; for, now he has crack'd the league between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,
Is dives into the king's soul; and there scatters
Lugas, doubts, wringing of the conscience, and despair, and all these for his marriage:
as, out of all these, to restore the king.

He counsels a divorce; a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre;
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with; even of her
That when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king. And is not this course pious?
Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'Tis most true,
These news are every where; every tongue speaks them,
And every true heart weeps for it. All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end,—
The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that have so long slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.
Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance,
Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages. All men's honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.
Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed.
As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please: his curses and his blessings
Touch me alike, they're breath I not believe in.
I know him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in,
And with some other business put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
My lord, you'll bear us company? [him.
Cham. Excuse me;
The king hath sent me other-where: besides,
You'll find a most unfair time to disturb him.
Health to your lordships.
Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Curtain drawn: the King is discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks: sure, he is much afflicted.
K. Hen. Who is there? ha!
Nor. Pray God, he be not angry.
K. Hen. Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves
Into my private meditations?
Who am I? ha!
Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences,
Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty this way
Is business of estate, in which we come
To know your royal pleasure.
K. Hen. Ye are too bold.
Go to: I'll make ye know your times of business:
Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha!—
[raising his book.

Enter Wolsey and Campeius.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O! my Wolsey,
The quiet of my wounded conscience;
Thou art a cure fit for a king.—You're welcome.
[To Campeius
Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom:
Use us, and it.—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker.
[To Wolsey.
Wol. Sir, you cannot.
I would, your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.
K. Hen. We are busy; go.
[To Norfolk and Suffolk.
Nor. This priest has no pride in him.
Suf. Not to speak of; I would not be so sick though for his place:
But this cannot continue. \[Aside.\]
Nor. If it do, I'll venture one heavie at him.
Suf. I another. \[Exit Norfolk and Suffolk.\]
Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom
Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom.
Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble. All the clerks,
I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms
Have their free voices: Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hast sent
One general tongue unto us, this good man,
This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius;
Whom once more I present unto your highness.
K. Hen. And once more in mine arms I bid him welcome,
And thank the holy conclave for their loves:
They have sent me such a man I would have wish’d for.
Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers’ loves,
You are so noble. To your highness’ hand
\[Kneeling and rising again.\]
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
(The court of Rome commanding) you, my lord
Cardinal of York, are join’d with me, their servant,
In the unpartial judging of this business.
K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted
Forwith for what you came.—Where’s Gardiner?
Wol. I know, your majesty has always lov’d her
So dear in heart, not to deny her that
A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars, allow’d freely to urge for her.
K. Hen. Ay, and the best, she shall have; and my favour
To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,
Pr’ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:
I find him a fit fellow. \[Exit Wolsey.\]
Re-enter Wolsey, with Gardiner.
Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour to you;
You are the king’s now.
Gard. But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais’d me.
K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.
\[They walk and whisper.\]
Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor Pace
In this man’s place before him?
Wol. Yes, he was.
Cam. Was he not held a learned man?
Wol. Yes, surely.
Cam. Believe me, there’s an ill opinion spread, then,
Even of yourself, lord cardinal.
Wol. How! of me?
Cam. They will not stick to say, you enviéd him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev’d him,
That he ran mad, and died.
Wol. Heaven’s peace be with him! That’s Christian care enough: for living murmurers
There’s places of rebuke. He was a fool,
For he would needs be virtuous: that good fellow,
If I command him, follows my appointment:
I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,
We live not to be grip’d by meaner persons.
K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen. \[Exit Gardiner.\]
The most convenient place that I can think of,
For such receipt of learning, is Black-Friars:
There ye shall meet about this weighty business.
My Wolsey, see it furnish’d.—O my lord!
Would it not grieve an able man, to leave
So sweet a bed fellow? But, conscience, conscience,—
O! ’tis a tender place, and I must leave her. \[Exit.\]
SCENE III.—An Ante-chamber in the Queen’s Apartments.

Enter Anne Boleyn, and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither:—here’s the pang that pinches;
His highness having liv’d so long with her, and she
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her: by my life,
She never knew harm-doing.—O! now, after
So many courses of the sun ethron’d,
Still growing in a majesty and pomp, the which
To leave’s a thousand-fold more bitter, than
Sweet at first t’ acquire,—after this process,
To give her the avault! it is a pity
Would move a monster.
Old L. Hearts of most hard tempers
Melt and lament for her.
Anne. O, God’s will! much bett’r.
She ne’er had known pomp: though it be temporl’,
Yet, if that cruel fortune do divorce
It from the bearer, ’t is a sufferance panging
As soul and body’s severing.
Old L. Alas, poor lady!
She’s a stranger now again?
Anne. So much the more.
Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, it is better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk’d up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
Old L. Our content
Is our best having.
Anne. By my troth, and maidenshead,
I would not be a queen.
Old L. Beheshew me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for t’; and so would you,
For all this spice of your hypocrisy.
You that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have, too, a woman’s heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty:
Which, to say sooth, are blessings, and which gifts
(Saving your mincing) the capacity
Of your soft cheverills’ conscience would receive,
If you might please: to stretch it.
Anne. Nay, good troth.
Old L. Yes, troth, and troth.—You would not be a queen?
Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.
Old L. ’Tis strange: a three-pence bowd was to me,
Old as I am, to queen it. But, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of titles? \[Exit.\]
Anne. No, in troth.
Old L. Then you are weakly made. Pluck off little:
\[Footnotes: 1 Not in f.o. 2 If that quarrel, fortune, do divorce, &c: in f.o. 3 Kid-skin. 4 Descend.\]
SCENE IV.
KING HENRY VIII.

I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to, If your back
Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 't is too weak
Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!
I swear again, I would not be a queen
For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an embalming: I myself
Would for Carnavonshire, although there 'long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo! who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were 't worth to know
The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking.
Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women: there is hope
All will be well.

Anne. Now, I pray God, amen!
Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings
Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high notes
Tell of your many virtues, the king's majesty
Commends his good opinion of you to, and Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing
Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should tender:
More than my all is nothing; nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities: yet prayers, and Wishes,
Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health, and royalty, I pray for.

Cham. Lady,
I shall not fail t' improve the fair conceit.
The king hath of you—I have perus'd her well: [Aside.
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king, and who knows yet,
But from this lady may proceed a gem
To lighten all this isle?—[To her.] I'll to the king,
And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honour'd lord. [Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begging sixteen years in court,
(Am yet a courtier beggarly) nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late
For any suit of pounds; and you. O fate!
A very fresh-fish here, (fie, fie, fie upon
This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd up,
Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.

Old L. How tastes it? is it bittor? forty pence, no,
There was a lady once, (t is an old story)
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mud in Egypt:—have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old L. With your theme I could
O'ermount the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke!
A thousand pounds a year for pure respect;

No other obligation. By my life,
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time,
I know, your back will bear a duchess.—Say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. Would I had no being,
If this elate 3 my blood a jot: it faints me,
To think what follows.
The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Pray, do not deliver
What here you've heard, to her.

Old L. What do you think me? [Exeunt

SCENE IV.—A Hall in Black-Friars.

Trumpets, Sennet, and Cornets. Enter two Vergéns, with short silver Wands; next them, two Scribes, as the habit of Doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the Great Seal, and a Cardinal's Hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver Cross; then a Gentleman-Usher bare-headed, accom-pounded with a Sargent at Arms, bearing a silver
Mace; then two Gentlemen, bearing two great silver
Pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals
Wolsey and Campeius: two Noblemen with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place at some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court, in manner of a consistory: below them, the Scribes, The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What's the need?
It hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides th' authority allow'd;
You may, then, spare that time.

Wol. Be 't so.—Proceed.
Scribe. Say, Henry king of England, come into the court.

K. Hen. Here.
Scribe. Say, Katharine queen of England, come into the court.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.]

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice,
And to bestow your pity on me; for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas! sir,
In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven witness,
I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable;
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike;
Yea, subject to your countenance, glad, or sorry,
As I saw it incinci'd. When was the hour

1 Referring to the belf, one of the royal insignia. 2 approve: in f. e. 3 elate: in f. e.
I ever contradicted your desire,
Or made it not mine too? or which of your friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I
Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharge'd. Sir, call to mind
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you: if in the course
And process of this time you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty,
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away; and let the foulest contempt
Squat door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest knife of justice. Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
An unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reck'd one
The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many
A year before: it is not to be question'd
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who deem'd our marriage lawful. Wherefore I humbly
Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may
Be by my friends in Spain advis'd, whose counsel
I will implore: if not, i' the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol. You have here, lady,
(And of your choice) these reverend fathers; men
Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect o' the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause. It shall be therefore bootless,
That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.

Cam. His grace
Hath spoken well, and justly: therefore, madam,
It's fit this royal session do proceed,
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produc'd and heard.

Q. Kath. Lord cardinal,
To you I speak.

Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir,
I am about to weep; but, thinking that,
We are a queen, (or long have dream'd so) certain
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet.

Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble; nay, before,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
I due'd by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy, and make my challenge;
Yet when you are my judge: for it is you
Have blow'n this coals betwixt my lord and me,
Which God's dew quench.—Therefore, I say again,
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul,
Refuse you for my judge: whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess,
You speak not like yourself: who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd th' effects
Of dissension gentle, and set a tempest
O'ertopping woman's power. Madam, you do me wrong:
I have no spleen against you, nor injustice

For you, or any: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far farther shall be warranted
By a commission from the consistory,
Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blown this coal: I do deny it.
The king is present: if it be known to him,
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood; yea, as much
As you have done my truth. If he know
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong: therefore, in him
It lies to cure me; and the cure is to Remove these thoughts from you: the which, before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Y' are meek and humbly mouth'd:
You sign your place and calling in full seeming,
With meekness and humility: but your heart
Is cram'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps, and now are appried
Where powers are your retainers; and your words
Domestics to you, serve your will, as 't please
Yourself pronounce your office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual; that again
I do refuse you for my judge, and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him.

[She curtsies to the King, and offers to depart]

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by't: 'tis not well.
She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.

Gent. Us' Madam, you are call'd back.

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you, buy your way:
When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help!
They vex me past my patience.—Pray you, pass on.
I will not marry: no, nor ever more,
Upon this business, my appearance make
In any of their courts.

[Exeunt Queen, and her Attendants]

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate:
That man i' the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that. Thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out)
The queen of earthly queens.—She's nobly born;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears, (for whether I robb'd and beard,
There must I be unloose'd, although not there)
At once, and fully satisfied) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness, or

1 kind in f. e desire in f. e. 2 In some mod. eds. this speech is given, without warrant, to GRIFFITH.
SCENE I. KING HENRY VIII. 558

Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on 't? or ever
Have to you, but with thanks to God for such A royal lady, speake one the least word, that might Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
Do excuse you; yea. upon mine honour,
Free you from 't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Lark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. 'Ye are excus'd;
But will you be more justified? You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never Bore it to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd, oft,
He passages made toward it.—On my honour,
Speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to
't, will be bold with time, and your attention:
'Hen, mark th' inducement. Thus it came;—give heed to it.

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Cruel, and prick. on certain speeches uttered by
The bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador,
Who had been hither sent, on the debating
A marriage 'twixt the dugs of Cleves and
Our daughter Mary. The progress of this business,
A determinate resolution, he (Mean, the bishop) did require a respite:
Therein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Expecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometimes our brother's wife. This respite shook
'He bottom of my conscience, enter'd me,
Ea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which forc'd such way,
That many mad considerations did throng,
And press in with this caution. First, methought,
Stood not in the smile of heaven; who had
Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
It conceiv'd a male child by me, should
No more offices of life to 't, than
He grave does to the dead; for her male issue
Died where they were made, or shortly after
His world had sinn'd them. Hence I took a thought,
Was a judgment on me; that my kin-long
Tell worthy the best heir o' the world, should not Be gladd'd in 't by me. Then follows, that Which the danger my realms stood in
By this my issue's fail; and that gave to me
Many a groaning three. Thus, hailing in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer
Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that's to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience.—Which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd. First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln: you remember
How under my oppression I did reck,
When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.

K. Hen. I have spoke long: be pleas'd you yourself to say
How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in 't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'nt counsel which I had to doubt,
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury: and got your leave
To make this present summons.—Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals: therefore, go on,
For no dislike i' the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleged reasons drive this forward.
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That's a paragon o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 't is a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court till farther day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness.

K. Hen. I may perceive, [Aside]
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-belov'd servant, Craumer,
Prythee, return! with thy approach. I know,
My comfort comes along. [Aloud.]—Break up the court:
I say, set on. [Exeunt, in manner as they entered.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Palace at Bridewell.
A Room in the Queen's Apartment.

The Queen, and her Women, as at work

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wenche: my soul grows sad
With troubles; ng, and disperse them, if thou canst. Leave working.

SONG.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bore them selves, when he did sing:
To his music, plants, and flowers,
Ever spring: as sun, and showers,
There had made a lasting spring.

Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art.
Killing care and grief of heart
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now!

Gen. An't please your grace, the two great cardinals
Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gen. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. [*Exit Gent.] What can be their business
With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?
I do not like their coming, now I think on’t.
They should be good men, their affairs as righteous;
But all horses make not monks.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPION.

Wol.  Peace to your highness.
Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;
I would be all, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?
Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw
Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here.

There’s nothing I have done yet, o’ my conscience,
Deserves a corner: would all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy Above a number) if my actions
Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them,
Envy and base opinion set against them,
I know my life so even. If your business
Seek me out, and that way I am wise in,
But with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tantum est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenenissima. —

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin:
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv’d in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more suspicious;
Pray, speak in English. Here are some will thank you,
If you speak truth. for their poor mistress’ sake:
Believe, she has had much wrong. Lord cardinal,
The willing’st sin I ever yet committed
May be absolv’d in English.

Wol.  Noble lady,
I am sorry, my integrity should breed,
(And service to his majesty and you)
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of accusation,
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses,
Not to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much, good lady; but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference
Between the king and you, and to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam.  Most honour’d madam,
My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,
Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace,
Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure
Both of his truth and him, (which was too far)—
Offer, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath.  To betray me.  [Aside.
My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,
Ye speak like honest men. (pray God, ye prove so!)
But how to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
(More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning;
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business.
For her sake that I have been, for I feel
The last fit of my greatness, good your graces,
Let me have time and counsel for my cause.
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king’s love with the fears:
Your hopes and friends are infinite.
Q. Kath.  In England, But it is ye for my profit: can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, ‘gainst his highness’ pleasure
(Though he be grown so desperate to be honest)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam.  I would, your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.
Q. Kath.  How, a
Cam.  Put your main cause into the king’s prestection;
He’s loving, and most gracious: ’t will be much
Both for your honour better, and your cause;
For if the trial of the law o’ertake you,
You’ll part away disgrac’d.

Wol.  He tells you rightly.
Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both,—nyr
Is this ye a Christian counsel? ou upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet: there sits a Judge
That no king can corrupt.

Cam.  Your rage mistakes us.
Q. Kath.  The more shame for ye! holy me thought ye,
Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues;
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye.
Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this ye as for Know ye who that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh’d at, scorn’d?
I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity; but say, I warn’d ye:
Tako heed, for heaven’s sake, take heed, lest at
The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol.  Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.
Q. Kath.  Ye turn me into nothing. Woe upon
And all such false professors! Would ye have me
(If ye have any justice, any pity,
If ye be any thing but churchmen’s habits)
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish’d me his bed already;
His love, too long ago: I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

Cam.  Your fears are wore.
Q. Kath.  Have I liv’d thus long—(let me myself,
Since virtue finds no friends,—a wife, a true cest
A woman (I dare say without vain-glory)
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov’d him next heaven? oh
him?
Been, out of fondness, supersitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? ’t is not well, lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne’er dream’d a joy beyond his pleasure,
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we all
Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty, to give up willingly that noble title our master wed me to: nothing but death shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol. Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English earth, or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! 'tis have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts. What will become of me now, wretched lady? I am the most unhappy woman living.— alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes! [To Her Women]

Wol. Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity, no friends, no hope, no kindred weep for me, almost no grace allow'd me.—Like the lily, that once was mistress of the field and flourish'd, 'll hang my head, and perish.

If your grace could but be brought to know our ends are honest, you'd feel more comfort. Why should we, good lady, upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places, the way of our profession is against it. We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow them: 'tis a kind of base, consider what you do; low you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage. The hearts of princes kiss obedience, too much they love it; but to stubborn spirits, they swell, and grow as terrible as storms. know, you have a gentle, noble temper, a soul as even as a calm: pray, think us those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues.

With these weak women's fears: a noble spirit, as yours was put into you, ever casts such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves you; beware, you lose it not: for us, if you please to trust us in your business, we are ready to use our utmost study in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and, pray, forgive me, I have us'd myself unmanfully: you know I am a woman, lacking wit to make a seemly answer to such persons. pray do my service to his majesty: he has my heart yet, and shall have my prayers, while I shall have my life. Come, re-er, erend fathers; bestow your counsels on me: she sows bogs, that little thought, when she set footing here, she should have bought her dignities so dear. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Ante-chamber to the King's Apartment.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints, and force them with a constancy, the cardinal cannot stand under them: if you omit the offer of this time, I cannot promise, but that you shall sustain more new disgrace, with these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful to meet the least occasion, that may give me remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke, 'o be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers have uncontrovert'd gone by him, or at least strangely neglected? when did he regard the stamp of nobleness in any person,
Suf. He is return'd in his opinions, which
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom. Shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd queen, but prince dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him
For it an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. 'T is so.

The cardinal— [They stand back.

Enter WOLSEY and CROMWELL.

Nor. Observe, observe; he's moody.
Wol. The packet, Cromwell, gave it you the king?
Crom. To his own hand, in his bedchamber.
Wol. Look'd he o' th' inside of the paper?
Crom. Presently
He did unsel them, and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance: you he bade
Attend him here this morning.
Wol. Is he ready
To come abroad?
Crom. I think, by this he is.
Wol. Leave me awhile.— [Exit CROMWELL.
It shall be to the duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.—
Anne Bullen? No; I'll no Anne Bullens for him:
There's more in 't than fair visage.—Bullen!
No, we'll no Bullens. Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The marionettes of Pembroke!
Nor. He's discontented.
Suf. May be, he hears the king
Does what his heart to him. [Sharp enough,
Sur. Lord! for thy justice.
Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,
To be her mistresses' mistress! the queen's queen!—
This candle burns not clear: 't is I must snuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving, yet I know her for
A splenny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-ru'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one
Hath craw'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. [Retires, musing.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.
Suf. I would, 't were something that would fret the string,
The master-chord on's heart.

Enter the King, reading a Schedule; and Lovell.

Nor. The king, the king!
K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated,
To his own portion! and what expense of the hour
Seems to flow from him! How, 't is name of thrift,
Does he rake this together?—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have [Coming forward.
Stood here observing him. Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Steps on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then, lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts
His eye against the moon. In most strange posture
We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be:
There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd: and, wot you, what I found
There, on my conscience, put unwillingly?
Forsooth an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's heaven's will:
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still
Dwell in his musings; but, I am afraid,
His thoughts are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat, and whispers Lovell, as he goes to Wolsey.

Wol. Heaven forgive me! [As heEver God bless your highness. Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the image
Of your best graces in your mind, the which
You were now running o'er: you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual labour a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband, and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perchance,
I fear fail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

K. Hen. You have said well.
Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying!

K. Hen. 'T is well said again;
And 't is a kind of good deed to say well;
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you
He said he did, and with his deed did crown
His word upon you: since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might some how,
But part'd my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean? [As heSur. The Lord increase this business! [To K. Hen.
H ave I not made
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce you have found true;
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us, or no. What say you?
Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal grace,
Shower'd on me daily, have been more than could
My studied purposes requisite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours: my endeavours
Have ever been quite too short of my desires,
Yet fill'd with my abilities. Mine own ends
Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed
KING HENRY VIII.

The good of your most sacred person, and he profit of the state. For your great grace 2nd upon me, poor undeserver, I as nothing render but allegiance thanks; my prayers for you; my loyalty, that ever has, and ever shall be growing, 1st death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. begin seen more. Fairly answer'd: 2nd obedient subject has been illustrated. The honour of it was the pay of the act of it; as, 'tis contrary, the wrong is the punishment. I presume, that as my hand has open'd bounty to you, 1st heart, I, 'd love, my power rain'd honour, more 2nd you than any; so your hand, and heart, your heart, and every function of your power, bold, notwithstanding that your bond of duty, s't were in love's particular, be more or me, your friend, than any.

Wol. 3d for your highness' good I ever labour'd here than mine own: that am, have, and will be—though all the world should crack their duty to you, as throw it from their soul: though perils did bound, as thick as thought might make them, and appear in forms more horrible yet my duty, there, be a reck against the shifting flood, void the approach of this wild river break, and stand unshaken your sons.

K. Hen. 1st it is nobly spoken. 2nd the notice, lords, he has a loyal breast, if you have seen him open't.—Read o'er this: [Giving him Papers.

ad. after this; and then to breakfast, with that appetite you have.

[Kneeling, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey: the Nobles through after him, smiling, and whispering.

Wol. What should this mean? 3d sudden anger's this? how have I reaped it? 4th parted from my friends, as if ruin and from my eyes: so looks the chafed lion on the daring huntsman that has galled him, then, makes him nothing. I must read this paper; fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so: [Open the Paper. 5th reads, trembling: 6th his paper has undone me!—'Tis th' account of all the world of wealth I have drawn together at mine own ends; indeed, to gain the pope, [ade me my friends in Rome. 7th negligence! I for a fool by fall. How cross devil made me put this main secret in the packet sent the king? Is there no way to cure this? 8th new device to beat this from his brains? 9th now 't will stir him strongly; yet I know way, if it take right, in spite of fortune I'll bring me off again. What's this?—'To the Pope'?

be letter, as I live, with all the business writ to his holiness. Nay then, farewell! save touch'd the highest point of all my greatness, 1st from that! meridian of my glory, haste now to my setting: I shall fail be a bright exhalation in the evening; 2nd more see me more. 3d Sinks in a chair.

[Enter the Duke of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal, who commands you render up the great seal presently into our hands, and to confine yourself To Asher's-house, my lord of Winchester's, 3d you hear farther from his highness.

Wol. 4th. Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare cross them, Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?

Wol. Till I find more than will, or words, to do it, (I mean your malice) know, officious lords, I dare, and must deny it. Now, I feel Of what coarse metal ye are moulded, envy; How eagerly ye follow my disgrace, As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin. Follow your envious courses, men of malice; You have Christian warrant for them, and, no doubt, In time will find their fit rewards. That seal, You ask with such a violence, the king, (Mine, and your master) with his own hand gave me; Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours, During my life, and to confirm his goodness, Tied it by letters patent. Now, who 'll take it?

Suf. The king that gave it.

Wol. It must be himself, then.

Suf. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest: Within these forty hours Surrey durst better Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Suf. Thy ambition, Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law: The heirs of all thy brother cardinals, (With thee, and all thy best parts bound together) Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy You sent me deputy for Ireland, Far from his succour, from the king, from all That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st him; Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity, Akesolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else This talking lord can lay upon my credit, I answer, is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts: how innocent I was From any private malice in his end, His noble jury and foul cause can witness. If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you, You have as little honesty as honour, That in the way of loyalty and truth Toward the king, my ever royal master, Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be, And all that love his follies.

Suf. By my soul, Your long coat, priest, protects you: thou shouldst feel My sword i' the life-blood of thee else.—My lords, Can ye endure to hear this arrogance? And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely, To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward, And dare us with his cap, like larks.

Wol. All goodness Is poison to thy stomach.

Suf. Yes, that goodness Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one, Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion; The goodness of your intercepted packets, You write to the pope, against the king; your goodness Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious My lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despis'd n' bility, our issues,
(Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen)
Preduce the grand sum of his sirs, the articles
Collected from his life.—I'll strive to make
Woe than the sacring bell, when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man,
But, that I am bound in charity against it.

Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand;
But so much as, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer,
And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you.
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll show a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir; I lay your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those, than your head. Have at you,—
First, that without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrou'th to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that in all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought the king
To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Suf. That out of mere ambition you have caus'd
Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance,
(By what means got I leave to your own conscience)
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities: to the mere's undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord! I press not a falling man too far; 't is virtue.
His faults lie open to the laws: let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him
So little of his great self.

Suf. Lord cardinal, the king's farther pleasure is,— Because all those things, you have done of late
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a praemunire,—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection.—This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations,
How to live better. For your stubborn answer,
About the giving back the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank you.
So, fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

[Exeunt all but Wolsey.]
KING HENRY VIII.

Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee
Say, Wolsey, that once trod the ways of glory
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,
Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in ;
A sure and safe one, though thy master mis'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, flying away ambition :
By that sin fell the angels ; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by 't?
Love thyself last : cherish those hearts that hate thee.
Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues : be just, and fear not.
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's.
Thy God's, and truth's : then, if thou fail'st, O Cromwell!
Thou fail'st a blessed martyr.
Serve the king ; and,—Pr'ythee, lead me in
There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny ; 'tis the king's : my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell !
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.
Crom. Good sir, have patience.
Wol. So I have.—Farewell
The hopes of court : my hopes in heaven do dwell.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You're well met once again.
2 Gent. So are you.
1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and be held
be lady Anne pass from her coronation ?
2 Gent. Tis all my business. At our last encounter, he date of Buckingham came from his trial.

1 Gent. Tis very true ; but that time offer'd sorrow, his general joy.

2 Gent. Tis well : the citizens, are sure, have shown at full their royal minds ;
let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward in celebration of this day with shows, sprays, and sights of honour.

1 Gent. Never greater ;
or, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains, his paper in your hand ?

1 Gent. Yes ; 'tis the list of those that claim their offices this day,
y custom of the coronation.
be duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims be high steward ; next, the duke of Norfolk, be his marshal. You may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir ; had I not known those customs,
should have been holding to your paper.

1 Gent. I beseech you, what 's become of Katharine, be princess dowager ? how goes her business ?

1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop of Canterbury, accompanied with other

Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Ampthill, where the princess lay ; to which
She was often cited by them, but appear'd not :
And, to be short, for not appearance, and
The king's late scruple, by the main assent
Of all these learned men she was divorce'd,
And the late marriage made of none effect:
Since she was removed to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.

Alas, good lady !—

[Trumpets.]
The trumpets sound : stand close, the queen is coming.

[Hautboys.]

THE ORDER OF THE CORONATION.

A lively flourish of Trumpets.

1. Then, two Judges.
2. Lord Chancellor, with purse and mace before him.
3. Choristers singing.

4. Mayor of London bearing the mace. Then, Garter in his coat of arms ; and on his head he wore a gold coronet.

5. Marquess Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold ; on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove; crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white sound, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship ; a coronet on his head.
Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports ; under it,
The Queen in her robe ; in her hair, richly adorned... with pearl, crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, worsted with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I know:
Who's that, that bears the sceptre?
1 Gent. Marquess Dorset:
And that the earl of Surrey, with the rod.
2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should be
The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'Tis the same; high-steward.
2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk?
1 Gent. Yes.
2 Gent. Heaven bless thee! [Looking on the Queen.
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel:
Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more, and richer, when he strains that lady.
I cannot blame his conscience.
1 Gent. They, that bear
The cloths of honour over her, are four barons
Of the cinque-ports.
2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all, are near her.
I take it, she that carries up the train
Is that noble lady, duchess of Norfolk.
1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.
2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars,
indeed;
And sometimes falling ones.
1 Gent.

[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of Trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?

3 Gent. Among the crowd 'tis the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.
2 Gent. You saw the ceremony?
3 Gent. That I did.
1 Gent. How was it?
3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.
2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.
3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream,
Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat down.
To rest a while, some half an hour or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrubs make at sea in a stiff tempest
As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,
(Doubtless, I think) flew up; and had their faces
Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make them reel before them. No man living
Could say, "This is my wife," there; all were woven
So strangely one piece.
2 Gent. But, what follow'd?
3 Gent. At length her grace arose, and with modest paces

 Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and saint like
Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Then rose again, and bowed her to the people:
When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full state past back again
To York-place, where the feast is held.
1 Gent.

Sir,
You must no more call it York-place, that 'tis past;
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:
'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.
3 Gent.
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.
2 Gent.

What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?
3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner; the one of Wucher,
Newly proffer'd from the king's secretaries;
The other, London.
2 Gent. He of Winchester.
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
The virtuous Cramer.
3 Gent.
All the land knows that,
However, there's no great breach: when it comes
Cramer will find a friend will not shrink from him.
2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?
3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend.—The king has made him
Master o' the jewel-house;
And one, already, of the privy-council.
2 Gent. He will deserve more.
3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt.
Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which
Is to the court, and there—ye shall be my guests:
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine. Down, Sir; led between Griff-Fith and Patience.

Graff. How does your grace?
Kath. O, Griffith! sick to death.
My legs, like laden branches, bow to the earth,
Willing to leave their burden. Reach a chair.—

[Sits down

So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,
That the great child of honour, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Graff. Yes, madam; but, I think, your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to 't.
Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died?
If well, he stepp'd before me, happily,
For my example.

Graff. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout earl Northumberland
 Arrested him at York, and brought him forward,
As a man sorely taintcd, to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his mule.
Kath. Alas, poor man!
KING HENRY VIII.

Grif. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester; Lord'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot, With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him; To whom he gave these words,—"O father abbot An old man, broken with the storms of state, Is come to lay his weary bones among ye: Give him a little earth for charity!"

So went to bed, where eagerly his sickness Pursu'd him still; and three nights alter this, About the hour of eight, which himself Foretold should be his last, full of repentance, Consenting meditations, tears, and sorrows, He gave his honours to the world again, His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest: his faults lie lightly on him: Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him, And yet with charity.—He was a man Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes; one, that by suggestion Tied all the kingdom: simony was fair play; His own opinion was his law: if the presence He told, and said, he was very double, Both in his words and meaning. He was never, But where he meant to ruin, pitiful: His promises were, as he then was, mighty; But his performance, as he is now, nothing. Of his own body he was ill, and gave The clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble madam, Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues We write in water. May it please your highness To hear me speak his good now?

Kath. I were malicious else.

Grif. This cardinal;

Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly Was fashion'd to much honour from his erudite, He was a scholar, and a ripe, and good one; Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and persuading: Lob'd and sour to them that lov'd him not; To that man he sought him, sweet as summer; And though he were unsatisfied in getting, Which was a sin yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely. Ever witness for him Those twain of learning, that he rain'd in you, p.wich, and Oxford! one of which fell with him, "Having to will the good man" did it; the other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous, Excellent in art, and still so rising; That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue. He overthrow hea'rd happiness upon him; or then, and not till then, he felt himself, and found the blessedness of being little: to add, to greater honours to his age Than man could give him, he died fearing God.

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald, to other speaker of my living actions, To keep mine honour from corruption, But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Then I most hated living, thou hast made me, With thy religious truth and modesty, low in his sahes honour. Peace be with him!—wince, be near me still; and set me lower: have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,ause the musicians play that and note saw'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating that celestial harmony I go to. [Sad and solemn music.

Grif. She is asleep. Good wench, let's sit down quiet,

For fear we wake her: softly, gentle Patience. The Vision. Enter solemnly tripping one after another six Personages, clad in white robes, bearing on their heads garlands of bays, and golden vizards on their faces; branches of bays, or palm, in their hands. They first congee unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which, the other four make reverence curtesies: then the two that held the garland deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head. While done. They deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order: at which, (as it were by inspiration) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven. And so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone,

And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?

Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not I you call for Saw ye none enter, since I slept?

Grif. None, madam.

Kath. No! saw you not, even now, a blessed troop Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun? They promis'd me eternal happiness, And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall, assuredly. Griffith, I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,

They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases

Pat. Do you note, How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden? How long her face is drawn? How pale she looks, And of an earthy coldness? Mark her eyes! Griffith. She is going, wench. Pray, pray. Pat. Heaven comfort her! Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow, Deserve we no more reverence?

Grif. You are to blame, Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness, To use so rude behaviour: go to; kneel. Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon: [Kneeling.

My haste made me unmannerly. There is staying A gentleman, sent from the king to see you. Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: but this fellow Let me ne'er see again.

[Exeunt Griffith and Messenger

Re-enter Griffith, with Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. The times, and titles, now are alter'd strangely With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you, What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady, First, mine own service to your grace; the next, The king's request that I would visit you; Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me Sends you his princely commendations, And heartily entreats you take good comfort.
Kath. O my good lord, that comfort comes too late:
’T is like a pardon after execution.
That gentle physic, given in time, had cur’d me;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness?
Cap. Madam, in good health.
Kath. So may he ever do; and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name
Banish’d the langdown.—Patience, is that letter,
I caus’d you write, yet sent away?
Pat. No, madam. [Giving it to Katharine]
Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.
Cap. Most willing, madam.
Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter:—
The dew of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!
Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding.
She is young, and of a noble modest nature,
I hope, she will deserve well; and a little
To love her for her mother’s sake, that lov’d him,
Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long,
Have follow’d both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare aver,
(And now I should not lie) but will deserve,
For virtue, and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty, and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble;
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have them
The last is, for my men:—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me:—
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me by:
If heaven had pleased to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents:—and, good my lord,
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people’s friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.
Cap. By heaven, I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man!
Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness:
Sav. his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world: tell him, in death I bless’d him,
For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord.—Farewell, my good madam.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet: I must to bed.
Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wenches,
Let me be us’d with honour: strew me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave. Embalm me;
Then lay me forth: although unqueen’d, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more.—[Ereunt, leading Katharine]
KING HENRY VIII.

KING. Many good nights, my lord. I rest your servant. [Exeunt Gardiner and Page.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night:
My mind's not on it; you are too hard for me.

Sof. Sir, I did never win of you before
K. Hen. But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play.—

Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lor. I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message; who return'd her thanks
In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your highest
Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou? ha!
To pray for her? what! is she crying out?

Lor. So said her woman; and that her sufferance
Almost each pang a death.

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!

Sof. God safely quit her of her burden, and
With gentle travail, to the gladding of your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles: if ye see to bed; and in thy prayers remember
The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone,
For I must think of that, which company
Would not be friendly to.

Sof. I wish your highness a quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good night.—[Exit Suffolk.

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Well, sir, what follows?

Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the archbishop,
As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

Lor. This is about that which the bishop spake:

[Aside.

I am happily come hither.

Re-enter Denny, with Cranmer.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery. [Lovell seems to stay.

Lor. I have said.—Be gone?—

What?—[Exit Lovell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearful.—Wherefore frowns he thus?

[Aside.

It is his aspect of terror: all's not well.

K. Hen. How now, my lord! You do desire to know
Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. 'Tis my duty [Kneeling. to attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury.

Come you and I must walk a turn together;
I have news to tell you. Come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows.
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you; which being consider'd
Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us: where, I know,
Yet cannot with such freedom purge yourself.

But that, till farther trial in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Tower: to a brother of us,
It fits me thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder; for, I know,
There's none stands under more calamious tongues
Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury
Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted
In us, thy friend. Give me thy hand, stand up:

[ Rising.

Pr'ythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,
Without indulgence, farther.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The ground I stand on, is my truth, and honesty:
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person, which I weigh not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not
How your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?
Your enemies are many, and not small; their practices
Must bear the same proportion: and not ever
The justice and the truth o' the question carries
The due o' the verdict with it. At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knives, as corrupt,
To swear against you: such things have been done:
You are potently oppos'd, and with a malice
Of as great size. Ween you of better luck,
I mean in perjur'd witness, than your Master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd
Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to:
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woe your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning, see
You do appear before them. If they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us.
There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps:
He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!
I swear, he is true-hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you.—[Exit Cranmer.] He has Strangled his language in his tears.

Enter an old Lady, in haste.

Gent. [Within.] Come back: what mean you?
Lady. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring
Will make my boldness manners.—Now, good angels
Fly o’er thy nyal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver’d?
Say, ay; and of a boy.

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy: the God of heaven
Both now and ever bless her! — ’tis a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen
Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger: ’tis as like you,
As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell! —
Re-enter Lovell.

Louv. Sir.

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. I’ ll to the queen. [Exit King.

Lady. An hundred marks! By this light, I’ ll ha’
more.

An ordinary grooms is for such payment:
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this the girl was like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay ’t; and now,
While it is hot, ’twill put it to the issue. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Lobby before the Council-Chamber.

Enter CRANMER; SERVANTS, DOOR-KEEPER, &c., attending.

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman,
That was sent to me from the council, pray’d me
To make great haste. All fast! what means this?
Ho! Who waits there?—Sure, you know me?

D. Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call’d for.

Cran. So.

Butts. This is a piece of malice. I am glad, [Aside.
I came this way so happily: the king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit BUTTS.

Cran. ’T is Butts,
The king’s physician. As he past along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me.
Pray heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain,
This is of purpose laid by some that hate me,
(God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice)
To quench mine honour: they would shame to make me
Wait else at door, a fellow-councillor
’Mong boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures
Must be fulfill’d, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King and Butts, at a window above.

Butts. I’ll show your grace the strangest sight.—
K. Hen. What’s that, Butts?

Butts. I think, your highness saw this many a day.
K. Hen. Body o’ me, where is it?

Butts. There, my lord:
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, ’mongst pursuing parriavants,
Pages, and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! ’Tis he, indeed.
Is this the honour they do one another?
’T is well, there’s one above ’em yet. I had thought,
They had parted so much honestly among ’em,
(At least good manners) as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships’ pleasures,
And at the door too, like a post with packets.

[capable: in f. s: in f. e: in l.e.]

By holy Mary, Butts, there’s knavery:
Let ’em alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon.—

THE COUNCIL-CHAMBER.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left for above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell sits at the lower end, as secretary.

Chan. Speak to the business, master secretary:
Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours, the chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Nor. Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Gar. Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop;
And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.

Cranmer approaches the Council-table. Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry
To sit here at this present, and behold
That chair stand empty: but we all are men,
In our own natures frail, and culpable.
Of our flesh: few are angels: out of which frailty,
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misdeem’d yourself, and not a little,
Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling
The whole realm, by your teaching, and your chaplains,
(For so we are inform’d) with new opinions,
Divers, and dangerous; which are heresies,
And, not reform’d, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too,
My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses
Pass not them in their hands to make them gentle,
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur them,
Till they obey the manager. If we suffer,
Out of our easiness and childish pity
To one man’s honour, this contagious sickness,
Farewell all physic: and what follows then?
Commotions, uproars, with a general taint
Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours,
The upper Germany, can dearly witness,
Yet freshly pitied in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress
Both of my life and office, I have laboured,
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority,
Might go one way, and safely: and the end
Was ever, to do well: nor is there living
(I speak it with a single heart, my lords,) A man, that more detests, more strives against Both in his private conscience, and his place,
Defacers of the public peace, than I do.
Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart
With less allegiance in it! Men, that make Envy and crooked malice nourishment,
Dare bite the best. I do beseech your ordinations,
That in this case of justice, my accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord,
That cannot be: you are a councillor,
And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment,
We shall be short with you. 'Tis his highness' pleasure,
And our consent, for better trial of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower:
Where, being but a private man again,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More than I, you fear, you are provided for.

Crom. Ah! my good lord of Winchester, I thank you;
You are always my good friend: if you will pass,
I shall both find your lordship judge and jury,
You are so merciful. I see your end;
'Tis my undoing. Love and meekness, lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition:
Win straying souls with modesty again,
Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,
Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt, as you do conscience
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, ye are a sectary:
That's the plain truth: your painted glory discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weaknesses.

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,
By your good favour, too sharp: men so noble,
However faulty, yet should find respect
For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary
I cry your honour mercy: you may, worst
Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gar. Do not I know you for afavouer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound, I say.

Crom. Would you were half so honest;
Men's prayers, then, would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Do:
Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much:

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you, my lord.—It stands agreed,
I take it, by all voices, that forthwith
You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;
There to remain, till the king's farther pleasure
Be known unto us. Are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?
Gar. What other

Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome.

Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Crom. For me?

Must I go like a traitor thither?

Enter Guard.

Gar. Receive him,
And see him safe to the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords;
I have a little yet to say.—Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring I take my cause
But of the graces of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Chan. This is the king's ring.

Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven! I told ye all
When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling,
'T would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Cham. 'T is now too certain,
How much more is his life in value with him.
Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales, and informations,
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Now, have at ye.

Enter the King, frowning on them: he takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that in all obedience makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,
His royal self in judgment comes to hear
The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations,
Bishop of Winchester; but know, I come not
To hear such flattering now, and in my presence;
They are too thin and base to hide offences.
To me you cannot reach. You play the spacial,
And think with wagging of your tongue to win me
But, whatso'ever thou tak'st me for. I'm sure,
Thou hast a cruel nature. And a bloody,—
Good man, [To Cranmer.] sit down. Now, let me see the proudest,
[CRANMER sits.]
He that dares most, but wags his finger at thee:
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your Grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me.
I had thought, I had had men of some understanding
And wisdom of my council; but I find none.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This good man, (few of you deserve that title)
This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber door? and one as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission
Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye
Power, as he was a counsellor to try him,
Not as a groom. There's some of ye, I see,
More out of malice than integrity,
Would try him to the utmost. had ye mean;
Which ye shall never have the while I live.

Chan. Thus far
My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace
To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpose'd Concerning his imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in men) meant for his trial,
And fair purgation to the world, than malice,
I'm sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him:
Take him, and use him well; he's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him: if a prince
May be beholding to a subject, I
Am, for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more ado, but all embrace him:

[They embrace him: Gardiner last.]

Be friends, for shame, my lords.—My lord of Canterbury,
I have a suit which you must not deny me;
That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,
You must be godfather,
And answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory
In such an honour: how may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you 'd spare your sponges.

You shall have two noble partners with you;
The old duchess of Norfolk, and lady marquess Dorset:
Will these please you?

Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,
Embrace and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart.

And brother's love, I do it. [Embrace again.

Cran. And let heaven
Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.

K. Hen. Good man! those joyful tears show thy
The common voice, I see, is verified [true heart.
Of thee, which says thus, "Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever."—
Come, lords, we tripe time away: I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger: you have more honour gain.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and Tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You 'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rudo slaves, year your gaping.

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you roguish! Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches to them.—I 'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here.
you rudo rascals?

[Within.] Man. Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis as much impossible,
Unless we sweep 'em from the door with cannons,
To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep
On May-day morning; which will never be.
We may as well push against Paul's, as stir 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas, I know not: how gets the tide in?
As much as one sound cudgel of four foot
(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor sir Guy, nor Colbrand,
To mow 'em down before me; but if I spared any,
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker,
Let me ne'er hope to see a queen again;
And that I would not for a crown, God save her.

[Within.] Do you hear, master Porter?

Port. shall be with you presently, good master puppy—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? [Noise.] Bless me, what a fry of Confirmation is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand:
here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a braz by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the do days now reign in 's nose: all that stand about him a under the line; they need no other penance. Th fire-drakes did I hit three times on the head, and the times was his nose discharge'd against me: he stood there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was habe's wife of small wit near him, that rail upon me till her pink'd proviar fell off her bes for kindling such a combustion in the state. I mise the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried of cubs! when I might see from far some forty tru cheevers draw to her succour, which were the hope the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell off
I made good my place; at length they came to one broomstaff with me: I defied 'em still; when sudden a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, delivered such shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine holes in, and let 'em win the work. The devil was among 'em, I think, surely.

[Skouts.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a pis house, and fight for bitter apples: that no audience
but the Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbo
Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure.
We have some 15 of 'em in Limbo Patum, and there the are like to dance these three days, besides the ruin banquet of two beatles, that is to come.

[Skouts and Skouts.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude here are!
They grow still, too; from all parts they are coming.
As if we kept a fair! Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine fash
felows:
There's a trim rabble let in. Are all these
Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall ha
Great store of room, no doubt. left for the ladies
When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour
We are but men; and what so many may do,
Not being torn a pieces, we have done:
An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live,
If the king blame me for't, I 'll lay ye all
By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads
Clap round fins for neglect, V are lazy knaves;
And here ye lie baiting of bombardes, when [Trumpets.
Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets sound;
They're come already from the christening.
Go, break among the press, and find a way out
To let the troop pass fairly, or I 'll find
A Marshalsea shall hold ye play these two months.
Port. Make way there for the princes.

Man. You great fellow, [Tumult and confusion.
Stand close up, or I 'll make your head ache.

Port. You i' the camell, get up o' the rail:
I 'll peak you o'er the pole! Velse.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Palace at Greenwich.

Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aidersmen, Le Mayor, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk, and his Marshall's staff, Duke of Suffolk, two Noble bearing great standing halves for the christening; then, four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which

THE PROLOGUE1 (in Armour²).

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece,
The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf’d,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war : sixty and nine, that wore
Their crowneis regal, from th’ Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia ; and their vow is made,
To ranasek Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish’d Helen, Menelaus’ queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps ; and that’s the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come,
And the deep-drawing barges do thereof disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage : now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions : Priam’s six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Ilias, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenoriades, with many staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr’d up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits
On one and other side. Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard.—And hither am I come
A Prologue arm’d,—but not in confidence
Of author’s pen, or actor’s voice, but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o’er the vaunt² and firstlings of those trolls,
Beginning in the middle ; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like, or find fault ; do as your pleasures are ;
Now, good or bad, ’tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

SCENE I—Troy. Before Priam’s Palace.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandaros.

Tro. Call here my varlet³ : I’ll unarm again : Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle hese within ?
Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
Let him to the field ; Troilus, alas ! hath none.

Pun. Will this gear ne’er be mended ?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skillful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;

But I am weaker than a woman’s tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance,
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skill-less as unpractis’d infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this : for my part, I’ll not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must² tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried ?

Pan. Ay, the grinding ; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried ?

¹ First printed in the folio. * The words in parenthesis are not in f. e. * Stir : in folio. Theobald made the change to sperr, or Sperr.

² Second printed in the folio. * Varlet : in folio. 388
Pam. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pam. Ay, to the leavening: but here's yet, in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the beating the oven, and the baking: nay, you must say the cooling too, or you may chance burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess 'er she be, doth lessen balm at sufficiency than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So fair a maid, so fair as she was, When is she thence?

Pam. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—when my heart, As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain, lest Hector or my father should perceive me. I have (as when the sun doth light & storm) Burns this sigh in wrinkle of a smile;
But sorrow, that is coul'd in seeming gladness, is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness. For, an her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's, (well, go to) there were no more comparison between the women,—but, for my part, she is my fair woman: I would not, as they term it, praise her, but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did: I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit:—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd, lepny not in how many fathoms deep. They lie the breast'd. I tell thee, I am mad a Cressid's love: thou answer'st, she is fair; 'tis in the open ulcer of my heart, to whose soft seizure The cognett's down is harsh, and spirit of sense hard as the palm of ploughman! This thou tell'st me, as true thou tell'st me, when I say,—I love her; but, saying this, instead of oil and balm, thou layest in every gash that love hath given me the knife that made it.

Pam. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pam. 'Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the 'mends in her own hands. Tro. Good Pandarus. How now, Pandarus! Pam. I have had my labour for my travail; ill-thought as of her, and ill-thought of you: gone between and between, and small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with me?

Pam. Because she's kin to me, therefore, she's not as fair as Helen: and she was not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-woor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say 't, she is not fair?

Pam. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a tool behind her father: let her go to the Greeks: and so I'll tell her the next time I see her. For my part, I'll meddle nor make no more i' the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—Pam. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—Pam. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all I found it, and there an end. [Exit Pam. An Alarum. Tro. Peace, you ungracious elegamour! peace, rude sounds! Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair, When with your blood you daily paint her thus, I cannot fight upon this argument; it is too starv'd a subject for my sword. But Pandarus!—O gods, how do you plague me! I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar; And he's as tetchy to be wo'd to woo, And she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love, What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we? Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl: Between our Ilium, and where she resides, Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood; Ourselves the merchant, and this sailing Pandar, Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark. Alarum. Enter Cressida.

Aene. How now, prince Troilus! wherefore not afraid?

Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer sorts, for womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Cressida, from the field to-day?

Aene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt. Tro. By whom, Cressida?

Aene. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to soorn; Paris is gor'd with Menelaus' horn. [Alarum. Aene. Hark, what good sport is out of town to-day! Tro. Better at home, if ' would I might,' were 'may'!—

But to the sport abroad:—are you bound thither? Cressida. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come; go we, then, together. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street. Enter Cressida and Alexander.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower Whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was mov'd: He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer; And, like as there were husbandry in war, Before the sun rose he was harness'd light, And to the field goes he; where every flower Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, thus: there is among the Greeks A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector; They call him, Ajax. Cres. Good; and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se, And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours, that his valour is crush'd into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attaint but he carries some stain of it. He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind

Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say, he yesterday cope'd Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid. What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Illium?*

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came?
Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Illium?
Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. 'En so: Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says, here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too. He'll lay about him to-day; I can tell them that; and there's Troilus will not come far behind him: let them take seed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O, Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay: if I ever saw him before, and knew him.
Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. —Condition, I had gone bare-foot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself. —Would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend, or end. Well, Troilus, well—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th' other's not come to 't; you shall tell me another tale, when th' other's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he has his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cres. Nor matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'T would not become him; his own 'a better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece. Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour,
(for so 'tis, I must confess)—not brown neither—

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than if he having colour enough, and the other higher; is flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as in Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for completeness.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him bet than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to hi
'other day into the compassed window; and, ye know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetick may soon bin his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hee.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?*

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him—she came, and puts me her white hand to his clown chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy! How came it cloven?*

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled. I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in a Phrygia.

Cres. O! he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O! yes, an't were a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to them.—But to prove to you the Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll pre it so.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you let an idle head, you would eat chickens! the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how a tickled his chin:—indeed, she has a marvellous wit hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But, there was such laughing: queen Helen laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under a pot of her eyes: did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair I should ha laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, "Here's but two and fifty hairs your chin, and one of them is white."

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. "T and fifty hairs," quoth he, "and one white: that 's hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons."

Cres. Quoth she, "Which of these hairs is Paris,

* The palace of Priam was so called by the romance writers. * Bow-window.  Thief.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

husband?—"The forked one," quoth he;—"pluck't yet, and give it him." But there was such laughing, and Helen so flushed, and Paris so chasing, and all the rest so laughing, that it passeth."

Cres. So let it now, for it has been a great while past by."

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; shan't on't.

Cres. So I do."

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true: he will weep you, an' he don't see him in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an' 't were a battle against May. [A retreat sounded."

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field. Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward them? good niece, do; sweet niece, Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure."

Pan. Here, here; here's an excellent place: here we may see most bravely. 'Till you tell them all by their names, as they pass by, but mark Troilus above the rest.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

ENEAS passes over the Stage.

Pan. That's Eneas. Is not that a brave man? he's of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

ANTenor passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one of the sweetest judgment in Troy, whatsoever, and a proper man of his person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes over.

Pan. That's Hector; that, that, look you, that's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector:—There's a true man, niece—O brave Hector!—Look how he walks; there's a countenance. Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O! a brave man.

Pan. Is'a not? It does a man's heart good—Look at what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there. There's no jesting; there's laying on, take it off who will, as they say; there's hacks.

Cres. Be those with swords?

PARIS passes over.

Pan. Swords? anything, he cares not; an' the devil come to him, it's all one: by god's lid, it does one's heart good. Yonder comes Paris; yonder comes Paris; his eye yonder, niece: is 't not a gallant man too, is 't not?—Why, this is brave now. Who said he came in to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Helen now. You shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

HELENUS passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel, where Troilus is.

Helenus. I think he went not forth to-day.

Pan. Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no;—yes, he'll fight indifferent well. I marvel, where Troilus is. Hark! do you not hear a people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus. Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus, the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace! for shame; peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him.—O brave Troilus! look well upon him, niece: look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's, and how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he never saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Soldiers pass over the Stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asse, fools, dolts, chaff and bran, chaff and bran; porridge after meat. I could live and die the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look: the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws. I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a miniced man; and then to be baked with no date in the pye,—for then the man's date's out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; upon my mask, to defend my beauty; and upon you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow, unless it swall past hiding, and then it's past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit Boy. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle,—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd.

[Exit Pandarus.

Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice, He offers in another's enterprise; But more in Troilus thousand fold I see, Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be. Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing: Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing: That she belov'd knows nought, that knows not this, Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is: That she was never yet, that ever knew Love got so sweet as when desire did sue.
Therefore, this maxin out of love I teach.—
Achieved men still command; 1 ungain'd, desecrh:
Then, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon's Tent.

Sonnet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses,
Menellass, and others.

Agam. Princes,
What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?
The ample proposition, that hope makes
In all designs begun on earth below,
Fails in the promis'd largeness: checks and disasters
Grow in the veins of actions highestrear'd;
As kno's, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Nor, princes, is it matter new to us,
That we come short of our suppose so far,
That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand;
Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim,
And that unobdged figure of the thought
That gave 't润滑ed shape. Why then, you princes,
Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our wrecks? 2
And call't them shames, which are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive trials of great Jove,
To find persistive constancy in men?
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love; for then, the bold and coward,
The wise and fool, the artist and unskilful
The hard and soft, seem all affln'd and kin:
But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,
Distinction, with a broad 3 and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away;
And what hath mass, or matter, by itself
Lies rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Next. With due observance of thy godlike seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy last words. In the reproof of chance
Lies the true proof of men. The sea being smooth,
How many shallow boast boats dare sail
Upon her patient breast, making their way
With those of nobler bulk:
But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold,
The strong-riv'd hold hark through liquid mountains cut,
Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Fronsou's horse: where's then the saucy boat,
Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Both valour's show, and valour's worth, divide
In storms of fortune: for, in her ray and brightness,
The herd hath more annoyance by the brise,
Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
And flies fled under shade, why then, the thing of courage,
As round'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And with an accent tun'd in self-same key,
replies 4 to chiding fortune.

Ulysses.
Agamemnon,
Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,
Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
In whom the temper's and the minds of all
Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation
The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—
[To Agamemn.]
And thou most reverend for thy stretch't-out life.—
[To Nestor]
I give to both your speeches, which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,
As Venerable Nestor, hatch'd 5 in silver,
Should with a bond of air (strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides) knit all the Greekish cars
To his experience'd tongue,—yet let it please both,
Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.
Agam. 6 Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect
That matter needless, of importune burden,
Divide thy lips, then we are confident,
When rank Thersites zips his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulysses. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.
The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And look, how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow faction.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworhonest shows as fairly in the mask.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this censur,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insistance, course, the proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and s; her'd
Amidst the other; whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check, to good and bad. But when the planets
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portentous what mutiny?
What raging of the sea, a shilling of earth,
Commotion in the winds, fright, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture! O! when degree is shock'd
Which is the ladder to all high designs,
The enterprise is sick. How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from divisible shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets!
In mere oppugnacy: the bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:
Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong;
(Between which endless jar justice resides)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,

1 Achievement is command'd: in f. e. 2 worbe: in f. e. 3 think: in folio. 4 loud: in folio. 5 Godfj. 6 Returns: . A chab

Neat make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
The chace, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the chocking:
And this negligence of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discount our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Foretell prescience, and estem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant soil, the enemies’ weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger’s dignity.
They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war:
So that the ram, that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine,
Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles’ horse
Makes many Thetis’ sons. [A Trumpet
Enter Enter Enter Eneas.

Men. From Troy.

Agam. What would you fore our tent.

Enea. Is this Great Agamemnon’s tent, I pray you?

Agam. Even this.

Enea. May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles’ arm,
Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Enea. Fair leave, and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How?

Enea. Ay; I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush,
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phebus.

Agam. Which is that god in office, guiding men?

Enea. Who is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us, or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Enea. Courtier as free, as deponent, unarm’d,
As bending angels: that’s their fame in peace;
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove’s
counsel,
Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Eneas!
Peace, Trojan! lay thy finger on thy lips.

The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the praise himself bring the praise forth;
What the repining enemy comends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, soul-pure, transcend.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Eneas?

Enea. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What’s your affair, I pray you?

Enea. Sir, pardon: ’tis for Agamemnon’s ears.

Agam. He bears nought privately that comes from Troy.

Enea. Nor I from Troy came not to whisper him.

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;
To set his sense on the attentive bent,
And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind.

It is not Agamemnon’s sleeping hour:

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I.

That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Éne. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,
A prince call'd Hector, Priam is his father,
Who in this dull and long-continu'd truce
Is much decayed; he bade me take a trump'et yet,
And to this purpose speak—Kings, princes, lords,
If there be one among the fairest of Greece,
That holds his honour higher than his ease;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear;
That loves his mistress more than in confusion
With truant vows to her own lips he loves,
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Here is the view of Trojans and of Greece,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did couple in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love.
If any come, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sun-burnt, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, lord Éneas:
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home; but we are soldiers,
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire,
To answer for his love, tell him from me,
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brow,
And, meeting him, will tell him, that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world. His youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Éne. Now heavens forbids such scarcity of youth!

Ulyss. Amen.

Agam. Fair lord Éneas, let me touch your hand;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent,
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent;
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSSES and NESTOR.

Ulyss. Nestor!

Nest. What's the matter, Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain;
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is it?

Ulyss. This 'tis.
Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seceded pride,
That hath to this maturity grown up
In rank Achilles, must or now be crop'd;
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,

To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector send
However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance;
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And in the publication make no strain;
But that Achilles, was his brain as barren
As banks of Libya, (though, Apollo knows,
'Tis true, he doth not well, with great speed of judgment,
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think ye?

Nest. Why, 'tis most meet: whom may you oppose,
That can from Hector bring his honour off.
If not Achilles? Though 'tis a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells;
For here the Trojans taste our dearst repute,
With their finest palates: and trust to me, Ulysses.
Our reputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action; for the successes,
Although particular, shall give a scantling
Of good or bad unto the general;
And in such indexes (although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes) there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector issues from our choice:
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election, and doth boil,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues; who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence the conquering pair?
To steel a strong opinion to themselves?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,
In no less working, than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech:—
Thereon 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell; if not,
The lustre of the better shall exceed,9
By showing the worst first.9 Do not consent,
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honour and our shame, in this,
Are dog'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what they?

Ulyss. What glory our 'Achilles shares from Hector
Were he not proud, we all should share9 with him.
But he already is too insolent:
And we were better parch in Afric sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector fair. If he were fool'd,
Why, then we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No; make a lottery,
And by device let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves
Give him allowance for the better man,10
For that will physic the great Myrmidon,
Who broils in loud applause: and make him fall
His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull, brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still,
That we have better men. But, hit or miss.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another Part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites!
Thers. Agamemnon—how if he had boils? full, all ver., generally?
Ajax. Thersites!
Thers. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not be general run then? were not that a botchy sore? Ajax. Dog!
Thers. Then would come some matter from him: I se none now.
Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf’s son, canst thou not hear? ’eel then.
Thers. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou monrel beef-witted lord!
Ajax. Speak then, thou swind’st*4 leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsonennesse.
Thers. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: ut, I think, thy horse will sooner con an oration, than you learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, and thou? a red murrain o’thy jade’s tricks!
Ajax. Toads-stool, learn me the proclamation.
Thers. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strik’st so thus?
Ajax. The proclamation.—
Thers. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.
Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not: my fingers itch.
Thers. I would, thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee: I would make thee lose somethin’ scab in Greece. When thou art forth the incursions, thou strik’st as slow as another.
Ajax. I say, the proclamation,—
Thers. Thou grimliest and raiest every hour on chilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus at Proserpina’s beauty, ay, that thou arkest at him.
Ajax. Mistress Thersites:
Thers. Thou shouldst strike him.
Ajax. Cobloof!
Thers. He would punt thee into shivers with his flat,* a sailer breaks a biscuit.
Thers. Do, do.
Ajax. Thou stooil for a witch!
Thers. Ay, do, thou sodden-witted lord! thou art no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an*2 minigo* may tutor thee: thou scourvy valiant ass! you art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art strong and sold among those of any wit, like a Barian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing no bowls, thou!
Ajax. You dog!
Thers. Thou scourvy lord!
Thers. Mar’s idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do.
Enter Achilles and Patroclus.
Achil. Why, how now, Ajax! wherefore do you this?

To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.
Two ours shall tame each other: pride alone
Must tarre’ the mastiffs on, as ’t were their bone.

[Exeunt.

How now, Thersites! what’s the matter, man?
Thers. You see him there, do you?
Achil. Ay: what’s the matter?
Thers. Nay, look upon him.
Achil. So I do: what’s the matter?
Thers. Nay, but regard him well.
Achil. Well, why I do so.
Thers. But yet you look not well upon him; for, whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.
Achil. I know the fool.
Thers. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.
Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.
Thers. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what medicums of wit he utters! his orations have earn thus long. I have bobbed his brain, more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrow for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax, who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head, I’ll tell you what I say of him.
Achil. What?
Thers. I say, this Ajax—
Thers. Has not so much wit—
Achil. Nay, I must hold you.
Thers. As will stop the eye of Helen’s needle, for whom he comes to fight.
Achil. Peace, fool! Thers. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he, look you there.
Ajax. O, thou damned cur! I shall—
Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool’s?
Thers. No, I warrant you; for a fool’s will shame it.
Patr. Good words, Thersites.
Achil. What’s the quarrel?
Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenour of the proclamation, and he rakes upon me.
Thers. I serve thee not.
Ajax. Well, go to, go to.
Thers. I serve here voluntary.
Achil. Your last service was suffrance, ’twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.
Thers. Even so?—a great deal of your wit, too, lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a rusty nut with no kernel.
Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?
Thers. There’s Ulysses, and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy ere your granddires had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the war.
Achil. What? what?
Thers. Yes, good sooth: to Achilles! to Ajax! to—Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.
Thers. ’Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.
Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!
Thers. I will hold my peace when Achilles’ bane* bids me, shall I?

Ach. There's for you, Paitrocles.

Theor. I will see you hang, like cloptoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.

Pai. A good riddance.

Ach. Marry, this, sir, is proclaimed through all our host:

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun,
Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy,
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms,
That hath a stomach; and such a one, that dare

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Ach. I know not: it is put to lottery; otherwise,
He knew his man.

Ajax. O! meaning you—I will go learn more of it.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
'Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:—
'I deliver Helen, and all damage else—
As honour, less of time, travail, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd
In hot digestion of this cormorant war,—
Shall be struck off.'—Hector, what say you to 't?

Hec. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,
As far as toucheth my particular,
Yet, dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out—'Who knows what follows?'
Than Hector is. The wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Every tith soul, 'monst many thousand disme's,
Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us,
Had in our name, the value of one tenth,
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie! my brother
Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite
And buckie in a waist most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father
Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumberers, brother priest:

You for your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm,
You know, a sword employ'd is perilous,
And reason flies the object of all harm.
Who marv'ls, then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels,
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star dis-or'd—Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates, and sleep: manhood and home
Should have bare hearts, would they but fat us thoughts.

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect
Make liveres pale, and lusthudeject.

Hec. Brother, she is not worth what she doth o

The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hec. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estin-ten and dignity,
As well where't is precious of itself,
As in the prizer. 'Tis mad idolatry,
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dotes, that is inclinable.

To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of th' affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. How may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To bleech' from this, and to stand firm by honour.
We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,
When we have soil'd them; nor the remainder via,
We do not throw in unrespective sieve,
Because we now are full. It was thought meet,
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath of full consent belied his nails;
The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,
And did his voice; he touch'd the ports desir'd;
And ere an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive,
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freeness
Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.
Why keep we her? the Grecians keeps our aunt.
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,
And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you 'll avouch 't was wisdom Paris attend,
As you must need, for you all cry'd—'Go, go!'
If you 'll confess, he brought home noble prize,
As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,
And cry'd—'Inestimable!' why do you now
The issue of your proper wisdoms rate,
And do a deed that fortune never did.
Reggar the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O, theft most base,
That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place?

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shrick is this?

Tro. 'Tis our mad sister: I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hec. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hec. P. Piss, sister, peace!

Cas. Virgin and boy, mid-age and wrinkled
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of mean to come.

Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears
Troy must not be, nor goody Ilion stand;
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Troy, Troy! cry! a Helen, and a woe!
Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.]

But, Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

\section*{Att. Why, brother Hector, why not think the justness of each act and no other than event doth form it; we \section*{Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures most distaste the goodness of a quarrel, but hath our several honours all engag'd make it gracious. For my private part, more touch'd than all Priam's sons;
love forbid, there should be done amongst us
dings as might offend the weakest spleen for, and maintain the feud.
For else the world conceive! of levity,
well my undertakings, as your counsels;
I attest the gods, your full consent
in my propension, and cut off
Fears attending on so dire a project:
what, alas! can these my single arms?
propagation is in one man's valour;
the push and eminence of those quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest, alone to poise! the difficulties.
I had as ample power as I have will,
should never retract what he hath done,
right the pursuit.

\section*{Hec.}

Paris, you speak
one bestow'd on your sweet delights:
the honey still, but these the gall.
be valiant is no praise at all.

\section*{Att.} Sir, I propose not merely to myself pleasures such a beauty brings with it, would have the soil of her fair rape off in honourable keeping her.
At reason were it to the ramasse'd queen,
pace to your great worths, and shame to me,
\section*{Hec.}

Of nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
to their benumbed wills, resist the same,
There is a law in each well-order'd nation, to curb those raging appetites that are most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,
As it is known she is, these moral laws
Of nature, and of nation, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: thus to persist in doing wrong extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,
My sprightly brethren, I protest to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependance
Upon our joint and several dignities.

\section*{Hec.}

Troy, Why, there you touch'd the life of our designe
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes.
And fame in time to come canonize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promised glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

\section*{Hec.}

I am yours,
You valiant offering of great Priamus,—
I have a resting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits.
I was advis'd, their general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept:
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt]

\section*{SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.}

\section*{Enter Thersites.}

Thers. How now, Thersites! what! lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would, it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Siofet, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spileful execrations. Then, there's Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. [Kneels.] O, thou great thunder-darter of Olympus! forget that thou art Jove the king of gods: and Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if ye take not that little, little, less-than-little wit from them that they have; which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their willsy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather the Neapolitan bone-ache; for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a blanket. [Rises.] I have said my prayers, and devil, envy, say Amen What, ho! my lord Achilles!

\section*{Enter Patroclus.}

\section*{Pat. Who's there? Thersites? Good Thersites, come in and rail.}

Thers. If I could have remembered a gift counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation: but it is no matter: thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then, if she, that lays thee out, says thou art a fair corse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't she never shrouded any but lazaros. Amen. Where's Achilles?

Patr. What! art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay; the heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Therites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles. Then, tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Therites. Then, tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knowers, Patroclus. Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou must tell, that knowest.

Achil. O! tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles: Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Achil. Peace! I have not done.

Achil. Ho is a privileged man.—Proceed, Therites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool: Achilles is a fool; Therites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this: come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles: Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Therites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why make me a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of thy Creator.----It suffices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Therites.

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold, and a whore; a good quarrel, to draw emulous factions, and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpent's on the subject, and war and lechery confound all. [Exit. Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill-dispose'd, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here. We sent our messengers; and we lay by our appointements visiting of him: Let him be told so, lest, perchance, he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but why? why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Taking Agamemnon aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath revenged his fool from him.

Nest. Who? Therites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have le his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument, Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more on wish, than their fraction: but it was a strong exposure, a fool could dismiiss.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knit not, folly may easily unite. Here comes Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for our testy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry, If any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state, To call upon him: he hopes, it is no other, But, for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus. We are too well acquainted with these answers; But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Much attribute he hath, and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues Not virtuously on his own part beheld, Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss; Yes, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him, We come to speak with him; and you shall not sit If you do say, we think him over-proud, And under-honest; in self-appointment greater, Than in the note of judgment; and worthier the. Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, [humus, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His petty lunes, his ebbe, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this: and add, That, if he overhold his price so much, We'll none of him: but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report— Bring action hither, this cannot go to war. A stirring dwarf we do allowance give Before a sleeping giant:—tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. [Exit Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied, We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter you.
Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engeni-

[Aside.

Yet he loves himself: is’t not strange? [Aside.

Re-enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What’s his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;

[Aside.

carries on the stream of his dispose

Whose observance or respect of any,

will peculiar, and an self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,

[Aside.

ent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request’s sake only,

[Aside.

makes important. Posses’d he is with greatness;

[Aside.

stands not to himself, but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath: imagin’d worth

in his blood such swoon and hot discourse.

twixt his mental and his active parts,

[Aside.

Emp’d Achilles in commotion rages,

[Aside.

batters down himself. 1

[Aside.

What should I say?

is so plaguy proud, that the death tokens of it is—‘No recovery,’

[Aside.

Let Ajax go to him.—

Arch. lord, go you and greet him in his tent:

Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led,

If your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon! let it not be so:

[Aside.

will conserve the steps that Ajax makes

When they go from Achilles. Shall the proud lord, hates his arrogance with his own seam; 2

[Aside.

never suffers matter of the world

ruminante himself, shall be he worshipp’d or by my will, asubjugate his merit,

With entertaining great Hyperion.

and say in thunder—‘Achilles, go to him.’

[Aside.

Nat. O! this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

[Aside.

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed flat

[Aside.

’ll push him o’er the face.

Agam. O, no! you shall not go.

Ajax. An ’t be proud with me, I’ll flheezo 4 his pride.

[Aside.

[Aside.

It is not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

[Aside.

A paltry, insolent fellow! How he describes

[Aside.

Himself?

[Aside.

Can he not be sociable?

[Aside.

The raven

[Aside.

Makes blackness.

Ajax. I’ll let his humour blood.

Agam. He will be the physician, that should be the [Aside.

patient.

Ajax. An all men were o’ my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside.

Ajax. ’A should not bear it so, 5

A should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. An ’t would, you’d carry half. [Aside.

Ulyss. ’A would have ten shares. [Aside.

Ajax. I will knead him; I will make him supple.

Nest. He’s not yet thorough warm; force him with praises.

Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry. [Aside.

Ulyss. My lord; you feed too much on this dislike.

[To Agamemnon.

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, ’tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—but ’tis before his face;

I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

[Aside.

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us!

Would, he were a Trojan!

[Aside.

Nest. What a vice

Were it in Ajax now—

Ulyss. If he were proud?

Dio. Or covetous of praise?

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne? Dio. Or strange, or self-affect’d?

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet humour;

Praise him that got thee, her that gave thee suck:

Fam’d be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice-fam’d, beyond all erudition;

But he that disciplin’d thine arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give him half; and for thy vigour,

Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield

To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts: here’s Nestor,

Instructed by the antiquary times,

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;

But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

As green as Ajax, and your brain so temper’d,

You should not have the omenence of him,

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here: the hart Achilles

Keeps thicket.—Please it our great general

To call together all his state of war:

Fresh kings are come to Troy; to-morrow,

We must with all our main of power stand fast:

And here’s a lord,—come knights from east to west,

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Agam. Go we to council: let Achilles sleep.

Light boats sail 2 swift, though greater hulks 2 draw deep. [Exeunt

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend you; pray you, a word. Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You depend upon a noble gentleman: I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better. I am the lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace. [Music within.

Pan. Grace! not so fast, friend; honour and lordship are my titles.—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir; and theirs that love music.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul—

Pan. Who? my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. J come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a complimentary assail upon him, for my business seethes.

Serv. Sudden business: there's a strewed phrase, indeed.

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them: especially to you, fair queen: fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—Fair prices, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again: you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance.—Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir!—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord. Well, you say so in fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me. But, marry, thus, my lord.—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord.—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you. Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head.

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a swee queen,—i' faith—

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sore offence.

Pan. Nay, that shalt not serve your turn: that shall it not, in truth, la! Nay, I care not for such words: no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you, that if the knave call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups. Par. I'll lay my life, with my dispaiser; Cressida.

Pan. No, no; no such matter, you are wide. Come your dispaiser is sick.

Pan. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor dispaiser's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make thee three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this. I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pr'ythee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo all. Q, Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love? ay, that it shall. i' faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh! loves bow
Shoots buck and doe:
The shaft confounds,
Not that it wounds
But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems a wound to kill,
Doth turn oh! to ha! ha! ha!
So dying love lives still:
Oh! thou false, but ha! ha! ha!
Oh! oh! grows out for ha! ha! ha!
—Hey ho!
Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose.
Par. He eats nothing but doves, love.
Pas. And that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.
Helen. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers?
Pas. Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?
Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have arm'd to-day, but my Neil would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?
Helen. He hangs the tip at something. You know all, lord Pandarus.
Pas. Not I, honey-sweet queen. I long to hear how they sped to-day. You'll remember your brother's excuse?
Par. To a hair.
Pas. Farewell, sweet queen.
Helen. Do you recommend me to your niece.
Pas. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.]
[A Retreat sounded.]
Helen. They're come from field: let us to Priam's hall, to greet the warriors.
Par. Sweet Helen, I must woo you
To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles,
With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd,
Shall more obey than to the edge of steel.
Of force of Greekish sinews: you shall do more,
Than all the island kings, disarm great Hector.
Helen. T will make us proud to be his servant.
Paris:
Yes! what he shall receive of us in duty,
Gives us more palm in beauty than we have:
Yes! overherself ourselves.
Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Same. Pandarus' Orchard.
Enter Pandarus and a Servant, meeting.
Pas. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?
Ser. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.
Enter Troilus.
Pas. O! here he comes.—How now, how now!
Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.
Pas. Have you seen my cousin?
Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks.
Staying for waftage. O! be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportation to those fields,
Where I may swallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserver. O, gentle Pandarus!
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressida.
Pas. Walk here in the orchard: I'll bring her straight. [Exit Pandarus.
Tro. Am I giddy? expectation whirls me round.
'Tis imaginary relish so sweet
That it enchants my sense; what will it be,
When that the watery palate taste indeed
Love's thrice-reproved nectar? death, I fear me;
Wooing destruction; or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers.
Hear it much; and I do fear, too fine.
That I shall lose distinction in my joys,
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarus.
Pan. She's making her ready; she'll come straight
You must be witty now. She does so blush,
And fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath so short as a new-ta'en sparrow.
[Exit Pandarus.
Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse,
And all my powers do bestowe their losing, like vassalage at unwaveringly The eye of majesty.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.
Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby. Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her, that you have sworn to me.—What! are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways: as you draw backward, we'll put you in the file. Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. [Unveiling her.] Also the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an't were dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. How now! a kiss in fee-farm? build there, carpenter, the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel,* for all the ducks I the river go to go.
Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.
Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds; but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What! biiling again? Here's—'In witness whereof the parties interchangeably.'—Come in, come in: I' ll go get a fire. [Exit Pandarus.]
Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?
Tro. O Cressida! how often have I wished me thus?
Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!
Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abrupt? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?
Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.
Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.
Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason, stumbling without fear: to fear the worst, oft cure the worse.
Tro. O! let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.
Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?
Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistresses to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.
Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; yowling more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?
Tro. Are there such? such are not we. Praise us as we are tested; allow us as we prove: our head shall go bare, till merit crown it. No perfection in reversion...
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT III.

shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst, si...I be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak trust, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What! blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you’ll give him me. Be true to my lord; if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle’s word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I’ll give my word for her too. Our kindred, they be long ere they are woed, they are constant, being won: they are burs; I can tell you; they’ll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now; and brings me heart.

Yincoe Troilus, I have lov’d you night and day For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid, then, so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord, With the first glance that ever—Pardon me,— If I confess much, you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much But I might master it.—In faith, I lie: My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown Too headstrong for their mother: see, we fools! Why have I blabb’d? who shall be true to us, When we are so unsecret to ourselves?— But, though I lov’d you well. I woor’d you not; And yet, good faith, I wish’d myself a man, Or that we women had men’s privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue; For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak The thing I shall repent. See, see! your silence, Cunning in dullness, from my weakness draws My very soul of counsel.* Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issuing, [Kissing her.*

Pan. Pretty, faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me; T was not my purpose thus to beg a kiss. I am ashamed:—O heavens! what have I done?— For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try. I have a kind self* that resides with you; But an unkind self, that itself will leave To be another’s fool. I would be gone.— Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.*

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. For chance, my lord, I show more craft than love, And fell so roundly to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts; but you are wise, Or else you love not, for to be wise, and love, Exceeds man’s might; that dwells with gods above. Tro. O! that I thought it could be in a woman, (As, if it can, I will presume in you) To feed for aye her lamp and flame of love; To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving beauty’s outward, with a mind That doth renew swifter than blood decays: Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me, That my integrity and truth to you Might be affronted with the match and weight Of such a winnow’d purity in love; How were I then uplifted! but, alas! I am as true as truth’s simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I’ll war with you.

Tro. O, virtuous fight Where right with right wars who shall be most right. True swains in love shall, in the world to come, Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes, Full of protest, of oath, and big compare, Want similes, truth tir’d with iteration,— As true as steel, as plantage* to the moon, As sun to day, as turtle to her mate, As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,— Yet, after all comparisons of truth, As truth’s authentic author to be cited, As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse, And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be! If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth, When time is old and hath forgot itself, When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy, And blind oblivion swallow’d cities up, And mighty states characterless are grated To dusty nothing; yet let memory, From false to false among false maidens in love, Uphold my falsehood. When they have said—as false As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth, As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer’s calf, Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son, Yes, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood. As false as Cressid.

Troilus kisses her.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made; seal it, seal it; I’ll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand; here, my cousin: if ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world’s end above my name, call them all.—Pandar: let all constant be Troilusses, all false women Cressidas, and all brokers between Pandar: say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Whereupon I will show you a chamber; which bed, because it shall not speak of you pretty encounters, press it to death: away!—Exeunt* And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here. Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear! [Exit.:

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you, 'tis advantage of the time prompts me, aloud to call for recompense. Appeal it to your mind, that, through the night I bear in things above, have abandon'd Troy, left my possession, nvr'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself, from certain and possess'd conveniences, to doubtful fortunes; sequestering from me all that time, acquaintance, custom, and condition, made tame and most familiar to my nature; and here, to do you service, am become as new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
do beseech you, as in way of taste,
do give me now a little benefit,
but of those many register'd in promise, which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor, yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
If hast you, (often have you thanks therefore) wear'd my Creseid in right great exchange, whom Troy hath still denied; but this Antenor, know, is such a wreath in their affairs, that their negotiations all must shck. Wanting his manage: and they will almost give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam, in change of him: let him be sent, great princes, and he shall buy my daughter; and her presence shall strike off all service I have done in most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him, and bring us Creseid hither: Calchas shall have what he requests of us.—Good Diomed, furnish you fairly for this interchange: Withal, bring word, if Hector will to-morrow answer'd in his challenge. Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden, which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Ulysses and Patroclus, before their Tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands, I' the entrance of his tent: please it our general to pass strangely by him, as if he were forgot; and princes all, lay negligent and loose regard upon him. Will come last: 'tis like, he will question me, why such unplausible eyes are bent, why turn'd on him? if so, I have derision medicable, to use between your strangeness and his pride, which his own will shall have desire to drink. May do good: pride hath no other glass to show itself, but pride; for supple knees need arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.
Agam. We'll execute your province, and put on a form of strangeness as we pass along: to do each lord; and either greet him not, or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What! comes the general to speak with me? You know my mind: I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us?
Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?
Achil. No.
Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better. [Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Achil. What! does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus!

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit Ajax.

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles? Patr. They pass by strangely; they were us'd to bend, to send their smiles before them to Achilles; to come as humbly, as they us'd to ooeep to holy altars.

Achil. What! am I poor of late?
'T is certain, greatness, ones fallen out with fortune, must fall out with men too: what the declin'd is, he shall as soon read in the eyes of others, as feel in his own fall; for men, like butterflies, show not their lovely wings but to the summer, and not a man, for being simply man, hath any honour; but honour for those honours that are without him, as place, riches, favour, prizes of accident as oft as merit:

Which, when they fall, as being slippery standers, the love that lean'd on them, as slippery too, doth one pluck down another, and together die in the fall. But 't is not so with me: Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy at ample point all that I did posses,

Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find out something not worth in me such rich beholding as they have often given. Here is Ulysses:
I'll interrupt his reading.—

How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son! [Looking up from his book.

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here writes me, that man—how dearly ever parted; how much in having, or without in,—

Cannot make boast to have that which he hath, nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection; as when his virtues shining upon others heat them, and they retort that heat again to the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses. The beauty that is borne here, in the face, the bearer knows not, but commends itself to others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself that most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd salutes each other with each other's form:

For speculation turns not to itself, till it hath travelled, and is mirror'd there, where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position, it is familiar, but at the author's drift; who in his circumstance expressly proves, that no man is the lord of any thing, though in and of him there be much consisting, till he communicate his parts to others:

Nor doth he of himself know them for aught till he behold them form'd in the applause where they are extended; which, like an arch, reverberates the voice again; or like a gate of steel,
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much wrapt in this;
And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.
Heaven, what a man is there! a very horse;
That he knows not what. Nature! what things there are,
Most abstain in regard, and dear in use:
What things, again, most dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth. Now, shall we see to-morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
Ajax renowned. O heavens! what some men do,
While some men leave to do.
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the idlers in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
While pride is feasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrieking 1.

_Achill._ I do believe it; for they pass'd by me,
As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me,
Good word, nor look. What! are my deeds forgot?
_Ulyss._ Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts almost oblivion;
A great-sized monster of ingratitude:
Those scars are good deeds past; which are devour'd
As fast as they are made, forget as soon
As done. Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: to have done, is to hang
Quite out of fashion, like a rusty nail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast: keep, then, the path
For emulation hath a thousand sone;
That one by one pursues: if you give way,
Or edge 2 aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost;
Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abortive rear,
O'er-run and trampled on. Then, what they do in present,
Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop yours;
For time is like a fashion in her heat;
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,
And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. Let not virtue seek Remuneration for the thing it was; for beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,—
That all, with one consent, praise new-born gavds,
Though they are made and molded of things past,
And give to dust, that is a little girt,
More laud than girt o'er-dusted.
The present eye praises the present object:
Then, marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax,
Since things in motion quicker 3 catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made envious missions 'monget the gods themselves,
And drave great Mars to faction.

_Achill._ I have strong reasons.

_Ulyss._ But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroic.
'T is known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

_Achill._ Ha! known?

_Ulyss._ Is that a wonder?
The providence that 's in a watchful state
Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold,
Finds bottom in the uncompassive deeps,
Keeps pace 4 with thought, and almost, like the gods,
Does thoughts unveil in their dumb crudities.
There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine
Than breath, or pen, can give expression to.
All the commerce that you have had with Troy
As perfectly is ours, as yours, my lord;
And better would it fit Achilles much
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena:
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus, now at home,
When fame shall in our islands sound her trump,
And all the Ge'sekish girls shall tripping sing,—
"Great Hector's sister did Achilles win,"
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him. 5
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak:
The foot slides o'er the ice that you should break.

[En

_Patr._ To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you.
A woman impudent and mannish grown
Is not more loath'd, than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this:
They think, my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus.
Swift, rouse yourself: and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air."

_Achill._ Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

_Patr._ Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honour 6 him.

_Achill._ I see, my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly gone.

_Patr._ O! then beware:
Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves,
Omission to do what is necessary
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtlyainting,
Even then, when we sit idly in the sun.

_Achill._ Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus.
I' ll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
'T invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here unarmed.
I have a woman's longings
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full of view.—A labour saw'd I

_Enter Thersites._

_Ther._ A wonder!

_Achill._ What?

_Ther._ Ajax goes up and down the field asking 7 himself.

_Achill._ How so?

_Ther._ He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector
And so prophetically proud of an heroic audacity
That he raves in saying nothing.

_Achill._ How can that be?
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Scene I. Troy. A Street.

Enter, at one side, Eneas, and Servant, with a Torch; at the other, Paris, Deiphobus, Antenor, Diomedes, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who is there there?

Ene. It is the lord Eneas.

Par. Eneas, is the prince there in person?

Ene. I have so good occasion to lie long, as you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business could rob my bedmate of my company.

Dio. That’s my mind too. — Good morning, lord Eneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Eneas, takes his hand, fits his process of your speech, wherein he told how Diomed, a whole week by days, did haunt you in the field.

Ene. Health to you, valiant sir, in all question of the gentle true; when I meet you arm’d, as black defiance, a heart can think, or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces, nor bloods are now in calm, and so long health; when contention and occasion meet, my love, I’ll play the hunter for thy life, fish all my fiscure pursuit, and policy.

Ene. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly from his face backward. — In humane gentleness, welcome to Troy; now, by Anchises’ life, welcome, indeed. By Venus’ hand I swear, a man alive can love, in such a sort, be thing he means he kills to more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize. — Jove, let Eneas live, if to my sword his fate be not the glory, a thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine emulous honour, let him die with every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Ene. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despicable gentle greeting, the noblest hateful love, that’t ever I heard of.

What business, lord, so early?

Ene. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you. ’Tis to bring this to Calchas’ house; and there to render him, [Greek For the enfreed Antenor, the fair Cressid. Let’s have your company; or, if you please, haste there before us. I constantly do think, (Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge) My brother Troilus lodges there to-night: House him, and give him note of our approach, with the whole quality wherefore: I fear, we shall be much unwelcome.

Ene. That I assure you: Troilus had rather Troy were born to Greece, than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help; the bitter disposition of the time will have it so. On, lord; we’ll follow you.

Ene. Good morrow, all.[Exit.

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; ’faith, tell me true even in the soul of sound good-fellowship, who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself, or Menelaus?
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT IV.

Duo. Both alike:
He merits well to have her, that doth seek her
Not making any scruple of her soleure,
With such a hell of pain, and world of charge;
And you as well to keep her, that defend her
Not palating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends.
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;
You, like a leecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleased to breed out your inheritors;
Both our parts poise, each weighs nor less nor more;
But he as he, each heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Dio. She's bitter to her country. Hear me, Paris:
For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple
Of her contaminated cargion weight,
A Trojan hath been slain. Since she could speak,
She hath not given so many good words breath,
As she, her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chaphen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy;
But we in silence hold this virtue well,—
We'll not commend what we intend not sell.
Here lies our way.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Court before the House of Pandarus.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down:
He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;
To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses,
As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow, then.

Tro. P'rythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you a seawy of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys* no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venemous wights she stays,
As tediously* as hell; but flies the grapse of love,
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. P'rythee, tarry—
You men will never tarry.

O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,
And, then, you would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What! are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:
I shall have such a life.—

Pan. How now, how now! how go maidenheads?
Here, you maid: where's my cousin Cressid?
Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!
You bring me to do,—and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what:
—what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beshrew your heart! you'll ne'er be good,
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchio!—
Bast not slept to-night? would he be, a naughty man, let it sleep; a bugbear take him! [Kneeling.

Cres. Did not I tell you?—'would he were knocked o' the head!—
Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:
You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd; I think of no such thing.—

Enter Èneas.

Ène. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Èneas! By my troth,
I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Ène. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Ène. Come, he is here, my lord: do not deny him:
It doth import him much to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? it is more than I know,
I'll be sworn:—for my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?

Ène. Who!—nay, then:—come, come, you'll do him wrong ere ye are 'ware.* You'll be so true to him, to be false to him. Do not you know of him, but you go fetch him hither: go.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter?

Ène. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you.
My matter is so rash. There is at hand Paris your brother, and Diophobus, The Grecian Diommed. and our Antenor Delivered to us; and for him, forthwith, Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour, We must give up to Diomedes' hand The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Ène. By Priam, and the general state of Troy: They are at hand. and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!
I will go meet them:—and, my lord Èneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Ène. Good, good, my lord; the secret laws of war Have not more gift in taciturnity [Exeunt Tro. & Ène.]

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost! To devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad. A plague upon Antenor! I would, they had broke'st

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! What is the matter? Who was last?

Pan. Ah! ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where is my lord? gone!
Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as it above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. P'rythee, get thee in. Would thou hadst not been born! I knew, thou wouldst be lash'd:

O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Ène. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench; thou must gone: thou art changed for Antenor. Thou must by father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his best; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O, you immortal gods!—I will not go.
Pan. Thee must.
Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father;
I saw no touch of consanguinity;
I know no love, no blood, no soul so near me,
is the sweet Troilus.—O, you gods divine,
Thou, Cressid, name the very crown of falsehood,
Ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death, is to this body what extremities you can,
let the strong base and building of my love
as the very centre of the earth, having all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep.
Pan. Do, do.
Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks:
back my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart vain sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before PANDARUS' House.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Enneas, Diomedus, Antenor, and Diomedee.

Par. It is a great morning, and the hour prefix'd
'ther delivery to this valiant Greek comes fast upon.—Good my brother Troilus,
'ye the lady what she is to do,
and haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house,
'the bring her to the Grecian presently;
and to his hand when I deliver her,
and let it as altar, and thy brother Troilus meet there offering to it his own heart.

Pan. I know what 'tis to love;
at would, as I shall pity, I could help!—

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in Pandarus' House.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.
Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?

A grief is thin, full, perfect, that I taste, dread and it is a sense as strong that which causeth it: how can I moderate it?
I could temorize with my affection,
burst it to a weak and colder palate,
like allayment could I give my grief:
love admits no qualifying dross, but more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. Here, here, here he comes.—A sweet duck!
Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me see too.
O heart,—as the goodly saying is,—
O heart, O heart, O heavy heart!
Why sighst thou without breaking?

He answereth again,

Because thou canst not ease thy smart,
By silence nor by speaking.

was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away king, for we may live to have need of such a verse:
see it, we see it.—How now, lambs! I
Cres. I love thee in so strain'd a purity, the bless'd gods—so angry with my fancy, be bright in zeal than the devotion which lip blow to their deities,—take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?
Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay, 'tis too plain a case.
Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?
Tro. A hateful truth.
Cres. What! and from Troilus too?
Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.
Cres. Is it possible?
Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance
Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoinder, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows
Even in the birth of our own labouring breath.
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one
Injuries, now, with a robber's haste,
Cramps his rich thiev'ry up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as he stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up into one loose adieu;
And scant us with a single famish'd kiss,
Distasting with the salt of broken tears.

Pan. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say, the Genius so
Cries, "Come!" to him that instantly must die.—
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind or my heart will be blown up by the root!
[Exit Pand.
Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.
Cres. A woeeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!
When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love. Be thou but true of heart—
Cres. I trust how now! what wicked deem is this?
Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us.
I speak not, "be thou true," as fearing thee;
For I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart;
But, "be thou true," say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation. Be thou true,
And I will see thee.

Cres. O! you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
As infinite as impertinent: but I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true, again?

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love,
The Grecian youths are full of quality:
Their loving well composed with gift of nature,
Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise:
How nobilities may move, and parts with person,
Alas! a kind of godly jealousy
(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin)
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain, then!
In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as your will: I can misuse,
Nor heel the high laurel, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games: fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:
But I can tell, that in each grace of these

And so on...
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Enter Ajax, armed; Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair. Anticipating time. With startling courage
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy, Thou dreadful Ajax: that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combattant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my pun
Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe.
Blow, villain, till thy spheric bias check
Out-swell the colic of puffed Aquilon.
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes apont bled.
Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sound
Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Ach. 'Tis but early day.

Agam. Is not yond Diomed with Calchas's daughter
Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomed, with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid I?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

[Kindly

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;
'Twere better she were kis'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—

[Putting him loof

So much for Nestor.

Ach. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady

Achilles bids you welcome. [Kissing

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now:

[Putting him loof

For thus peep'd Paris in his hardiment,
And parted thus you and your argument. [Kissing

Ulyss. I! deadly gall, and theme of all our scorn
For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss:—this, mine,
Patroclus kisses you. [Kissing her again

Men. O! this is trim.

Men. I'll have my kis's, sir.—Lady, by your leave

Cres. Is kissing do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to be

The kiss you take is better than you give;

Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot; I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an old man: give even, or give not.

Men. An old man, lady? every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true

That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fillip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sawd.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg then.

Ulyss. Why then, for Venus's sake, give me a kiss.

When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor; claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

[Exeunt.

There lurks a still and dumb-discourseful devil,
That tempts most cunningly. But be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think, I will?

Tro. No;

But something may be done, that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their chunkful potency.

Æne. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. 'Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come ye hither;

And bring Æneas, and the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will ye be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity:
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.

Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit
Is plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

[Enter Æneas, Paris, Antenor, Diomed, and Diomedes.

Welcome, sir Diomed. Here is the lady,
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand,
And by the way possess thee what she is.

Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe,
As Priam is in Ilion.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid, so please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be misters, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the zeal of my petition to thee,
In praising thee. I tell thee, lord of Greece,

She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.

I charge thee, use her will, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,

Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

O! be not mov'd, prince Troilus.

Let me be privileged by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free: when I am hence.

I'll answer to thy last; and know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge. To her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be 't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour. —no.

Tro. Come to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed,

This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.

Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning!

The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

[him.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with

Dri. Let us make ready straight.

Ænc. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels.

The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth, and single chivalry.

[Exeunt.

1 changeful: in f. e. 2 my last: in f. e. 3 young: in folio in f. e.

4 * * * * Not in f. e. 5 This line is not in the folio. 6 * *
Dio. Lady, a word:—I'll bring you to your father.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulys. Fie, fie upon her!
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
O! these encounter'd, so gib of tongue,
That give occasion' welcome are it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every tickling* reader, set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game.

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed; *Eneas, Troilus, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Ene. Hail, all you state of Greece! what shall be done
To him that victory commands? or do you purpose,
A victor shall be known? will you, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other; or shall be divided
By any voice or order of the field?

Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Ene. He cares not: he'll obey conditions.

Ach. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight oppos'd.

Ene. If not Achilles, sir,
What is your name?

Ach. If not Achilles, nothing.

Ene. Therefore Achilles; but, whate'er, know this:
In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
This Ajax is half-made of Hector's blood:
In love whereof half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This blunder knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.

Ach. A maiden battle, then?—O! I perceive you.

Re-enter Diomed.

Agam. Here is sir Diomed.—Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and lord *Eneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the utterance,*
If else a breach: the combattants being kin,
Half stirs their strife before their strokes begin.

[Ajax and Hector enter the lists.]

Ulys. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

Ulys. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;
Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word,
Peaking in deeds, and deadless in his tongue:
Not soon provok'd, nor being provok'd soon calmd:
In heart and hand both open, and both free:
Or what he has, he gives, what thinks, he shows;
Is given not till judgment guide his bounty;
Or dignifies an impure* thought with breath.

Like as Hector, but more dangerous;
Or Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes a tender object; but he, in heat of action,
More vindicative than jealous love.

They call him Troilus; and on him erect
Second hope, as fairly built as Hector.

hus says *Eneas; one that knows the youth,
Yen to his inces, and with private soul

Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. Hector and Ajax fight.

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own.

Tro. Hector, thou sleepest.

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well disposed:—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more.'

Trumpet. *Ence, Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet: let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more—

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.

Were thy commission Greek and Trojan so.

That thou couldest say—'This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my brother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my father's;' by Jove multipotent,
Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rank feud. But the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd. Let me embrace thee, Ajax.—

By him that thundereth thou hast lusty arms.

Hector would have them fall upon him thus:

Counsel, all honour to thee!... [They embrace.

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man.

I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable
On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'est Oyes
Cries, 'This is he!' could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Ene. There is expectation here from both the sides,
What farther you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;

The issue is embrace.—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entertainings find success,
As said I have the chance, I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarmed the valiant Hector.

Hect. *Eneas, call my brother Troilus to me;
And signify this loving interview
To the expectors of our Trojan part:

Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me, name by name;
But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy.

But that's no welcome; understand more clear.

What's past, and what's to come, is strew'd with husks
And formless ruin of oblivion;

But in this extant moment, faith and truth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. My well-faith'd lord of Troy, no less to you

[Troilus.]
Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.
Hect. Whom must we answer?
Æne. The noble Menelaus.
Hect. O! you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks.
Mock not, that I affect th' untraded oath;
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' grove;
She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.
Hect. O! pardon; I offend.
Æne. Here, I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Labouring for destiny, make cruel way
Through ranks of Grecian youth: and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Deepening many forfeits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' th' air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd,
That I have said unto my standers-by,
"Lo! Jupiter is yonder, dealing life."
And I have seen thee pace, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,
Like Olympian wrestlings: this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars the captain of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.
Æne. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee. good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time.
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.
Æne. I would my arms could match thee in contention,
As they contend with thee in courtesy.
Hect. I would they could.
Nest. Ha! by this white beard, I'd fight with thee tomorrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time.
Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.
Hect. I know your favour, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir! there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ition, on your Grecian embassy.
Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that portly front your town,
Yond' towers. whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.
Hect. I must not believe you.
There they stand yet: and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.
Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome.
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.
Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses, then.—
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee:
I have an exact view perusal'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.
Hect. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee
And seen thee morrow: in fols. Ænot. the: in fols.
A stith, is an enow. Petyy. you: in fols.
ACT V.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Ach. I’ll heat his blood with Grecian wine to-night, Wash with my scimitar I’ll cool to-morrow.

Patro. Pray, let us feast him to the height.

Ach. Here comes Thetis.

Enter Thetis.

Thet. How now, thou cur of envy! Thou crusty batch of nature, what’s the news?

Ach. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol-worshipping, here’s a letter for thee.

Thet. From whence, fragment?

Ach. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Thet. Who keeps the tent now?

Ach. The surgeon’s box, or the patient’s wound.

Pat. Well said, adversity! and what need these tricks?

Thet. Prythee be silent, boy; I profit not by thy sick; thou art thought to be Achilles’ male varlet.

Pat. Male varlet, you rogue! what’s that.

Ach. Why, his masculine whore. Where the rotten skeins of the south, the guts-gripping, ruptures, cataracts, cauls o’ gravel i’ the back, lethargies, cold palates, raw yes, dirt-ridden livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of measles, sciatics, limpe-kills! i’ the plasm, incurable conches, and the reviled fee-simple of the latter, take out again such preposterous discoulerers!

Pat. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Thet. Do I curse thee?

Pat. Why no, you ruinous butt, you whoreson invincible cur, no.

Thet. No? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle memorial skene of aleave’s silk, thou green sarcenet

as for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal’s purse.

Ach. Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such dread, diminutive wights of nature!

Pat. Out, gall!

Thet. Finch egg!

Ach. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite of my great purpose in to-morrow’s battle.

Thet. Is there a letter from queen Helen?

Ach. Taken from her daughter, my fair love;

shaming me, and ‘gaging me to keep such that I have sworn. I will not break it:

all Greeks, fall fame, honour, or go, or stay;

ye major vow lies here; this I’ll obey.

Thet. me, come, Thetis, help to trim my tent;

as in banqueting must all be spent.

Thet. With too much blood, and too little brain, two may run mad: but if with too much brain,

too little blood, they do, I’ll be a curder of madmen.

Thet. Agamemnon,—an honest fellow enough, and what loves quails? but he has not so much brain as now; and the godly transformation of Jupiter

i.e., his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and ique memorial of cock-eocks, a thrifty shoeing-horn

a chain, hanging at his brother’s leg,—to what but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and lce forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were bing: he is both ass and ox: to an ox were nothing; a both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a lew, a load, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a her-

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulys. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may find her key, if he can take her cleft;* she's a noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Dio. Nay, but do then; and let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulys. List.

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Hognony?

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what—

Dio. Pho! pho! come tell, a pin; you are forewarned.—

Cres. In faith, I cannot. What would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I pr'ythee, do not hold me to mine oath;

Bidd me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulys. How now, Trojan?

Cres. Diomed!—

Dio. No, no; good night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O, plague and madness!

Ulys. You are mov'd, prince: let us depart, I pray you,

Loos your displeasure should enlarge itself

To wrathful terms. This place is dangerous;

The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulys. Nay, my good lord, go off:

You flow to great distraction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pr'ythee, stay.

Ulys. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay. By hell, and all hell's tortments,

I will not speak a word.

Dio. And so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O, wither'd truth! Why, how now, lord!

Cres. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Ulys. Guardian!—why, Greek!

Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you patter.

Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again.

Ulys. You shake, my lord, at something: will you go?

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!

Ulys. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay: by Jove, I will not speak a word.

There is between my will and all offences

A guard of patience. — Still a little while.

Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and Potato finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!

Dio. But will you then?

Cres. In faith, I will, lord: never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit Ulys.

You have sworn patience.

Tro. You will not, sweet lord;

I will not be myself, nor have cognition

Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESIDA.

Ther. Now the pledge! now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve. [Giving it

Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?

Ulys. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient: vastly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve: behold it well—

He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give 't me again.

Dio. Whose was 't?

Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night.

I pr'ythee, Diomed, visit me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens.—Well said, wheatsone.

Dio. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Dio. Ay, that.

Cres. O, all you gods!—O pretty, pretty pledge!

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee, and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,

And gives memorial dainty kiss to it,

As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;

He that takes that doth take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before; this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; 'tis faith you shall not:

I'll give you something else. [They strike

Dio. I will have this. Whose was it?

Cres. 'Tis no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'T was one's that lov'd me better than you will

But, now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yond',

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm.

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Ther. Wert thou the devil, and wor'st it on thy helm

It should be challenge'd.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—and yet is not:

I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why then, farewell.

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go.—One cannot speak a word:

But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fool's

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you

Pleases me best.

Cres. What shall I come? the hour?

Dio. What shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove—

Do come:—I shall be plaguid.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Tro. Farewell! one eye yet looks on thee,

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find,

The error of our eye directs our mind.

What error leads must err: O! then conclude,

Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.

[Exit Caractacus.

Ther. A proof of strength, she could not publish me

Unless she said, 'my mind is now turn'd where.'

Ulys. All 'e done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulys. Why stay we thes

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But if I tell how these two did co-act,

Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much ungenerously temper’d, To stop his ears against admonishment? Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:
By all I the everlasting gods, I’ ll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to-day.
Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm’d, and bloody in intent. Consort with me in loud and dear petition: Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream’d O bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O! it is true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound.

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me swear
Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows: They are polluted offerings, more abhor’d Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O! be persuaded: do not count it holy To hurt by being just: it is as lawful For us to give much count to violent thefts, And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow; But vows to every purpose must not hold.

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;

Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate: Life every man holds dear; but the dear man Holds honour far more precious-dear than life.—

Enter Troilus.

How now, young man! meant’st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit Cassandra.

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;

I am to-day 1 the vein of chivalry. Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong, And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy, I’ll stand to-day for thee, and me, and Tro y.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you, Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall, Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,

You bid them rise, and live.

_Hec._ O! 'tis fair play.

_Tro._ Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

_Hec._ How now! how now!

_Tro._ For the love of all the gods,

Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers,
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

_Hec._ Fie, savage, fie!

_Tro._ Hector, THEN 'tis war.

_Hec._ Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

_Tro._ Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheons my retire;
Not Priam and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with remorse of tears;
Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
Oppose to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

_Re-enter Cassandra with Priam._

_Cas._ Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy churl; now, if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

_Pri._ Come, Hector, come; go back.

Thy wife hath dream'd, thy mother hath had visions,
Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrap't,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

_Hec._ Æneas is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

_Pri._ Ay, but thou shalt not go.

_Hec._ I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful: therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect, but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do here forgive me, royal Priam.

_Cas._ O Priam! yield not to him.

_And._ Do not, dear father.

_Hec._ Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exeunt Andromache.

_Tro._ This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl
Makes all these bodements.

_Cas._ Farewell, dear Hector! Look, how thou diest! look, how thine eye turns pale! Look, how thy wounds do bleed; at many vents! Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out! How poor Andromache shrills her doleful fate! Behold, distraction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like wearied antic, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

_Tro._ Away!—Away!—

_Cas._ Farewell.—Yet soft!—Hector, I take my leave:
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive.

.Exit._

_Hec._ You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclam.
Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and fight;
Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.

_Pri._ Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severally Priam and Hecuba. Alarms.

_Tro._ They are at it!—Hark!—Profound Diodom, believe,

I come to lose mine arm, or win my sleeve.——

[Exit Rondom.

Pan._ Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

_Tro._ What now?

Pan._ Here's a letter come from yond' poor girl.

_Giving._

_Tro._ Let me read.

_Pan._ A whore'son phthisick, a whore'son rascal phthisick, so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of a girl; and what one thing, what another, that I am left you o' these days: and I have a rheum mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bone, 'tis unless a man were cured, I cannot tell what to this on't.—What says she there?

_Tro._ Words, words, mere words, no matter from what heart;

_Tearing the late._

Th' effect doth operate another way.—Go, wind to wind, there turn and change together—My love with words and air still she feeds, But edifies another with her deeds.——

[Exeunt scenae

SCENE IV.—Between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarms: Excursions. Enter Thersites.

_Ther._ Now they are clapper-clawing one another I will go look on. That dissembling abominable rascal Diodom, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve, of Troy there, in his helm: I was fain see them meet; that same young Trojan asks love the whore there, might send that Grecian whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to that semblings luxurious drab of a sleeveless errand. Oth side, the policy of those crafty swearing men—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese. Never a same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved blackberry:—they set me up in policy that may cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind. Asha and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Ajax and will not arm to-day: whereupon the Grec begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows ill opinion. Soft! here come sleeve, and sleeve not!——

[Stands back._

Enter Diomedes, Troilus following.

_Tro._ Fly not: for shouldst thou take the river's

I would swim after.

_Dio._ Thou dost miscall retire:

I do not fly, but advantageous care
Withdrew me from the odds of multitude.

Have at thee!——

_Ther._ Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for the where, Trojan!—now the sleeve! now the sleeve!

[Exeunt Troilus and Diomedes, fighting.

_Hec._ What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hec match?

Art thou of blood, and honour?

_Dragging Ther._

_Ther._ No, no:—I am a rascal; a scurvy new knife, a very filthy rogue.

_Hec._ I do believe thee.—live.

_Ther._ God's mercy, that thou wilt believe me. A plague break thy neck, for frightening me! What become of the wenching rogues? I think, thou was swallow another one: I would laugh at that now yet, in a sort, lochery eate itself. I'll seek them.
SCENE VII.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

595

ERE that correction.—Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O, traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face, thou traitor,

And pay the life thou ow’st me for my horse.

Dio. Ha! art thou there?

Ajax. I’ll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed. Dio. He is my prize: I will not look upon’t.

Tro. Come both, you coggins* Greeks: have at yo’ both.

[Exeunt fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea, Troilus. O! well fought, my youngest brother.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now do I see thee. Ha!—Have at thee, Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.

Be happy that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriended thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune.

[Exit.

Hect. Fare thee well.

I would have been much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother!

Re-enter Troilus.

Tro. Ajax hath ta’en Æneas: shall it be?

No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him: I’ll be taken too,
Or bring him off.—Fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day.

[Exit.

Enter one in goodly Armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek: thou art a goodly mark.

No! wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
I’ll frash* it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I’ll be master of it.—Wilt thou not, beast, abide?
Why then, fly on, I’ll hunt thee for thy hide.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons; Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel: Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath; And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fittest manner execute your aims’. Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye.— It is decreed—Hector the great must die.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—The Same.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting: then, Thersites.

Ther. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it.
Now, bull! now, dog! ‘Loo, Paris, ’loo! now, my double-henned sparrow! ’loo, Paris, ’loo! The bull has the game:—ware horns, ho!—

[Exeunt Paris and Menelaws.

Enter Margarellon.

Mar. Turn, slay, and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Mar. A bastard son of Priam’s.

Ther. I am a bastard too. I love bastards; I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel’s most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment. Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward!—

[Exeunt.
SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Hector.

Hec. Most putrid core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hast cast thy life.
Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath:
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!
[Puts off his Helmet, and lays down his Sword.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Ach. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the vail and darkening of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hec. I am unarmed: forego this vantage, Greece.

Ach. Strike, fellows, strike! this is the man I seek.

[HECTOR IS SLAIN.

So, lion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down;
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons; and ery you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[A Retreat sounded.

Hark! a retire upon our Grecian part:

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Ach. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler-like, the armies separates.
My half-sup'd sword, that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.

[Sheathes his Sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;
Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

[Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Same.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?

Nest. Peace, drums!

[Achilles.

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Ajax. If it be so, yet braggers let it be:
Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along.—Let one be sent
To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—
If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp war are ended.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Enéas and Trojan Forces.

Ené. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field.
Never go home: here starve we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector?—The gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead: and at the murderer's horse's tail
In beastly sort dragged through the shamefull field.—

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!
Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!
I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destructions on!

Ené. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so
I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all immience, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?
Let him, that will a screech-owl eye be call'd,
Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:
There is a word will Priam turn to stone,
Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,
Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,
Scare Troy out of itself. But, march away:
Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet.—You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titian rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you!—And, thou great-sir, coward
No space of earth shall render our two hates:
I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy's thoughts.—
Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exeunt Enéas and Trojan forces.

As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Pandarus.

Pan. But hear you, hear you! Tro. Hence, brothel-lackey! ignomy and shame Pursue thy life, and live away with thy name!

[Exit Troilus.

Pan. A goodly medicine for mine aching bones!

[Exit Pandarus.

[Left alone, let him say this by way of Epilogue! world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised.
O, traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a work, and how ill required! why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?—Let me see.

"Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey, and his sting;
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail."

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloth.
As many as be hold of Pandar's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall;
Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made
It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some gallooned goose of Winchester would him.
Till then I'll swear, and seek about for eases;
And at that time bequeath you my diseases.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a Company of mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any farther, hear me speak.
All. Speak, speak.
1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to famish?
All. Resolved, resolved.
1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.
All. We know 't, we know 't.
1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is 't a verdict?
All. No more talking on 't; let it be done. Away, away!
2 Cit. One word, good citizens.—
1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patri- cians good. What authority surfeits on, would relieve us: if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think, we are too dear: the lean- ness that afflicts us, the abjectness of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our suffer- ance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes: for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.
2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?
All. Against him first: he's a very dog to the com- morality.
2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?
1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.
2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.
1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-considered men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and partly to be proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

[Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side of the city is risen: why stay we prating here? to the Capitol!
All. Come, come.
1 Cit. Soft! who comes here?
Enter MENENIUS AGrippa.
2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.
1 Cit. He's one honest enough: would, all the rest were so!
Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you
With hats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.
2 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate: they have had inking this forenight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths: they shall know, we have strong arms too.
Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,
Will you undo yourselves?
2 Cit. We cannot, sir; we are undone already.
Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care
Have the patriarcins of you. For your waste,
Your suffering in this deearth, you may as well
Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them
Against the Roman state; whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand orbs
Of more strong link saunter, than can ever
Appear in your impediment. For the deearth,
The gods, not the patriarcins, make it; and
Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack!
You are transported by calamity.
Thither where more attends you; and you slander
The helms of the state, who care for you like fathers,
When you curse them as enemies.

* object: in f. e. * All: in false.
2 Cit. Care for us?—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,
Or be accused of folly. I shall tell you
A nombre of one, you have heard it; but, since it serves my purpose, I will venture to scale it't a little more.

2 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir; yet you must not think To fob off our disgraces with a tale; But, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:—
The belly lik'd it just so; it did remain.
The idler of the body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite, and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answered.—

2 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile, which never came from the lung, but even thus (For, look on, you may make the belly smile, As well as speak) it tauntingly replied
To the discontented members, the mutinous parts
That envied his reception; even so most fitly
As you malign our senators, for that
They are not such as you.

2 Cit. Your belly's answer? What!
The kingly crowned head, the vigilant eye,
The councillor heart, the arm our soldier,
Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,
With other ministers and petty helps
In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then?

2 Cit. 'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then?

2 Cit. Should by the corruptant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sink of the body,—

Men. Well, what then?

2 Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,
What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you,
If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little)
Patience a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

2 Cit. Ye' are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend;
Your most grave belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:—
"True is it, my incorporate friends," quoth he,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the store-house, and the shop
Of the whole body: but if you do remember,
I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart, the senate, brain; and
And through the ranks and offices of man:
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency
Whereby they live. And though that all at once,
You, my good friends," this says the belly, mark me.—

2 Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. "Though all at once cannot
See what I do deliver out to each,
Yet I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flour of all,
And leave me but the bran." What say you to't?

2 Cit. It was an answer. How apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,
And you the mutinous members: for examine
Their counsels, and their cares; digest things rightly,
Touching the waal o' the common, you shall find,
No publick man, to which you receive,
But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,
And no way from yourselves.—What do you think, You, the great toe of this assembly?—

2 Cit. I the great toe? Why the great toe?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,
Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first to win some vantage.—
But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
And her rates are at the point of battle;
The one side must have bale.—Hail, noble Marcus! Enter Caius Marcius.

Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissenting rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs?

2 Cit. We have ever your good will.

Mar. He that will give good words to ye, will fare
Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you, That like nor peace, nor war? the one affrightes you.
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you bards;
Where foxes, geese: you are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is
To make him worthy, whose offence suddens him,
And curse that justice did it. Who deserves graces,
Deserves your hate; and your affections are
A sick man's appetite, who desires those that
Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours swims with fins of lead.
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust ye!
With every minute you do change your mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. What's the more?
That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senator, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on each another?—What's their seeking?
Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof, they say,
The city is well stord.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say they'll sit by the fire, and presume to know
What's done i' the Capitol; who's like to rise,
Who thrives, and who declines; side factions, and giv
Conjectural marriages; making parties strong,
And feebling such as stand not in their liking.
Below, their cobbled shoes. They say, there's guns Enough?
Would the nobility lay aside their ruth,
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are all most thoroughly persuaded;
For though abundantly they lack disposition,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,
SCENE II.

CORIOLANUS.

599

What says the other troop?—

Mar.— They are dissolved. Hang 'em!

They said, they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs.—

That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat;

That meat was made for mouths; that the gods sent

Corn for the rich men only.—With these shreds

They vented their complaining; which being answer'd,

And a petition granted them, a strange one,

To break the heart of generosity,

And make bold power look pale) they threw their caps

As they would hang them on the horns o' the moon,

Shouting their exultation.

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wisdoms,

Of their own choice: one's Junius Brutus,

Sicinius Velutus, and I know not—Sedecus!

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,

Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time

Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes

For inscription's arguing.

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go; get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where's Caius Marius?

Mar. Here. What's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volscies are in arms.

Mar. I am glad on 't: then, we shall have means to vent

Our musty superfluity.—See, our best elders.

Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators;

Junius Brutus, and Sicinius Velutus.

1 Sen. Marius, 'tis true that you have lately told us;

The Volscies are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader,

Tullius Aufidius, that will put you to 't.

I sin, envying his nobility,

And, were it anything but what I am,

Would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.

Mar. Were half to half the world by 'thers, and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make

Only my wars with him: he is a lion

That I am proud to hunt.

1 Sen. Then, worthy Marius,

Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;

And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou

Shalt see me once more strike at Tullius' face.

What! art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tull. No, Caius Marius;

I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other,

Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred! 1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I know,

Our greatest friends attend us.

Tull. Lead you on:

Follow, Cominius; we must follow you.

Right worthy your priority.

Com. Noble Marius! 1 Sen. Hence! To your homes! be gone.

[To the Citizens.]

Mar. Nay, let them follow.

The Volscies have much corn: take these rats thither,

To gnaw their garners.—Worshipful matrons,

Your value pools well forth: pray, follow.

[Exeunt Senators, Com. Mar. Trt. and Menen.]

Citizens steal away.

Let us alone to guard Corioli:
If they set down before's, for the remove Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find They've not prepar'd for us.

Aur. O! doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more:
Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'T is sworn between us, we shall ever strike
Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!
Aur. And keep your honours safe!
1 Sen. Farewell.
2 Sen. Farewell.
All. Farewell.  [Exeunt.

Enter Volumnia, and Virgilia. They sit down on two love stools, and ses.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort. If my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in theembracings of his bed, where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way; when, for a day of king’s entertainise, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renowned made it not stir—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam? how then?

Vol. Then, his good report should have been my son: I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely:—had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. ‘Beshrew you, give me leave to retire myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hear hither your husband’s drum,
See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair;
As children from a bear the Volscete scaring him:
Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,— “Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear,
Though you were born in Rome.” His bloody brow
With his mail’d hand then wiping, forth he goes,
Like to a harvest-man, that’s task’d to mow
Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow? O, Jupiter! no blood.

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man,
Than girt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look’d not lovelier
Than Hector’s forehead, when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. 1—Tell Valeria,
We are fit to bid her welcome.

Vir. Heavens-bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He ’ll beat Aufidius’ head below his knee,
And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with Valeria and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Vol. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, is a good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master.

Val. O my word, the father’s son ’ll swear, ’tis a very pretty boy. O my truth, I looked upon him o’
Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes; and o’ again; caught it again: or whether his fall cured him, or how ’t was, he did so set his teeth, and tear it! O! I warrant, how he mammocked it!

Vol. One of his father’s moods.

Val. Indeed Ia’, ’tis a noble child.

Vir. A crackt, madam.

Vol. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Vol. Not out of doors?

Val. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not see the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Vol. Fie! you confine yourself most unreasonably!
Come; you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. ’Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Vol. You would be another Penelope; yet, they all the year she spun in Ulysses’ absence did but sit Ithaca full of moths. Come! I would, your camera were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vol. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I was not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I’ll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O! good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you, there are news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it’s true: I heard a senator speak so.
Thus it is. —The Volscaces have an army forth, agas whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Larcius are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doc currently prevail, and to make it brief wars.
Though our home was a mine honour; and so, I pray you.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereaft.

Vol. Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will displease our better mirth.

Val. In truth, I think, she would.—Pare you with then. —Come, good sweet lady.—Pr’ythee, Virginius, turn thy solemnness out o’ door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not
I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well then, farewells.  [Exeunt
SCENE IV.—Before Coriolanus.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers, and Soldiers.

MAR. Yonder comes news:—a wager, they have met.
LART. My horse to yours, no.
MAR. 'Tis done.

LART. Agreed.

MAR. Enter a Messenger.

MESS. Say, has our general met the enemy?
MARR. They lie in view, but have not spoken as yet.
LART. So, the good horse is mine.
MAR. I'll buy him of you.
LART. No, I'll not sell, nor give him: lend you him I will,
For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.
MAR. How far off lie these armies?
MESS. Within this mile and half.
MAR. Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.
Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work,
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy blast.
A Parley sounded. Enter, on the Walls, two Senators, and others.

TULLUS AUFIDIUS. Is he within your walls?

SEN. No, nor a man that fears you less than he,
That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums
Are bringing forth our youth: we'll break our walls,
Rather than they shall pound up us. Our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;
They'll open of themselves. Hark you, far off;

[Alarum off after.

There is Aufidius: list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

MAR. O! they are at it.
LART. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, ho! The Volscæ enter, and pass over the Stage.
MAR. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.
Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus:
They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my Ho that retires, I'll take him for a Volscæ, [fellows:
And he shall feel mine edge.

[Alarum. Enter Romans and Volscæ, fighting. The Romans are beaten back to their Trenches. Re-enter MARCIUS enraged.

MAR. All the contagion of the south light on you,
You shame of Rome! Unheard-of boils and plagues*
Plaster ye o'er, that you may be abler'd
Farther than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell!
All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale
With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge home,
Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe,
And make my wars on you. Look to 't: come on;
If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,
As they to us to trenches follow.

Another Alarum. The Volscæ and Romans re-enter, and the Fight is renewed. The Volscæ retire into Corioth, and MARCIUS follows them to the Gates.

So, now the gates are open:—now prove good seconds. 'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the Gates, and is shot in.

Act I

Scene I.

Coriolanus

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Thy news?

Com. The citizens of Corioli have issued, and given to Lucius and to Marcus battle: I saw our party to their trenches driven, and then I came away.

Mess. The charges of our friends:—ye, Roman gods, Lead their successes as we wish our own, That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering May give you thankful sacrifice!—

Enter Marcus.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth, Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their drums: How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour, And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volscians Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel Three or four miles about; else had I, sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter Marcus.

Com. Who's yonder?

That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!

He has the stamp of Marcus, and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor, More than I know the sound of Marcus' tongue From every meaner man.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others, But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you In arms as sound, as when I wo'd; in heart As merry, as when our nuptial day was done, And taper burn'd to bodward.

Com. Flower of warriors, How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees: Condemning some to death, and some to exile; Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other; How in Corioli, in the chase of Rome, Even like a fawning greyhound in the leach, To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave, Which told me they had beat you to your trenches? Where is he—Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone, He did inform the truth: but for our gentlemen, The common file. (A plague!—Tribunes for them?) The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think it. Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field? If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcus, we have at disadvantage fought, And did retire to win our purposes.

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on which side They have plan'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcus, Those bands i' the wayward are the Antiates, Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius, Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I beseech you,

As a model, I will continue the rest of the document.

By all the battles wherein we have fought, By the blood we have shed together, by the vows We have made to endure friends, that you directly Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiates; And that you not delay the present, but, Filling the air with swords advance'd and darts, We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish You were conducted to a gentle bath, And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking. Take your choice of those That best can aid your action

Mar. Those are they That most are willing.—If any such be here, (As it were sin to doubt) that love this painting Wherein you see me smeared: if any fear Lesser his person than an ill report; If any think brave death outweighs bad life, And that his country's dearer than himself; Let him, alone, or so many so minded, Wave thus, to express his disposition, And follow Marcus.

They all shout, and wave their swords; set him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.

*O me, alone! Make you a sword of me? If those shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volscians? None of you, but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius A shield as hard as his. A certain number, Though thanks to all, must I select from all: the rest Shall bear the business in some other fight, As cause will be obey'd. Please you, march before, And I shall quickly draw out my command, Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows: Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us.

Exeunt.

Scene VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

Titus Lartius, having set a Guard upon Corioli, going with Drum and Trumpet toward Cominius and Cus Marcus, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So; let the ports be guarded: keep your duties, As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch Those centurions to our aid: the rest will serve For a short holding: if we lose the field, We cannot keep the town.

Lieu. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.— Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.

Exeunt.

Scene VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarum. Enter Marcus and Aufidius.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate the Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike: Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor More than thy fame I envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first buds die the other's slave, And the gods doom him after! If I fly, Marcus, Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Taullus, Alone I fought in your Corioli walls, And made what work I pleas'd. 'Tis not my blood. Wherein thou seest me mask'd: for thy revenge,
Scenes I

Wrench up thy power to the highest.

As

Were thou the Hector,
That was the whip of thy brawg’d progeny,
Thou shouldst not escape me here.

[They fight, and certain Vocasses come to the aid of Aulidius.

Obvious, and not valiant—you have shun’d me
In thy condemned seconds.

[Exeunt fighting, all driven in by MARCUS.

Scene IX.

The Roman Camp.

A Retreat sounded. Flourish. Enter at or side, Cominius, and Romans; at the other side, Marcus, with his Arm in a Scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o’er this thy day’s work, Thou’lt not believe thy deeds; but I’ll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
I’ the end, admire; where ladies shall be frightened,
And gladly quake’d, hear more; where the dull Tribunes,
That with the fusty plebeians hate thine honours,
Shall say, against their hearts—

We thank the gods our Rome hath such a soldier!—
Let’s not shun to a muse of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius with his Power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparisons—
Hast thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done,
As you have done; that’s what I can; induc’d
As you have been; that’s for my country:
He that has but effected his good will
O’erata’en mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving: Rome must know
The value of her own: ’t were a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praise vouch’d,
Would seem but modest. Therefore, I beseech you,
A sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done, before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember’d.

Com. Should they not,
Veil might they faster ’gainst ingratitude,
And tend themselves with death. Of all the horses,
Whereof we have ta’en good, and good store of) all
Be treasure, in this field achiev’d and city;
Ve reader you the tenth: to be ta’en forth,
Before the common distribution,
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general; at Cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
Have beheld the doing.

[Long flourish. They all cry, Marcus! Marcus! Cast up their Cops and Lances: Cominius and Lartis stand bare.

Mar. May these same instruments, which you profane,
Ever sound more: when drums and trumpets shall
The field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Lade all of false-fac’d soothing;
Then steel grows soft as the parasite’s silk,
Stil’ be made a covering for the wars.

No more, I say. For that I have not wash’d
My nose that bled, or foil’d some debile wretch,
Which without note here’s many else have done,
You shout me forth.

In acclamations hyperbolical:
As if I loved my little should be dieted
In praises sau’d with lies.

Com. Too modest are you:
More cruel to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly. By your patience,
If ‘gainst yourself you be incense’d, we’ll put you
(Not one that means his proper harm) in manacles,
Then reason safely with you. Therefore, be it known,
As to us, to all the world, that Titus Marcus
Wears this war’s garland: in token of the which
My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging: and, from this time,
For what he did before Coriolanus, call him,
With all thy applause and clamour of the host,
Caicus Marcus Coriolanus—
Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.

All. Caicus Marcus Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash.

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: howbeit, I thank you—
I mean to stride your steed; and, at all times,
To undergaze your good addition
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent;
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success. You, Titus Lartius,
Must to Coriolan back: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I, that now
Refuse’d most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: ’t is yours.—What is ’t?

Cor. ’Tis sometime lay, here in Coriolanus,
A poor man’s house; he us’d me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Aulidius was within my view,
And wrath o’erwhelm’d my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well-begg’d!

Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcus, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter, forget:—
I am weary; yea, my memory is tir’d.—
Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent.
The blood upon your visage dries; ’t is time
It should be look’d to. Come.

Scene X. The Camp of the Vocasses.

A Flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Aulidius, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Aul. The town is ta’en.

Sold. ’T will be deliver’d back on good condition.

Aul. Condition!—
I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a Vocasse, be that I am.—Condition! What good condition can a treaty find
I’ the part that is at mercy?—Five times, Marcus, I have fought with thee: so often hast thou beat me,
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat.—By the elements,
If e'er again I meet me beard to beard,
He is mine, or I am his. Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in’t, it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I’ll potch at him some way,
Or wrath, or craft, may get him.
1 Sold. He’s the devil.
Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle. My valour’s poison’d.
With me, my suffering stain by him: for him
’T shall fly out of itself: nor asleep, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick; nor fame, nor Cap’tol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom against
My hate to Marcus. Where I find him, war it
At home, upon my brother’s guard, even there.
Against the hospitable canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in ‘t heart.—Go you to the city,
Learn, how ’t is held; and what they are, that must Be hostages for Rome.
1 Sold. Will not you go?
Auf. I am attended at the Cypress grove: I pray you,
(‘Tis south the city miles) bring me word thither
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may spar on my journey.
1 Sold. I shall, sir. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me, we shall have news to night.

Bru. Good, or bad?
Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcus.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, whom does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay; to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcus.

Bru. He’s a lamb, indeed, that base like a bear.

Men. He’s a bear, indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcus poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He’s poor in no one fault, but stor’d with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boastage.

Men. This is strange now. Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o’ the right-hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride low.—Will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir; well.

Men. Why, ’tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience:
give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcus for being proud?

Bru. We do it not all, says.

Men. I know, you can do very little alone; for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O! that you could turn your eyes towards the naps of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O, that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (alias, fools)
as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough, too.

Men. I am known to be a humonous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine, without a drop of allaying Tiber in ’t said to be something imperfect favouring the thirst complaint: haisty, and tinder-in upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than with the forehead of its morning. What I think I utter, and spend my mules in my breath. Meeting two such wals-men as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurguses) if the drink
we give me touch my palate adversely, I make a cross face at it. I cannot say, your worshipes have deliver the matter well, when I find the are in compound the major part of your syllables; and though I mean content to bear with those that say you are reveal grave men, yet they lie deadly, that tell you, you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my mon-coco, follows it, that I am known well enough.

What harm can your bison conquesties glean of this character, if I be known well enough, too.

Bru. Come, sir, come; we make you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselfs, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves capluge: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in heving a cause between an orange wife and a forestage, and then adjourn the controversy of three-pence second day of audience.—When you are hatched mater between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mam set up the bloody flag against all patience, and, in s suing for a chamber pot, dismiss the controversy ple ing’, the more entangled by your hearing: all the pret you make in their case is calling both the pot nives. You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary back in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if we shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you.

When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not yet
the wagging of your beards; and your beards do not so honourable a grave as to stuff a butcher’s cuss or to be entombed in an ass’s pack-saddle. You must be saying, Marcus is proud; who, in a key estimation, is worth all your predecessors since De-lium, though, peradventure, some of the best of them hereditary hangmen. Good den to your worshipes or of your conversation would infect my brain, being the scorns of the beastly plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you. [BRUTUS AND SICINIUS STAND BY.

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, VALEARIUM.

Men. How now, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the most

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!
Cor. No more of this; it does offend my heart:
Pray now, no more.
Com. Look, sir, your mother.—
Cor. O!
You have, I know, petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity.
[Flourish.
Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up;
My gentle Marius, worthy Caius, and
By deed-achieving honour newly nam'd,
What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee?
But O! thy wife—
Cor. My gracious silence, hail! [Rising.
Wouldst thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home,
That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah! my dear,

And mothers that lack sons.

And welcome, general—and you are welcome all.
Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep,
And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy. Welcome!
A curse begin at very root in heart,
That is not glad to see thee!—You are three,
That Rome should dote on; yet, by the faith of men,
We have some old crab-trees here at home, that will not
Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors!
We call a nettle, but a nettle; and
The faults of fools, but folly.
Com. Ever right.
Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.
Her. Give way there, and go on.
Cor. Your hand,—and yours.

Ent. In our own house I do shade my head,
The good patricians must be visited;
From whom I have receiv'd, not only greetings,
But with them charge of honours.
Vol. I have lived to see inherited my very wishes,
And the buildings of my fancy:
Only there's one thing wanting, which I doubt not,
But our Rome will cast upon thee.
Cor. Know, good mother,
I had rather be their servant in my way;
Than away with them in theirs.
Com. On, to the Capitol!
[Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before.
The Tribunes remain.
Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacles to see him: ye that prattling nurse,
Into a rapture* lets her baby cry
While she cheers* him: the kitchen maids* pins
Her richest lockram* 'bout her reechy* neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks, windows,
Are another'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges horn'd
With variable complexions, all agreeing
In earnestness to see him: seid-shown flames
Do presse among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames
Commit the white of women, and their Nicely-gaunted cheeks, to the wanton spoil

* Not in f.s. 1 is but emend. in f.s.; empeach'd. magistrates: in folio. 2 Not in f.s. 4 Not in s.a. 7 The dimin. * Mail or Mary—used as "wench." It also means a wench, a cloath. 7 A kind of cheap linens. 8 Smoky, dirty.
Of Phoebus' burning kisses: such a pather,
As if that whatsoever god who leads him,
Were sily crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden
I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours
From where he should begin, and end; but will Loe those he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not, the commoners, for whom we stand,
But they, upon their ancient malice, will Forget, with the least cause, these his new honours;
Which that he'll give them, make I as little question
As he is proud to do't.

Bru. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear 't the market-place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility;
Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'T is right.

Bru. It was his word. O! he would miss it, rather Than carry it but by the suit o' the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better,
Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Bru. 'T is most like, he will.

Sic. It shall be to him, then, at our good wills,
A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities, for an end.
We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them; that to his power he would Have made them mules, silence'd their pleaders, and Disproprietied their freedoms; holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Than camels in the war; who have their provand
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence
Shall touch the people, (whence time shall not want,
If he be put upon it; and that's as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep) will be his fire.
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What's the matter?
Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis thought,
That Marcus shall be consul. I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs, and handkerchiefs,
Upon him as he pass'd; the nobles bended,
As to Jove's statue, and the commons made
A shower, and thunder, with their caps, and shouts.
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions.

1 Off. Come, come; they are almost here. How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say; but 'tis thought of every on Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow; but he's vengean proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. 'Tis truth, there have been many great men that have flattered the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why;
they hate upon no better a ground. Therefore, for Corolanus neither to care whether they love or hate his manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he wad's indifferently twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him, and leaves nothing undone that may fully_discover them their opposites. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country, and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and conciliatory to the people, confounded without any farther deed to have them all into their estimation and report: but he hath planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess much, were kind of ingratitude and report otherwise were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him: he is a worthy man. What way, they are coming.

A Senator. Enter, with Lictors before them, COMMEN-the Consul, MENENIUS, CORIOLANUS, many other S-tors, SERVIIUS, and BRUTUS. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.

Men. Having determined the Volscians, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains.

As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To grow his noble service that hath thus stood for his country. Therefore, please you,
Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom
We meet here, both to thank, and to remember
With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius. Leave nothing out for length, and make us think,
Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. —Masters o' the people,
We do request your kindest ears; and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convened
Upon a pleasing treatise; and have hearts
Inclined to honour and advance
The tenure of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be prest to do, if he remember
A kinder value of the people, than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off:
I would you rather had been silent. Please you
To hear Cominius speak?

Brut. Most willingly;
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bed-fellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.

[Coriolanus rises, and offers to go away.

1 Sen. Sire, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have not done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon:
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

Brut. Sir, I hope,
My words dis-bench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir: yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not. But, your people,
I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.
Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

[Exit.]

Men. Masters of the people.

Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter,
That's thousand to one good one when you now see,
He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one on's ears to hear it.—Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be utter'd feebly:—it is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise 1 point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. He beat Acin,
An enemy pressed Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee. In that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field; and for his need
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus; he waxed like a sea;
And in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He hurl'd all swords of the garland. For this last,
Before and in Corioli, let me say,
I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fiers,
And by his rare example made the coward
Turn terror into sport. As weeds before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem: his sword, death's stamp,
Where it did mark, it took: from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tuned with dying cries. Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny, aildess came off;
And with a sudden re-inforcement struck
Corioli like a planet. Now all's his;
When by and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense: then, straight his doubled spirit
Re-quick'd what in flesh was fatigote,
And to the battle came he; where he did
Ilum recking o'er the lives of men, as if

'T were a perpetual spoil; and till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with pianting.

Men. Worthy man!
1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours
Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at;
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world: he covets less
Than misery itself would give, rewards
His deeds with doing them, and is content
To spend the time to end it.

Men. He's right noble:
Let him be called for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'er-leaf that custom: for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please you,
That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't.
Pray you, go fit you to the custom, and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Brut. Mark you that? [To Sicinius.

Cor. To brag unto them,—thus I did, and thus;
Show them th'unarching scars which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only.—

Men. Do not stand upon't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Odr purpose:—to them, and to our noble consul,
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!

[Flourish. Exeunt Senators.

Sic. You see how he intends to use the people.

Brut. You see what they perceive's intent! He will require them,
As if he did condemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Cor. Come; we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know they do attend us.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them: so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingrateful were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which we, being members, should make ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly, I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be to once to all the points of the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will: 'tis strongly wedged up in a block-head; but if it were at liberty, 't would, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where, being three parts melted away with rotten dew, the fourth would return, for conscience sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks;—you may, I say.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter; the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus and Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour. We are not to stay altogether, but to come by him, where he stands, by ones, by two, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore, follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. [Exit.

Men. O sir!—you are not right: have you not known
The worthiest men have done 't?

Cor. What must I say?—
I pray, sir,—Plague upon 't! I cannot bring
My tongue to such a pace.—Look, sir;—my wounds;
I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roared, and ran
For the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods! You must not speak of that: you must desire them
To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang 'em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men. You'll mar all: I'll leave you. Pray you, speak to them, I pray you,
In wholesome manner. [Exit.

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces, and keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace.

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir: tell us what hath brought you to 't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert? Ay, not Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir; 'twas never my desire yet,
To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the commonship?

1 Cit. The price is, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly?

Sirs, I pray, let me ha' t: I have wounds to show you,
Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, sir,
What say you?

2 Cit. You shall ha' t, worthy sir.

There is in all two worthy voices begg'd.

I have your alms: adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 't were to give again,—but 't is no matter.

[Exeunt the two Citizens.

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, yet you have been a rod to her friends: you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will not stand fainter my sworn brothers, the people, to earn a dear estimation of them: 'tis a condition they accent gentle; and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeited: that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desires. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend, and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not state your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and a trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily. [Exit.

Cor. Most sweet voices!—
Better it is to die, better to starve,
Than to give the hire which first we do deserve.

Why in this wasters' toge should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouches? Custom calls me to 't:
What custom wills, in all things should we do 't,
The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heap'd
For truth to o'er-pee.-Rather than feel it so,
Let the high office and the honour go
To one that would do thus.—I am half through:
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices.—

Your voices: for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
I have seen, and heard of: for your voices,
Have done many things, some less, some more.
Your voices; for indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

6 Cit. Therefore, let him be consul. The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people.

All. Amen, amen.

God save thee, noble consul! [Exit Citizens.

Cor. Worthy voices!
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en th' advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unselected.

Brut. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in free contempt,
When he did need your loves, and do you think,
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the rascalship of judgment?

Sic. Have you,
Ere now, denied the saker; and, now again,
Of him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your sued-for tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirmed: we may deny him yet.
2 Cit. And will deny him:
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.
1 Cit. Ay, twice five hundred, and their friends in a piece 'em.

Brut. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends
They have chose a consul that will from them live.
Their liberties: make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often barking, as therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election. Enforce his pride,
And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble wood,
How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd
(No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say, you chose him
More after our commandment, than as guided
By your own true affections; and that, your minds,
Pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do,
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul. Lay the fault on us.

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The noble house o' the Marcians: from whence came
That Ancus Marcius, Numia's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king.
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;
And Censorinus. darling of the people,
And noilly nam'd so, twice being censor,
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did command
To your remembrances; but you have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revokes
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had done 't,
(Harp on that still) but by our putting on;
And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so: almost all
Reptil in their election.

[Exit Citizens.]
ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Street.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius, Titus Lartius, Senators, and Patricians.

Cor. Tullius Aufidius, then, had made new head?

Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was, which caus'd

Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then, the Volscus stand but as at first;

Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road

Upon us again.

Com. They are sworn, lord consul, so,

That we shall hardly in our ages see

Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?

Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse

Against the Volscus, for they had so vilely

Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword;

That of all things upon the earth he hated

Your person most; that he would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might

Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish, I had a cause to seek him there,

To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home.

[To LARTIUS.

Enter Scinius and Brutus.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,

The tongues o' the common mouth. 1 do despise them,

For they do prank them in authority,

Against all noble sufferance.

Sc. Ha! what is that?

Br. It will be dangerous to go on: no farther.

Sc. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the commons?

Br. Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

Sen. Tribunes, give way: he shall to the market-place.

Br. The people are incens'd against him.

Sc. Stop, or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?—

Must these have voices, that can yield them now,

And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your offices?

You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpose'd thing, and grows by plot,

To curb the will of the nobility:

Suffer't, and live with such as cannot rule,

Nor ever will be rul'd.

1 Leper.
Where one part does disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance,—it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while.
To unstable slighthness. Purpose so barr’d, it follows,
Nothing is done to purpose: therefore, beseech you,
You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change on’t; that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physique
That’s sure of death without it, at once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue: let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it,
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For th’ ill which doth control it.
Bru. He has said enough.
Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.
Cor. Thou wretch! despite o’erwhelm thee! —
What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench. In a rebellion,
When what’s not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said, it must be meet,
And throw their power i’ the dust.
Bru. Manifest treason.
Sic. 1 This a consul? no.
Bru. The ædiles, ho!—Let him be apprehended.
Enter an ædile.
Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit ædile.] in whose name, myself
Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal. Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.
Cor. Hence, old goat!
Sen. We’ll surety him.
Cor. Aged sir, hands off.
Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments.
Sic. Help, ye citizens!
Re-enter the ædile, with others, and a Rabble of Citizens.
Men. On both sides more respect.
Sic. Here’s he, that would Take from you all your power.
Bru. Seize him, ædiles.
Cit. Down with him! down with him! [Several speak.
Sen. Weapons! weapons! weapons! weapons!
[They all bustle about Coriolanus.
Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what ho! —
Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!
Cit. Peace, peace, peace! stay, hold, peace!
Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath;
Confusion’s near: I cannot speak.—You, tribunes
To the people,—Coriolanus, patience: —
Speak, good Sicinius.
Sic. Hear me! people, peace!
Cit. Let’s hear our tribune.—Peace! Speak, speak, speak.
Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcius would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom late you have nam’d for consul.
Men. Pie, fie, fie!
This is the way to kindle, not to quench.
Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.
Sic. What is the city, but the people?
Cu. True;
The people are the city.
Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd
The people's magistrates.
Cit. You so remain.
Men. And so are like to do.
Com. That is the way to lay the city flat;
To bring the roof to the foundation,
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.
Sic. This deserves death.
Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,
Or let us lose it.—We do here pronounce,
Upon the part of the people, in whose power
We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy
Of present death.
Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him.
Bru. Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence Into destruction cast him.
Cit. Yield, Marcius, yield.
Men. Hear me one word.
Besseach you, tribunes, hear me but a word.
Edi. Peace, peace!
Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's friend,
And temperately proceed to what you would
Thus violently redress.
Bru. Sir, those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous
Where the disease is violent.—Lay hands upon him,
And bear him to the rock.
Cor. No; I'll die here. [Drawing his Sword.
There's some among you have beheld me fighting:
Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen;
Men. Down with that sword!—Tribunes, withdraw a while.
Bru. Lay hands upon him.
Men. Help Marcius, help,
You that be noble; help him, young and old!
Cit. Down with him! down with him!
[In this mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ediles, and the People, are beat in.
Men. Go, get you to your house: be gone, away!
All will be naught else.
Sen. Get you gone.
Com. Stand fast.
We have as many friends as enemies.
Men. Shall it be put to that?
1 Sen. The gods forbid!
I pray thee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.
Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,
You cannot tent yourself. Begone, 'beseach you.
Com. Come, sir, along with us.
Cor. I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd, not Romans, as they are not,
Though cal'd i' the porch o' the Capitol!
Men. Be gone;
Put not your worthy rage into your tongue:
One time will owe another.
Cor. On fair ground,
I could beat forty of them.
Men. I could myself
Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.
Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands
Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence,
Before the tag return, whose rage doth read
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear?
Men. Pray you, be gone.
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little: this must be patch'd
With cloth of any colour.
Com. Nay, come away.
[Sic is turned.
1 Pat. This man has mar'd his fortune,
Or Jove for 'a power to thunder. His heart's his mouth:
What his breast forcings, that his tongue must vest;
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [A noise within Here's a goodly work!
2 Pat. I would they were a-bed!
Men. I would they were in Tyber!—What, the vengeance,
Could be not speak them fair?
Re-enter Bautus and Sicinius, with the Rabble.
Sic. Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?
Men. You worthy tribunes,—
Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him farther trial
Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at nought.
1 Cit. He shall well know,
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.
Cit. He shall, sure on't.
Men. Sir, sir,—
Sic. Peace!—
Men. Do not cry havock, where you should but have
With modest warrant.
Sic. Sir, how comes 't, that you
Have help to make this rescue?
Men. Hear me speak—
As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults.—
Sic. Consul!—what consul?
Men. The consul Coriolanus.
Bru. He a consul!
Cit. No, no, no, no, no.
Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people
I may be heard, I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm,
Than so much loss of time.
Sic. Speak briefly then;
For we are peremptory to despatch
This viperous traitor. To eject him hence,
Were but one danger, and to keep him here,
Our certain death: therefore, it is decreed
He dies to-night.
Men. Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserving' children is enrolled
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural damp,
Should now eat up her own!
Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away.
Men. O! he's a limb, that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.
What has he done to Rome that's worthy death?
Killing our enemies? The blood he hath lost,
(Which, I dare vouch, is more than he hath,
CORIOLANUS.

By many an ounce) he dropp'd it for his country:
And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all, that do 't and suffer it,
A brand to th' end of the world.

Sir. This is clean kai
Brut. Merely arzy. When he did love his country,
It hon'ur'd him.
Men. The service of the foot,
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was.

Brut. We'll hear no more.—
Purse him to his house, and pluck him thence,
Let his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread farther.

Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unaccus'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Proceed by process;
Let parties (as he is below'd) break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Brut. If it were so—
Sir. What do ye talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Our Edicts smote? ourselves resisted?—Come!—
Men. Consider this: he has been bred if the wars
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bawdied language; meal and bran together
He swallows without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him in peace
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
In peace, to his utmost peril.

1 Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody, and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sir. Noble Menenius,
Be you then, as the people's officer.—
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Brut. Go not home.
Sir. Meet on the market-place. —We'll attend you there:
Where, if you bring not Marcus, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you.—
Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.] He must come,
In what is worst will follow.

1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. —A Room in CORIOLANUS's House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, and PATRICKIUS.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present me
Bash on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
On ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Beneath the beam of sight, yet will I still Stay them to this.

Pat. You do the noble.

Cor. I muse my mother
Drivers not approve me farther, who was wont
Call them woollen vassals; things created
To buy and sell with groats; to show bare heads
Congregation, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
Then one but of my substance stood up
To speak of peace, or war.

Enter VOLUMNIA. I talk of you:
Thy did you wish me milder? Would you have me

False to my nature? Rather say, I play
The man I am.

Vol. O, son, son, son! I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.

Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,
With striving less to be so: lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd,
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.

Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter MENENIUS, and SENATORS.

Men. Come, come; you have been too rough, something too rough:
You must return, and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray, be counsel'd.
I have a heart as little apt as yours
To brook control without the use of anger,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman!
Before he should thus stooop o' the heart, but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?
Men. Repent what you have spoke.
Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unreserv'd friends,
I' the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me,
In peace what each of them by th' other lose,
That they combine not there?

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, (which for your best ends
You adopt your policy) how is it less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war, since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you,
But with such words that are but rodes in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.—
I would assemble with my nature, where,
My fortunes and my friends at stake, requir'd
I should so in honour: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general lowness
How you canrown, than spend a fawn upon 'em,
CORIOLANUS.

ACT III.

For the inheritance of their love, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!—

Come, go with us: speak fair; you may salve so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I pray thee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretched it. (here be with them)
Thy knee busing the stones, (for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ear) waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now's humble as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling. Or say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power, and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours;
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pr'ythee now,
Go, and be rush'd; although I know, thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius.

Enter Cominius.

Com. I have been in the market-place; and, air, it is fit
You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calumnies, or by absence: all is in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think, 't will serve; if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will.—

Pr'ythee now, say you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarred secrete?
Must I with my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must hear? Well, I will do't:
Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dust should grind it,
And throw't against the wind.—To the market-place!
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son: as thou hast said,
My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't.

Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lulls asleep! The smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks; and school-boys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm's knees,
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't,
Lest I succeed to honour mine own truth,
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseless.

Vol. At thy choice, then:

To beg of thee it is my more dishonour,
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear

---

Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valianceness was mine, thou suck'dst it from me,
But owst' thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content: Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home believ'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going.
Commend me to my wife. I'll return consol'd,
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattering farther.

Vol. Do your will. [Exeunt

Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you: arm yourself!

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly:—pray you, let us go.
Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly. [Exeunt

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter Scinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home; that he affects Tyrannical power: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy* to the people;
And that the spoil got on the Antiques
Was ne'er distributed.

Enter an Edile.

What! will he come?

Ed. He's coming.

Bru. How accomplish'd!

Ed. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd,
Set down by the poll?

Ed. I have; 't is ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Ed. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither:
And when they hear me say, "It shall be so,
I' the right and strength o' the commons," be it either
For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them.
If I say, fine, cry "fine"? it the death, cry "death;"
Insisting on their old prerogative
And power I' the truth o' the cause.

Ed. I shall inform thee.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Ed. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hist
When we shall hap to give 't them.

Bru. Go; about it —

[Exit Edile.

Put him to choler straight. He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his mouth
Of contradiction: being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there, which looks
With us to break his neck.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius, Senators, and Patricians.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.
Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by the volume.—The honour’d gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among us!
Through our large temples with the shows of peace,
And not our streets with war!

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.

Si. Draw near, ye people.

Ed. List to your tribunes. Audience: peace! I say.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say,—Peace, ho!

Cor. Shall I be charg’d no farther than this present?
Must all determine here?

Si. I do demand,
If you submit to the people’s voices,
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov’d upon you?

Men. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens! he says, he is content.
The warlike service he has done, consider;
Think upon the wounds his body bears, which show
Like graves i’ the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briars;
Seams to move laughter only.

Men. Consider farther,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier. Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass’d for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour’d, that the very hour
You take it off again?

Si. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: ’t is true, I ought so.

Si. We charge you, that you have contriv’d to take
From Rome all season’d office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyranical:
For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! Traitor?

Men. Nay, temperately; your promise.

Cor. The fires i’ the lowest hell fold in the people!
Call me their traitor?—Thou injurious tribune,
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutched as many millions.
In thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Si. Mark you this, people?

Cor. To the rock! to the rock with him!

Si. Peace! We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves th’ extreme death.

Bru. But since he hath Serv’d well for Rome,—

Cor. What do you prize of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You?

Men. Is this

The promise that you made your mother?

Cor. I pray you,—

Know, I’ll know no farther.

Cor. Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word,
Nor check my carriage! for what they can give,
To have’t with saying, good morrow.

Si. For that he has
(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power; as now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it; in the name o’ the people,
And in the power of us, the tribunes, we,
Evep from this instant, banish him our city,
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates. ’t he people’s name,
I say, it shall be so.

C it. It shall be so; it shall be so: let him away
He’s banish’d, and it shall be so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends;—

Si. He’s sentence’d: no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak
I have been consul, and can show for Rome,
Her enemies’ marks upon me. I do love
My country’s good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife’s estimate, her womb’s increase,
And treasure of my loins; then, if I would Speak that—

Si. We know your drift. Speak what?

Bru. There’s no more to be said: but he is banish’d,
As enemy to the people, and his country.
It shall be so.

C it. It shall be so: it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate
As reek o’ the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty.
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defendants; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels)
Making not reserve of yourselves,
(Still your own foes) deliver you as most Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city: thus I turn my back.

There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINUS, MENENIUS,
Senators, and Patricians.

Ed. The people’s enemy is gone, is gone!

Cor. Our enemy is banish’d! he is gone! Hoo! hoo.

[The People shout, and throw up their Caps.

Si. Go, see him out at gates; and follow him,
As he hath follow’d you, with all despite:
Give him deserv’d vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

C it. Come, come; let us see him out at gates: come.—
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come. [Exeunt.

The stage is cleared."

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MECENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell.—The beast
With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Sail'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle minded' craves
A noble cunning. You were us'd to load me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that condn't them.

VIR. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I pr'ythee, woman.—

Vol. Now, the pestilent strike all trades in Rome;
And occupations perish!—

Cor. What, what, what! I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you 'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius,
Droop not: adieu.—Farewell, my wife! my mother! I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Mecenius,
Thy tears are sadder than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hardening spectacles; tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at 'em.—My mother, you wot well,
My hazards still have been your solace; and Believe 't not lightly, though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his ten
Makes fear'd; and, talk'd of more than seen, your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautious baits and practice.

Vol. My first son,
Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: determine on some course
More than a wild exposure* to each chance,
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods! Com. I'll follow thee a month: devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send
O'er the vast world to seek a single man,
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well:
Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the wars' surlets to go rove with one
That's yet unbruist'd: bring me but out at gate.—
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear.—Come; let's not weep.—

If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand.—

Come.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and an Exit.

Sic. Bid them all home: he's gone, and we'll be Farther.—
The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them home:
Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home.

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and MECENIUS.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Bru. Why?

Sic. They say, she's mad.

Bru. They have ta'en note of us: keep on your way
Vol. O! y'are well met. The hoarded plague o' the Requite your love!—
Men. Peace, peace! be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear—
Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone?

VIR. You shall stay too. [To Sicini.] I would, I lost the power
To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame?—Not but this fool.
Was not a man my father? Hadst thou fox's ship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O, blessed heavens!

Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise words,
And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what—yet go:
Nay, but thou shalt stay too.—I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?

VIR. What then?

He'd make an end of thy pestery.

Vol. Bastards, and all.—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!
Men. Come, come: peace!

Sic. I would he had continued to his country,
As he began; and not unkit himself
The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had.

Vol. Would he had. 'Twas you inca'd the rabble
Cure, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries, which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:
You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear this—
As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome, so far my son.
This lady's husband here, this, do you see, Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all. Brr. Well, well; we'll leave you. Scc. Why stay we to be baited With one that wants her wits? Vol. Take my prayers with you.—[Exeunt Tribunes. I would the gods had nothing else to do, But to confirm my curses. Could I meet 'em But once a day, it would unclose my heart Of what lies heavy to't. Men. You have told them home, And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with me? Vol. Anger's my meat: I sup upon myself, And so shall starve with feeding.—Come, let's go. Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do, In anger. Juno-like Come, come, come. Men. Fee, fie, fie! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Highway between Rome and Antium. Enter a Roman and a Volscus, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir; and you know me. Your name, I think, is Adrian. Vol. It is so, sir; truly, I have forgot you. Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em. Know you me yet? Vol. Nicanor? No. Rom. The same, sir. Vol. You had more heard, when I last saw you; but your favour is well approved by your tongue. What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there: you have well saved me a day's journey. We have been in Rome strange insurrection: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles. Vol. Hadthath! Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again; for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy, Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out. Vol. Coriolanus banished? Rom. Banished, sir. Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor. Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullius Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great oppressor, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country. Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will mercilously accompany you home. Rom. I shall between this and supper tell you most strange things from Rome, all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you? Vol. A most royal one; the centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainments, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company. Vol. You take my part from me, sir: I have the most cause to be glad of yours. Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium.—City, 'Tis I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars Have I heard groan, and drop: then, know me not, Least that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones, Enter a Citizen. In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir. Cit. And you. Cor. Direct me, if it be thy will, Where great Aufidius lies. Is he in Antium? Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night. Cor. Which is his house, beseech you? Cit. This, here before you. Cor. Thank you, sir. Farewell. [Exit Citizen. O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn, Whose double bcons seem to wear one heart, Whose house's, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise, Are still together, who twin, as 't were, in love Unseparable, shall within this hour, On a dissension of a dot, break out To bitterest enmity: so, fallest foes, Whose passions and whose plots have broken their sleep To take the one the other, by some chance. Some trick not worth an egg shall grow dear friends, And interjoin their issues. So with me:— My birth-place hate I, and my love 'a house This enemy town. I'll enter: if he slay me, He does fair justice; if he give me way, I'll do his country service. [Exit

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit Enter a second Servant. 2 Serv. Where's Cetus? My master calls for him.— Cetus! [Exit Enter Coriolanus. Cor. A goodly house. The feast smells well; but appear not like a guest. Re-enter the first Servant. 1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: pray, go to the door. Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, in being Coriolanus. Re-enter second Servant. 2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Cor. Away! 2 Serv. Away? Get you away. Cor. Now, 'tis art troublesome. 2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon. Enter a third Servant: the first meets him. 3 Serv. What fellow's this? 1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house. Pr'ythee, call my master to him. 3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house. Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth. 3 Serv. What are you? Cor. A gentleman.
3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.
Cor. True, so I am.
3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here’s no place for you. Pray you, avoid: come.
Cor. Follow your function; go, and betten on cold bits. [Pushes him away.
3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr’ythee, tell my master what a strange guess he has here.
2 Serv. And I shall.
3 Serv. Where dwell’st thou?
Cor. Under the canopy.
3 Serv. Under the canopy?
Cor. Ay.
3 Serv. Where’s that?
Cor. I’ the city of kites and crows.
3 Serv. I’ the city of kites and crows?—What an ass it is!—Then, thou dostwell with daws too?
Cor. No: I serve not thy master.
3 Serv. How, air! Do you meddle with my master?
Cor. Ay; ’tis a honester service than to meddle with thy mistresse.
Thou pratt’st, and pratt’st; serve with thy trenched. Hone! [Beats him.

Enter Aufidius and the second Servant.

Auf. Where is this fellow?
2 Serv. Here, sir. I ’d have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.
Auf. Whence com’st thou? what wouldst thou? Thy name?
Why speak’st not? Speak, man: what’s thy name?
Cor. If, Tullius, [Unmuffling.
Not yet thou know’st me, and seeing me, dost not think me for the man I am, necessity Commands me name myself.
Auf. What is thy name? [Servants retire.
Cor. A name unmusical to the Volscian’s ears, and harsh in sound to thine.
Auf. Say, what’s thy name?
Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face bears a command in ’t: though thy tackle’s torn, thou show’st a noble vessel. What’s thy name?
Cor. Prepare thy brow torown. Know’st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not.—Thy name?
Cor. My name is Caius Marcus, who hath done To thee particularly, and to all the Volscis Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may My surname, Coriolanus. The painful service, The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood shed for my thankless country, are required But with that surname; a good memory, and witness of the malice and displeasure Which thou shouldst bear me. Only that name remains:
The cruelty and envy of the people, permitted by our dastard nobles. who Have all forsook me, hath devour’d the rest; And suffered me by the voice of slaves to be What had left of Rome. Now, this extremity Hath brought me to thy hearth: not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if I had fear’d death, of all the men i’ the world I should have voided thee; but in mere spite, To be full quit of those my banishers, Stand I before thee here. Then, if thou hast A heart of wreak in thee, that will revenge Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those mains Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight, And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,

That my revengeful services may prove As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my country’s country with the spleen Of all the under fiends. But if so be Thou dar’st not this, and that to prove more fortunes Thou art tir’d; then, in a word, I also am Longer to live most weary, and present My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice: Which not to out would show thee a fool, Since I have ever follow’d thee with hate. Drawn tune of blood out of thy country’s breast, And cannot live but to thy shame, unless It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcus, Marcus! Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter Should from yond’ cloud speak divine things, And say, ’T is true;’ I’d not believe them more Than thee, all noble Marcus.—Let me twine Mine arms about that body, where against My grained ask an hundred times hath broke, And scar’d the moon with splinters! Here I dip! The anvil of my sword; and do contest As hotly and as nobly with thy love, As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Know thou first, I lov’d the maid I married: never man Sighed truer breath: but that I see thee here, Thou noble thing, more dances my rapt heart, Than when I first my wedded mistresse saw Betride my threshold. Why, thou Mars, I tell thee, We have a power on foot; and I had purpose Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn, Or lose mine arm for ’t. Thou hast beat me out Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters ’twixt thyself and me: We have been down together in my sleep, Unbuckling helms, dating each other’s throat, And wak’d half dead with nothing. Worthy Mars Had we no other quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish’d, we must muster all From twelve to seventy; and, pouring war Into the bowls of ungrateful Rome, Like a bold flood o’erbear.* O! come: go in, And take our friendly senators by the hands, Who now are here, taking their leaves of me, Who am prepar’d against your territories, Though not for Rome itself.
Cor. You bless me, gods!

Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt The leading of thine own revenges, take Th’ one half of my commission; and set down— As best thou art experienc’d, since thou know’st Thy country’s strength and weakness,—thine own Whether to knock against the gates of Rome, Or rudely visit them in parts remote, To fright them, ere destroy. But come in: Let me commend thee first to those, that shall Say, ‘yes,’ to thy desires. A thousand welcomes! And more than a hundred o’er and above them! Yet, Marcus, that was much. Your hand: most we come! [Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.

thing in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—
I cannot tell how to term it.
1 Serv. He had so; looking as it were,—Would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.
2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn. He is simply the rarest man i' the world.
1 Serv. I think, he is; but a greater soldier than he,
you wot one.
2 Serv. Who? my master?
1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.
2 Serv. Worth six on him.
1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.
2 Serv. 'Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.
1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.
Re-enter third Servant.
3 Serv. O, slaves! I can tell you news, news, you ras-
3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations; I had as lieve be a condemned man.
1. 2. Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?
3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thrack our general.—Caius Marius.
1 Serv. Why do you say thrack our general?
3 Serv. I do not say, thrack our general; but he was always good enough for him.
2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.
1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on 't: before Coriolanus, he scotched him and notched him like a carbondao².
2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled² and eaten him too.
1 Serv. But, more of thy news?
3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o' the table; no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand baird before him. Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with 's hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday, for the other has half by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowle² the porter of Rome gates by the ears. He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage polled².
2 Serv. And he's as like to do 't, as any man I can imagine.
3 Serv. Do 't! he will do 't; for, (look you, sir,) he has as many friends as enemies; which friends, sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, sir,) now themselves (as we term it) his friends, whilst he's in dejectitude².
1 Serv. Dejectitude² I what's that?
3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like coxins after rain, and revel all with him.
1 Serv. But when goes this forward?
3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 't is, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.
2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed boilad-makers.
1 Serv. Let me have war, say I: it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's spiritely, waking, audible, and full of vaunt.² Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, mulled, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bas
tard children, than wars a destroyer of men.
2 Serv. 'T is so: and as wars in some sort may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckoldes.
1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.
3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians.—They are rising, they are rising.
Al. In, in, in, in. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;
His remedies are tamed by the present peace
And quietness o' the people, which before
Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends
Blush that the world goes well; who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold
Dissentious numbers pester ing streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Enter MENENIUS.

Men. Bru. We stood to 't in good time. Is this Menenius?
Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he. O! he is grown most kind
Of late.—Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!
Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd,
But with his friends: the common-wealth doth stand,
And so would do, were he more angry at it.
Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if
He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?
Men. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his wife
Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good-den, our neighbours.

Bru. Good-den to you all, good-den to you all
1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,
Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive.

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours. We wish'd Corio-

Laius had lov'd you as we did.

[Exeunt.

Sic. Now the gods keep you!

Enter two or three Citizens.

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Citizens.

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion.

Bru. Caius Marius was
A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'orome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,— And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation,
If he had gone forth consail, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it; and Rome
Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Edile.

Ed. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports, the Volsces with two several powers
Are enter'd in the Roman territories;

¹ A piece of meat cut and hacked for broiling. ² boiled: in folio. ³ Pull out. ⁴ Cleared. ⁵ Direct: in f. e. ⁶ Vest: in f.
And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcus' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world:
Which were in sheik'd when Marcus stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you
Of Marcus?

Bry. Go see this rumourer whipp'd.—It cannot be,
The Volsoos dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!
We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Lest you shall chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell me now:
I know, this cannot be.

Brut. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going
All to the senate house: some news is come in,
That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave.
Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes,—his raising;
Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?
Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Marcus,
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome,
And vows revenge as spacious, as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Brut. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish
God! Marcus home again.

Sic. The very trick on't.

Men. This is unlikely:
He and Aufidius can no more alone,*
Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the senate.
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcus,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took
What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. O! you have made good work.

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and
To melt the city leads upon your pates:
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses;—

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burned in their cement; and Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news?—
You have made fair work, I fear me.—Pray, your news?
If Marcus should be join'd with Volscians,—

Com. If! He is their god: he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him

Against us brats, with no less confidence
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work
You, and your apron-men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair war
But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look at
Before you find it other. All the legions
Do smilingly revolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame him
Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?
The tribunes cannot do't for shame; the people
Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf
Docs of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, "Be good to Rome," they charg'd him, as
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true:
If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, "Beseek you, cease."—You have made a
You, and your handy' crafts have crafted fair. [back
Com. You have brood
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

Fri. Say not, we brought it.

Men. How! was it we? We lov'd him; but the beasts
And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But I fear
They'll roar him in again. Tullus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer. Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters.
And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasy caps, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head,
Which will not prove a whip: as many coaxors,
As you threw caps up, will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices." 'Tis no matter:
If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

Cit. Faith, we bear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said, banish him, I said, 't was pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.

3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, it was very many of us. That we did, we did for the best and though we willingly consented to his banishment yet it was against our will.

Com. Ye' are good things, you voices!

Men. You have run
Good work, you and your cry!—Shall 'a to the Capitol.
CORIOLANUS. 621

Act III.

Scene I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear what he hath said some time his general: who lov'd him a most dear particular. He call'd me father, I what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him, mile before his tent fall down, and kneel e way into his mercy. Nay, if he cry'd hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear? Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name. rd our old acquaintance, and the drops at we have bled together. Coriolanus would not answer to; forbade all names: was a kind of nothing, titleless, he had forg'd himself a name o' the fire burning Rome.

Men. Why, so; you have made good work: sir of tribunes, that have week'd? for Rome, make coals cheap, a noble memory! Com. I minded him; how royal 't was to pardon

ACT V.

Scene I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Men. Very well: could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard For his private friends: his answer to me was, He could not stay to pick them in a pile Of noisome, musty chaff. He said, 'twas folly For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt, And still to lose th' offence.

Men. For one poor grain or two? I am one of those; his mother, his wife, his child, And this brave fellow too; we are the grains: You are the musty chaff, and you are smelt Above the moon. We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid's with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue, More than the instant army we can make, Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.

Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?
Bru. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome towards Marcia.

Men. Well; and say that Marcia
Return me, as Cominius is return’d,
Unheard, what then?—
But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? say’t be so?—

Stc. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I’ll undertake it:
I think he’ll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well; he had not din’d:
The veins unfstill’d, our blood is cold, and then
We put upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff’d
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have supplier souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore, I’ll watch him
Till he be dicted to my request,
And then I’ll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I’ll prove him,
Speed how it will. You shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success. [Exit.]

Com. He’ll never hear him.
Stc. Not.

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as ‘t would burn Rome, and his injury
The gazer to his pity. I kneel’d before him;
’T was very faintly he said, “Rise!” dismiss’d me
Thus, with his speechless hand. What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let’s hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Volscian Camp before Rome. The Guards at their Sations.

Enter to them, MENENIUS.

1 G. Stand! Whence are you?

2 G. You guard like men: ’tis well; but, by your leave,
I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1 G. You may not pass; you must return: our general
Will no more hear from thee.

2 G. You’ll see your Rome embrac’d with fire, before
You’ll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends, if you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks,
My name hath touch’d your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover! I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparalleled, haply, amplified;
For I have over magnified my friends,
Of whom he’s chief) with all the size that verity

Would without lapeing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground.
I have tumbled past the throw, and in his praise
Have almost stamp’d the lessing. Therefore, fellow,
I must have leave to pass.

1 G. ’Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in your behalf, as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr’ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, all ways factionary on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have, I am one that, telling true under him, as you say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined. canst thou tell? for I will not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?
Men. I am, as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Come you, when you have pushed out your gates the way defender of them, and, in a violent popular sense, given your enemy your shield, think to thrust her venges with the queasy groans of old women, the vulgar palms of your daughters, or with the paléd intercession of such a decayed dotard as you seem to be? Do you think to blow out the intended fire your city ready to flame in with such weak breath as this? You are deceived: therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution. You are condemned; your general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.
Men. I mean, thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back! I go, lest I let forth your half pint of blood,—back—
that’s the utmost of your having:—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,—

Enter CORIOLANUS and AUFFIDUS.

Cor. What’s the matter?

Men. Now, you companion, I’ll say an errand to you: you shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a Jack guardant cannot escape from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my evidence with him, if thou stand’st not in the state hanging, or of some death more long in suspense; and crueler in suffering: behold now presented swoon for what’s to come upon thee.—The gods sits in hourly synod about thy particular property, and love thee no worse than thy old Menenius does! O, my son! my son! thou art burning fire for us; look thee, here’s water to quench
I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being among none but myself could move thee. I have been burnt out of your gates with sighs, and conjure thee pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countries. The good assuage thy wrath, and turn the dress uppon this varlet here; this, who, like a block, denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!—

Men. How? away?

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My aids are servanted to others: though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much.—Therefore, be gone:
Mine ears against your suite are stronger than
Your gates against my force. Yet, for I loved thee,
Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle,
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Diana's temple: dear Valeria!
Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by the interpretation of full time,
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform
Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick 'tis the war
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw.
And saving those that eye thee!
Vol. Your knee, sirrah.
Cor. That's my brave boy?
Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace;
Or, if you'd ask, remember this before:
The things I have forsworn to grant may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics: tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not
To allay my rage and revenges with
Your colder reasons.

Vol. O! no more, no more!
You have said, you will not grant us any thing;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already: yet we will ask;
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Therefore, hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volscæ, mark; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private. [Takes his seat.]
—Your request?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment,
And state of bodies, would by our face life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.]

SCENE III.—The Tent of Coriolanus.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow
Cut down our host.—My partner in this action,
We must report to the Volscæ lords, how plainly
Have borne this business.

Cor. This last old man,
Born with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Owed me above the measure of a father;
Say, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love, I have Though I show'd so truly to him) once more offer'd
Be first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only
That thought he could do more. A very little have yielded, too: fresh embassies, and suits, or from the state, or private friends, hereafter
'till I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this?
[Shout all to be tempted to infringe my vow.
[within, the same time 'tis made: I will not.—
inter. in mourning Habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARCUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.
By wife comes foremost: then, the honour'd mould
'therein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand be grand-child to her blood. But out, affection!
It bond and privilege of nature, break!
it be virtuous, to be obdurate.—
that is but curst'ly worth? or those dows' eyes, high make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am not stronger earth than others.—My mother bows, as if Olympus to a molehill should supplication nod; and my young boy an aspect of intercourse, which real nature cries, "Deny not."—Let the Volscæ ough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never such a goosing to obey instinct, but stand on a man were author of himself, and knew no other kin.

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.
Are we come hither; since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
Constrains them weep, and shaketh with fear and sorrow;
Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and thy father, tearing
His country's bowels out; and so poor we,
To their enemies most capital. 1 Thou barr'rt us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas! how can we, for our country pray,
Whereeto we are bound, together with thy victory,
Whereeto we are bound? Alack! or we must lose
Our country, our dear nurse; or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wisb—whate'er side should win; for either thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles through our streets, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm, for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune, till
These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to show a noble grace to both parts,
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to insult thy country, than to tread
(Trust to 't, thou shalt not) on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.

Vir.
Ay, and mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.

Boy.
He shall not tread on me:
I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see.
I have sat too long. [Rising.

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus.
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
The Volscians whom you serve, you might condemn us,
As pious and of your honour: no; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscians
May say, "This mercy we have show'd;" the Romans,
"This we receive;" and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, "Be bless'd
For making up this peace." Thou know'st, great son,
The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name,
Whose repetition shall be dogg'd with cureus,
Whose chronicle thus writ,—"The man was noble,
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
To each ensuing age abhor'd." Speak to me, son!
Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods;
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks of the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak?
Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak you;
He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou, boy:
Perhaps, thy childhood will move him more
Than can our reasons. There is no man in the world
More bound to a mother: yet here he lets me prize
Like one 't the stocks.—Thou hast never in thy life
Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy;

When she (poor hen!) fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
Loaden with honour. Say, my request's unjust,
And spur me back; but, if it be not so,
'Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away:
Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.
[All kneel.

To his surname, Coriolanus, long more pride,
Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end;
This is the last;—so we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us:
This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship,
Does reason our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny 't.—Come, let us go.
This fellow had a Volscian to his mother;
His wife is in Corioli, and his child
Like him by chance.—Yet give us your despatch:
I am hush'd until our city be safe,
And then I'll speak a little.

[He holds VOLUMINA by the hand, long,

Cor. O mother, mother! What have you done? Behold! the heavens do oppress the gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother! mother! O! You have won a happy victory to Rome; But, for your son,—believe it, O! believe it,— Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But let it come.— Auffidius, though I cannot make true wars, I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Auffidius, Were you in my stead, would you have heard A mother less, or granted less, Auffidius? Auff. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn, you wen. And, sir, it is no little thing to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you 'll make, advise me. For my part, I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you, Stand to me in this cause.—O mother! wife! Auff. [Aside.] I am glad, thou hast set thy men and thy honour At difference in thee: out of that I'll work Myself a firmer fortune.

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.

Cor. Ay, by and by; To VOLUMINA, VIRGIL & But we will drink together; and you shall bear A better witness back than words, which we On like conditions will have counter-seal'd. Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you: all the swords In Italy, and her confederate arms, Could not have made this peace.

SCENE IV.—Rome. A Publice Place. Enter MEMPNUMUS and STICNUS.

Men. See you yond' egin of the Capitol; you corner-stone?
Sic. Why, what of that?
Men. If it be possible for you to place it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him: but I say, there is no hope in't. Our threats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.
Sir. Is it possible, that so short a time can alter the opinions of a man?

Mrs. There is difference between a grub, and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcius is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sir. He loved his mother dearly.

Mrs. So did he me; and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight year old horse. The tarts of his face sour ripe grapes: when he walks, his legs move like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treadings. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye: talks like a knell, and his hem! is a battery. He is in state as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding: he wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sir. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Mrs. I paint him in the character. Mark what shecey his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is 'long of you.

Sir. The gods be good unto us!

Mrs. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not him: and he returning to break our necks, they reject not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house.

Sir. The plebeians have got your fellow-tribunes, and hale him up and down: all swearing, if he Roman ladies bring not comfort home, they'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sir. What's the news?

Mess. Good news, good news!—The ladies have preheished the Plebeians are dislodged, and Marcius gone. [vail'd d. merrier day did never yet greet Rome, than the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sir. Friend, art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Mess. As certain, as I know the sun is fire: have you lurr'd, that you make doubt of it? dear through an arch so hurried the blown tide, as the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark you! [Shouts, Trumpets and Hauhtboys sounded, and Drums beaten, all together.

he trumpets, sackbut, pipes, and fifes, song, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans, take the sun dances. Hark you! [Shouting again. M.n.

This is good news, will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia worth of consuls, senators, patricians, city full; of tribunes, such as you, sea and land full. You have pray'd well to-day; his morning for ten thousand of your throats, not have given a doth. Hark, how they joy! [Shouting and Music.

Sir. First, the gods bless you for the tidings: next, accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all at cause to give great thanks.

Sir. They are near the city.

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sir. We will meet them.

[Going, Sir the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome! all your tribes together, praise the gods,

And make triumphant fires; spread flowers before them.

Unhast the noise that banish'd Marcius; Repeal him with the welcome of his mother

Cry.—Welcome, ladies, welcome!

All. Welcome, ladies:

Welcome! [A Flourish with Drums and Trumpets

ESC]nt.

SCENE V.—Antium. A Public Place.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDUS, with Attendants.

AUF. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here. Deliver them this paper: having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place; where I, Even in theirs and in the commons' ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse The city ports by this hath enter'd; and Intends 't appear before the people, hoping [Attendants To punish himself with words. Despatch. [Esc]nt.

Enter Conspirators of AUFIDUS' Faction.

Most welcome!

1 Con. How is it with our general?

AUF. Even so.

2 Con. As with a man by his own alma empion'd, And with his charity slain.

3 Con. Most noble sir, If you do hold the same intent, wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

AUF. Sir, I cannot tell; We must proceed, as we do find the people.

2 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst Twixt you there 's difference; but the fall of ether Makes the survivor heir of all.

AUF. I know it; And my pretext to strike at him admits A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth: who being so heighten'd, He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery, Seducing so my friends; and to this end He bow'd his nature, never known before But to be rough, unwsayable, and fierce.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness, When he did stand for consul, which he lost By lack of stooping,—

AUF. That I would have spoke of Being banish'd for 't, he came unto my hearth; Presented to my knife his throat: I took him; Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way In all his own desires; nay, let him choose Out of my files, his projects to accomplish, My best and freshest men: serv'd his designs In mine own person; help to reap the fame Which he did ear all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong: till, at the last, I seem'd his follower, not partner; and He 'waged' me with his ouenience, as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord; The army marvell'd at it; and, in the last, When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd For no less spoil, than glory.—

AUF. There was it; For which my sinews shall be stretched up him At a few droses of women's rheum, which are As cheap as lies. he sold the blood and labour Of our great actions: there shall he die, And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

'Drums and Trumpets sound, with great Shouts of the People.'
1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post, And had no welcome home; but he returns, Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools, Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear, Wringing him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage, Ere he express himself, or move the people With what he would say, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he lies along, After your way his tale pronounce'd shall bury His reasons with his body.

AUF. Say no more.

Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

AUF. I have not deserv'd it.

But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.

What faults he made before the last, I think, Might have found easy fines: but there to end, Where he was to begin, and give away The benefit of our levies, answering us With our own charge, making a treaty where There was a yielding; this admits no excuse.

AUF. He approaches: you shall hear him.

Enter Coriolanus, with Drums and Colours; a crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier; No more infected with my country's love, Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting Under your great command. You are to know, That prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home, Do more than counterpoise, a full third part, The charges of the action. We have made peace, With no less honour to the Antitians, Than shame to the Romans; and we here deliver, Subscribed by the consuls and patricians, Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

AUF. Read it not, noble lords; But tell the traitor in the highest degree He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—how now!—

AUF. Ay, traitor, Marcius. Marcius!

Cor. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius. Doest thou think I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name Coriolanus in Corioli?—

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously He has betray'd your business, and given up For certain drops of salt your city, Rome; I say your city, to his wife and mother, Breaking his oath and resolution, like A twist of rotten silk: never admitting Counsel o' the war, but at his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars? AUF. Name not the god, thou boy of tears.

Cor. AUF. No more

The rest of this stage direction is not in F. S.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!— Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lord Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion (Who was in my stripes impressed upon him, that Must bear my beating to his grave) shall join To thrust the lie unio him.

1 Lord. Peace both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volsces; men and lads, Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False hound! If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there, That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli: Alone I did it.—Boy!

AUF. Why, noble lords, Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune, Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart, 'Fore your own eyes and ears?

All Con. Let him die for't.

All People. Tear him to pieces; do it presently. He killed my son—my daughter:—he killed my son Marcus:—he killed my father.

2 Lord. Peace, ho!—no outrage:—peace! The man is noble, and his fame folds in This orb o' the earth. His last offences to us Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius, And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O! that I had him, With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe, To use my lawful sword!

AUF. Insolent villain! All Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!

[AUFIDiUS and the conspirators draw, and kill Coriolanus, who falls: AUFIDiUS stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

AUF. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullus—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valor shudders.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all, be quiet.—

Put up your swords.

AUF. My lords, when you shall know (as in things Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoc The that is thus cut off. Please it your honours To call to me your senate, I'll deliver Myself your loyal servant, or endure Your heaviest sentence.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body. And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded As the most noble corse that ever herald Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame Let's make the best of it.

AUF. My rage is gone, And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up — Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers: I'll be one. — Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully: Trail thy steel spikes.—Though in this city be Hath widow'd and unbled many a one, Which to this hour bewail the injury, Yet he shall have a noble memory.—

Assist. [Exeunt, bearing the Body of CORIOLANUS. A dead March, while they pass round the Scene]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Capitol.

The Tomb of the Andronicus appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Capitol. Enter, below, Saturninus and his Followers, on one side; and Bassianus and his Followers, on the other; with Drum and Colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right, blend the justice of my cause with arms; and, countrymen, my loving followers, lead my successive title with your swords. Am I the first-born son of him the last that wore the imperial diadem of Rome? Then, let my father's honours live in me, or wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of my right, sever Bassianus, Caesar's son, fierce gracios in the eyes of royal Rome, keep then this passage to the Capitol; and suffer not dishonour to approach him, imperial seat, to virtue consecrate, a justice, conscience; and nobility, yet let desert in pure election shine; and, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus, aloft, with the Crown. Mar. Princess, that strive by factions, and by friends, ambitiously for rule and empire, now, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand special party, have by common voice election for the Roman empery, seeing Andronicus, surnamed Fius, or many good and great deserts to Rome: nobler man, a braver warrior, lives not this day within the city walls. By the senate is accosted home, ron weary wars against the barbarous Goths; hat, with his sons, a terror to our foes,

Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms,
Ten years are spent since first he undertook
This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
Our enemies' pride: five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;
And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, florishing in arms.
Let us entreat,—by honour of his name,
Whom worthily you would have now succeed,
And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and abate your strength:
Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribute speaks to calm my thoughts.

Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I doassy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy noble brother Titus, and his sons,
And her, to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
And to my fortunes, and the people's favour,
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right,
I thank you all and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and my cause.

[Exeunt the Followers of Saturninus.

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee,—
Open the brazen gates, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.

[Sat. and Bas. go into the Capitol; and exeunt with Senators, Marcus, &c.

627
SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter a Captain, and others.

Cap. Romans! make way! The good Andronicus, Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour, and with fortune, is return'd,
From where he circumscribed his sword,
And brought to yoke the enemies of Rome.

Sound Drums and Trumpets, &c. Enter M A T I U S

Mutius: after them, two Men bearing a Coffin covered with black; then LUCIUS and QUINTUS. After them, Titus Andronicus; and then TAMORA, with

ALARBUS, CHIRON, DEMETER, AARON, and other
Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People, following.
The Bearers set down the Coffin.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning woods!
Lo! as the bark that hath discharged her fraught
Returns with precious laying to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears;
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.
Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!
Romans, of five-and-twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that King Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
These that survive let Rome reward with love;
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheath my sword.
Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?

Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The Tomb is opened.

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons hast thou of mine in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more?

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and on a pile
Ad aures frumentum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthy prison of their bones;
That so their shadows be not unappas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen.

Tum. Stay, Roman brethren!—Gracious conqueror,
Victorious Titus, rive the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son;
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O! think my son to be as dear to me.
Suffeceth not, that we are brought to Rome,
To beauty thy triumphs, and return,
Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughtered in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O! if to fight for king and common wealth
Were pitty in thine, it is in these.
Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood.
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?

Pat. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths behold
Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain.
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:
To this your son is marked; and die he must,
T' appease their groaning shadows that are dust.
Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's how his limbs, till they be clean consum'd.

[Exit Lucius, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS

with ALARBUS.

Tum. O cruel, irreligious piety!
Chi. Was ever Sycellia half so barbarous?
Dem. Oppose not Sycellia to ambitious Rome.

Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening look.
Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope withal,
The self same gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy
With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent.
May favour Tamora, the queen of Goths,
(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen)
To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius with their Swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites. Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.
Remainest thou, that to inter our brethren,
And with loud laments welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so; and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.

[Trumpets sounded; and the Coffins laid in the tomb.
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons; [Kneeling Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in repose.
Secure from worldly chances and mischiefs!
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep.
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons! [Rising

Enter LAVINIA.

Lav. In peace and honour live lord Titus long;
My noble lord and father, live in fame.
Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears
I render, for my brethren's obsequies;
And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy
Sioned on the earth for thy return to Rome:
O! bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserved
The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!—
Lavinia, live;大纲 thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, SATURNINUS, BASSUS,

and others.

Mar. Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful war
You that survive, and you that sleep in fame.
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your swords;
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,
That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,
And triumphs over chance in honour's bed.—

Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust,
This palliation of white and spotless hue;
SCENE II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Present's well worthy Rome's imperial lord.
Receive them, then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,
Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor?
To that, for your honour and your state,
Will you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance:
Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,
Thou com'st not to make a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way.
Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Dau't all your hopes: madam, he comforts you,
Can make you greater than the queen of Goths.
Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?
Lav. Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.
Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia—Romans, let us go.
Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum.
Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.
[Seizing Lavinia.

Tit. How, sir! Are you in earnest, then, my lord?
Bas. Ay, noble Titus: and resolv'd to withholding,
To do myself this reason and this right.

[The Emperor courts Tamora in dumb show.

Mar. Sworn eunuch is our Roman justice:
This prince in just ice seizeth but his own.
Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.
Tit. Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor's guard?
Treason, my lord! Lavinia is surpris'd.
Sat. Surpris'd! By whom?
Bas. By him that justly may
Bear his bethroth'd from all the world away.
[Euzent Marcus and Bassianus, with Lavinia.
Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.
[Euzent Lucius. Quinctus, and Martius.
Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.
Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain boy;
Barrist me my way in Rome? [Titus kills Mutius.
Mut. Help, Lucius, help!

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and, more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, nor any sons of mine:
My sons would never so dishonour me.
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.
Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promise'd love.

[Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy steeds:
I'll trust by leisure him that mocks me once;
These never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.
Was there none else in Rome to make a stale,
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus.
Agree these deeds with that proud bragg of thine,
That said'st, I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?
Act L

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goths,
That, like the stately Phoebe 'mongst her nymphs,
Dost overshine the gallant 'st dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,
Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?
And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—
Sith priest and holy water are so near,
And tapers burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hymeneus stand,—
I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heavens to Rome I swear,
If Saturninus advance the queen of Goths,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon.—Lords, accompany
Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride.
Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered:
There shall we consummate our sponsal rites.

Exeunt Saturninus and his Followers; TAMORA, and her sons; AARON and GOths.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.
Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribute, no; no son of mine,
Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed
That hath dishonour'd all our family:
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes:
Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.
This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified:
Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,
Repose in fame; none basely slain in braves.
Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you.
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him:
He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villain was it spoke that word?

Quin. He that would vouch 't in any place but here.

Tit. What! would you bury him in my despight?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,
And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:
My foes I do repute you every one;
So, trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mar. He is not' himself: let us withdraw awhile.

Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

Tit. Marcus, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—
Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—
Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.
Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous:
The Greeks upon advice did bury Ajax,
That slew himself, and wise Laertes' son
Did graciously plead for his funerals.
Let not young Mutius, then, that was thy joy,
Be b'ard his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise.—
The dismal'd day is this, that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,
Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb!
All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius;
He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lord, to step out of these dreary dumps,—
How comes it that the subtle queen of Goths
Is of a sudden thus advance'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus, but I know it is;
Whether by device or no, the heavens can tell.
Is she not, then, beholding to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Yes, and will nobly remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter, at one side, SATURNINUS, attended.

Tamora, Demetrius, Chiron, and Aaron: at the other side. Bassianus, Lavinia, and others.

Sat. So Bassianus, you have play'd your prize;
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of yours, my lord. I say no mor.
Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have pow'r,
Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own.
My true-betrothed love, and now my wife;
But let the laws of Rome determine all;
Mean while, I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'T is good, sir: you are very short with us;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life:
Only thus much I give your grace to know.
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, lord Titus here,
Is in opinion, and in honour, wrong'd;
That in the rescue of Lavinia,
With his own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath,
To be controul'd in that he frankly gave.
Receive him then, to favour, Saturnine,
That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,
A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds:
'T is thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me.
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine.

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak indifferently for all; And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, madam! be dishonour'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord: the gods of Rome forefend.
I should be author to dishonour you!

1 not with: in f. e. 2 folio: sullen; a dump was originally a strain of music, or a poem. 3 This line is not in the quartus.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Scene I.

But on mine honour, dare I undertake
For good lord Titus’ innocence in all.
Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs.
Tis, at my suit look graciously on him;
Lest not so noble a friend on vain suppose,
Nor with sour looks affright his gentle heart.—
My lord, be ruled by me, be won at last; [Aside to Sat.
Dissolve all your griefs and discontent:
You are but newly planted in your throne;
Lest, then, the people, and patricians too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus’ part,
And so supplant you for ingratitude,
Which Rome repute to be a heinous sin,
Yield at entreaty, and then let me alone.
I’ll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son’s life;
And make them know what ‘tis to let a queen
In the streets, and beg for grace in vain.—
Come, come, sweet emperor,—come, Andronicus,— [Aloud.
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry brow.
Sit, Rome, Titus, rise: my empress hath prevail’d.
Tit. I thank your majesty, and her my lord.
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconcil’d your friends and you.—
For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass’d
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia,—
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.
L. Luc. We do; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,
That what we did was mildly, as we might, [They kneel.]
Tendering our sister’s honour, and our own.
Mar. That on mine honour here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not: trouble us no more.—
Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends.
The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace:
I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.
Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother’s here,
And at my lovely Tamora’s entreaty,
I do remit these young men’s heinous faults.
[They stand up.]
L. Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come; if the emperor’s court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends.—
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound we ’ll give your grace bonjour.
Sat. Be it so, Titus, and grazer too.
[Trumpets. Exit.]

ACT II.

Scene I. — The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. New climbeth Tamora Olympus’ top,
She out of fortune’s shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder’s crack, or lightning flash,
Steadied above pale envy’s threatening reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And having the ocean with his beams,
Salloped the godhead in his glittering coach,
And overlooked the highest-peering hills;
O Tamora,—
On her will doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Hence, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,
Mount aloft with thy imperial mistress;
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Past prisoner held, fetter’d in amorous chains,
And faster bound to Aaron’s charming eyes,
Was Prometheus tie to Caucasus,
Way with slavish weeds, and servile thoughts! Will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
At wait upon this new-made empress.
I wait, said I? To warrant with this queen,
Her goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph,
Her syren, that will charm Rome’s Saturnine,
And save his shipwreck, and his commonwealth.
Ola! What storm is this?

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, brave.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
As manners, to intrude where I am grac’d,
May, for sought thou know’st, affected be.
Chi. Demetrius, thou dost over-ween in all,
Not in L. e. The usual London cry, in time of tumult.

[Not in L. e. The usual London cry, in time of tumult.
Come, come; our empress, with her sacred wit,
To villainy and vengeance consummate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend;
And she shall file our engines with advice,
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, and ears:
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, dead, and dull;
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns;
There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasure.

Ch. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fas aut nefas, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
Per Stygis, per manes vehor.

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c. Marcus LUCIUS, Quintus, and MARTIUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gay
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are wide.
Uncouple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince, and sing a hunter's round.
That all the court may echo with the sound.
Sons, let it be your charge, and so will I,
To attend the emperor's person carefully.
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day brought comfort and delight.

Horns wind; they sing: "The hunt is up.

[Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, DEMETRIUS, CHIRON, and Attendants.

Tit. Many good morrows to your majesty:
Madam, to you as many and as good.
I promised your grace a hunter's peal.
Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.
Bus. Lavinia, how say you?
Lav. I say, no;
I have been abroad awakes two hours and more.
Sat. Come on, then: horse and chariote let us have,
And to our sport.—Madam, now shall ye see
Our Roman hunting.

[To TAMORA.

Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climp the highest promontory's top.
Tit. And I have horese will follow where the gas
Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not we, with horse nor hounds;
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

Enter AARON, with a Bag of Gold.

Aar. He, that had wit, would think that I had no
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know that this gold must coin a straglasm,
Which, cunningly affected, will begot
A very excellent piece of villainy:
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest.

[Hides the Gold.

That have their alma out of the empress' chest.

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
The birds chaunt melody on every bush;
The snake lies coiled in the cheerful sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer’d shadow on the ground.
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And, whilst the babbling echo mock the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun’d horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise:
And—when all’s out, as was expected.
The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy’d,
When with a happy storm they were surpris’d,
And curtained with a counsel-keeping cave.—
We may, each wreathed in the other’s arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
While hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us, as is a nurse’s song
Of lullaby to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Sature is dominator over you.
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy?
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncures,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs:
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora, the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,
This is the day of doom for Bassianus;
His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day:
Thy sons make pilgrimage of her chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus’ blood.
Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll.—
Now question me no more; we are espied:
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives’ destruction.
Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!
Aar. No more, great empress. Bassianus comes:
Be cross with him; and I’ll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, whatsoe’er they be. [Exit.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Bas. Whom have we here? Rome’s royal empress,
Unfurnish’d of her well-beesoming troop?
Or is it Dian, habited like her;
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,
To see the general hunting in this forest?
Tam. Saucy controller of my private steps!
Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently
With horns, as was Actaeon’s; and the hounds
Should dine upon thy new-transformed limbs, Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
’T is thought you have a goodly gift in horning;
And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments.
I pray you, let your husband from his bounds to-day!
’T is pity, they should take him for a stag.
Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make your honour of his body’s hue,
Spotted, destitute, and abominable.
Why are you sequester’d from all your train,
Dismounted from your snow-white proudly steed,
And wander’d hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,
If foul desire had not conducted you?

Lav. And being interpreted in your sport,
Great reason that my my noble lord be rated
For sauciness! —I pray you, let us hence,
And let her ’joy her raven-coloured love:
This valley fits the purpose passing well.
Bas. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.
Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long,
Good king! to be so mightily abus’d.
Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!
Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?
Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?
These two have ’tied me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale, you, see, it is:
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O’ercome with mores, and baeful mistletoe.
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breedes.
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven
And, when they show’d me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads. as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal barely hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hollow tale,
But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death:
And then they call’d me, foul adulteress,
Laecevious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect;
And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed.
Revenge it, as you love your mother’s life,
Or be ye not henceforth call’d my children.
Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

Stabbing Bassianus. Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength.

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis—nay, barbarous Tamora:
For no name fits thy nature but thy own.
Tam. Give me thy ponyard: you shall know, my boys,
Your mother’s hand shall right your mother’s wrong.
Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her:
First, thrash the corn, then after burn the straw.
This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted shape she brave’s your might:
And shall she carry this unto her grave?
Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.
Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.
Tam. But when ye have the honey ye desire,
Let not this waep outlive us both to sting.
Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that sure.—
Come, mistresses, now perform, we will enjoy
That nice preserved honesty of yours.
Lav. O Tamora! thou bestest a woman’s face—
Tam. I will not hear her speak: away with her!
Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.
Dem. Listen, fair madam: let it be your glory
To see her tears; but be her heart to them,
As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.
Lav. When did the tiger’s young ones teach the dam?
O! do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee.
The milk, thou suck'dst from her, did turn to marble;
Even at her feet thou hast'd thy tyranny.
Yet every mother breeds not sons alike:
Do thou entreat her show a woman pity. [To CHIRON.
Chi. What! wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Lav. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark:
Yet have I heard, O, could I find it now!
The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely claws par'd all away.
Sometimes that raven feeds on children,
The whilst their own birds famish in their nests:
O! be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful.

Tam. I know not what it means. Aways with her!

Lav. O! let me teach thee: for my father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,
Be not obdurate. Open thy deaf ears.

Tam. Hadst thou in person 'er offered me,
Even for his sake am I pitiless.
Remember, boys, I pour'd for bored in vain,
To save your brother from the sacrifice;
But fierce Andronicus would not relent.
Therefore, away, and use her as you will:
The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

Lav. O Tamora! be call'd a gentle queen, [Kneeling.
And with thine own hands kill me in this place;
For 'tis not life that I have begg'd so long;
Poor I was slave when Bassianus died. -

Tam. What begg'st thou then? fond woman, let me
Remind you, beauties, I pour'd for bored in vain,
To save your brother from the sacrifice;
But fierce Andronicus would not relent.
Therefore, away, and use her as you will:
The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads.] "An if we miss to meet him handsomely, I—

Sweet hunter, Basianus 'tis, we mean,—
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him,
Thou know'st our meaning: look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder-tree,
Which overshares the mouth of that same pit,
Where we decreed to bury Basianus.
Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends."
O. Tamora! was ever heard the like?
This is no pit, and this the elder-tree.
Look, sirs, if you can find the hunterman out,
That should have murder'd Basianus here.

Aer. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.
[Showing it.]

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [To Titus] fell curs of bloody kind,
Have here bereft my brother of his life.—
Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison:
There let them bide, until we have devis'd
Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tom. What! are they in this pit? 'O wondrous thing!
How easily murder is discovered.

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee
I beg this boon with tears not lightly shed;
That this fell fault of my accursed sons,
Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, 't is apparent.—
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail;
For by my father's reverend tomb I vow,
They shall be ready at your highness' will
To answer this suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bate them: see, thou follow me.
Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:
Let them not speak a word, their guilt is plain:
For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:
Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.

SCENE V.—The Same.

Enter Demetrius and Chiron; with Lavinia, ravished;
her Hands cut off, and her Tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,
Who 't was cut out thy tongue, and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so;
And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.

Dem. See how with signs and tokens she can scowl.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.
Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash;
And so let 's leave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An 't were my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hastel hands to help thee knit the cord.
[Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron.

Wind Horns. Enter Marcus, from hunting.

Mar. Who 's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?
Cousin, a word: where is your husband.—
If I do dream, 'twould all my wealth would wake me!
If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!

Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd, and baw'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches: those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows king's have sought to sleep in
And might not gain so great a happiness,
As have thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—
Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy roseate lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.
But, sure, some Tereus hath dehors'd thee,
And, lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy tongue.
Ah! now thou turn'st away thy face for shame;
And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—
Yet do thy cheeks look red, as Titian's face
Blushing to be encountered with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 't is so?
O! that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him to ease my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee:
A crafther Tereus, cousin, hast thou met,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
O! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them,
He would not then have touch'd them for his life,
Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made in minstrelsy,
He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.
Come; let us go, and make thy father blind;
For such a sight will blind a father's eye.
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes?
Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee:
O, could our mourning ease thy misery!

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with Martius and Quintus, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution; Titus going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!
For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 't is thought.
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed:
For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write
(Throwing himself on the ground.)

My heart’s deep anguish burneth my soul’s sad tears.

Let my tears stand the earth’s dry appetite; My sons’ sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, &c., with the Prisoners.

O earth! I will befriend thee with more rain, That shall distil from these two ancient urns, Than youthful April shall with all his showers: In summer’s drought I’ll drop upon thee still; In winter with warm tears I’ll melt the snow, And keep the eternal spring-time on thy face, So thou refuse to drink my dear sons’ blood.

Enter Lucius, with his Sword drawn.

O, reverend tribunes! gentle, aged men! Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death; And let me say, that never wept before, My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O, noble father! you lament in vain: The tribunes hear you not, no man is by, And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius! for thy brothers let me plead.— Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, ’tis no matter, man: if they did hear, They would not mark me; or if they did mark, They would not pity me, yet plead I must, And bootless unto them.

Therefore, I tell my sorrows to the stones; Who, though they cannot answer my diaries, Yet in some sort they are better than the tribunes, For that they will not intercept my tale. [Rising.] When I do weep, they humbly at my feet Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me; And were they but attired in grave weeds, Rome could afford no tribune like to these. A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones; A stone is silent, and offendeth not, And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death. But wherefore standst thou with thy weapon drawn? Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death; For which attempt the judges have pronounc’d My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee. Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive, That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers? Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey, But me and mine: how happy art thou, then, From these devourers to be banished? But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep; Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break: I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah me! this object kills me.

Tit. Faint-hearted boy: arise, and look upon her.— Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand Hath made thee handler in thy father’s sight? What foul hath added water to the sea, Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy? My grief was at the height before thou cam’st, And now, like Nitus, it disdaint bounds.— Give me a sword, I’ll chop off my hands too, For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain, And they have nurs’d this woe in soothing life; In bootless prayer have they been held up, And I have wish’d myself to be their use: Now, all the service I require of them, Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—

T is well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands, For hands to do Rome service are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr’d thee? Mar. O! that delightful engine of her thoughts, That blabb’d them with such pleasing eloquence, Is torn from forth that pretty hollow egg, Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung Rich varied notes, enchanting old and young. Luc. O! say thou for her, who hath done this deed! Mar. O! thus I found her straying in the park Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer, That hath receiv’d some unrecouring wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her Hath hurt me more, than had he kill’d me dead: For now I stand as one upon a rock, Environ’d with a wilderness of sea; Who marks the waxing tide, who notes the wave by wave, Expecting over when some envious surge Will in his brink bowels swallow him. This way to death my wretched sons are gone, Here stands my other son, a banish’d man, And here my brother, weeping at my woes; But that which gives my soul the greatest spasm, Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.— Had I but seen thy picture in this plight, It would have maddened me: what shall I do Now I behold thy living body so? Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy tears, Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr’d thee? Thy husband he is dead; and for his death, Thy brothers are condemn’d, and dead by this. Look, Marcus; ah! son Lucius, look on her: When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey dew Upon a gander’s lily almost wither’d.

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they’ll be husband; Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful, Because the law hath ta’en revenge on them.— No, no, they would not do so foul a deed; Witnesses the sorrow that their sister makes.— Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips, Or make some sign how I may do thee ease. Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius, And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain, Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks How they are stain’d, as meadows yet not dry, With miry slime left on them by a flood? And in the fountain shall we gaze so long, Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness, And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears? Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine? Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows Pass the remainder of our hateful days? What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues, Plot some device of farther misery, To make us wonder’d at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for at your grief See, how my wretched sister robs and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece.—Good Titus, dry thy eyes.
Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! my brother, well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine.
For thou, poor man, hast drown’d it with thine own.
Luc. Ah, my Lavinia! I will wipe thy cheeks.
Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs.
Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee:
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O! what a sympathy of woes is this;
As far as help an limbo is from bliss.
[Enter Aar.
Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—that, if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive,
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.
Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a nightingale?
That gives sweet tidings of the sun’s uprise?
With all my heart, I will send my hand to him.
Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?
Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine,
That hast thrown down so many enemies.
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn.
My youth can better spare my blood than you,
And therefore mine shall save my brothers’ lives.
Luc. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And fear’d aloft the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy’s castle? O!
None of both but are of high desert.
My hand hath been but idle: let it serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death,
Then, have I kept it to a worthy end.
Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,
For fear they die before their pardon come.
Tit. My hand shall go.
Luc. By heaven, it shall not go.
Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such witter’d herbs as these Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.
Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,
Let me redeem my brothers both from death.
Tit. And, for our father’s sake, and mother’s care,
Now let me show a brother’s love to thee.
Luc. Then I’ll go fetch an axe.
Tit. And I will use it. [Exit Lucius and Marcus.
Tit. Come hither, Aaron: I’ll deceive them both:
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.
Aar. If that be call’d deceit, I will be honest. [Aside
And never, whilst I live, deceive men so —
But I’ll deceive you in another sort,
And that you’ll say, ere half an hour pass.
[He cuts off Titus’s Hand with his Sword.
Re-enter Lucius with an Axe, and Marcus.
Tit. Now, stay your strife: what shall be done, is de-sparch’d.
Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers. Bid him bury it:
More hath it merited; let that it have.
As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purchas’d at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.
Aar. I go, Andronicus; and for thy hand,
Look by and by to have thy sons with thee. —
[Aside. Their heads, I mean.—O, how this villainy

1 Fr. casquet, a close helmet.  2 the words "with an Axe," are not in f. e.
And make them blind with tributary tears;
Then, which way shall I find revenge's cave?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And threat me, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.—
The vow is made.—Come, brother, take one head;
And in this hand the other will I bear:
Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.
As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight:
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay.
He to the Goths, and raise an army there;
And, if you love me, as I think 'tis true,
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exit Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The woefulst man that ever liv'd in Rome.
Farewell, proud Rome: till Lucius come again,
He leave's his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou wert as thou 'toreast hast been!
But now not Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine, and his empress,
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. [Exit.

Enter Titus, Marcus, Lavinia, and young Lucius, a Boy.

Tit. So, so, now sit: and look, you eat no more
Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknot that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then, thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs,
[To Lavinia.

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole,
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and soaking in,
Drown the lamenting foil in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?
Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.

What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah! wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands?
To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O! handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still, that we have none.
Fie, fie! how frantically I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands.
If Marcus did not name the word of hands.—
Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this.—
Here is no drink. Hark, Marcus, what she says;
I can interpret all her martyr'd signs:
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrow, mead'd on her cheeks.—
Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect,
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not nigh, nor hold thy stumpes to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of those will wrest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter dog laments:
Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas! the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Both weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

Mar. Marcus strikes the Dith with a Koj
What dost thou strike at. Marcus, with thy knife?
Mar. At that that I have kill'd, my lord—a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart:
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny;
A dead deed, done on the innocent,
Becomes not Titus' brother. Get thee gone;
I see, thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas! my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother,
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And bus laminating doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly!
That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, sir: it was a black ill-favour'd fly
Like to the empress' Moor; therefore, I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O!
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor
Come hither purposely to poison me.—

There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora. Ah, sirrah—
Yet I think we are not brought so low,
But that between us we can kill a fly,
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Mar. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on us.
He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee,
Sad stories chanced in the time of old.—
Come, boy, and go with me: thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

[Exeunt.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before Titus’s House.

Enter Titus and Marcus. Then enter young Lucius,
Lavinia running after him.

Boy. Help, grandam, help! my aunt Lavinia
Fellows me everywhere, I know not why.—
Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes.—
Ais! sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.
Mar. Stand by me, Lucius: do not fear thine aunt.
Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.
Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.
Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?
Tit. Fear her not, Lucius: somewhat doth she mean.
See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee:
She will have thee go with her.
Ah! boy! Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee,
Sweet poetry, and Tully’s Orator.
Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?
Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess,
Unless some fit, or frenzy do possess her;
For I have heard my grandam say full oft,
Venom of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy
Was mad through sorrow: that made me to fear;
Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as ever my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth;
Which made me down to throw my books, and fly,
Useless, perhaps,—But pardon me, sweet aunt;
And madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
Will most willingly attend your ladyship.
Mar. Lucius, I will.

[LAVINIA TURNS OVER THE BOOKS WHICH LUCIUS HAD LET FALL.

Tit. How now, Lavinia!—Marcus, what means this?
Some book there is that she desires to see.
Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy,— but thou art deeper read, and better skill’d;
None, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn’d contriver of this deed.

Tit. What book?

Boy. Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?
Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than one Confederate in the fact.—Ay, more there was;
’Herself to heaven she heaves them to revenge.
Tit. Lucius, what book is that she testeth so?
Boy. Grandam, ’tis Ovid’s Metamorphosis:
My mother gave’t me.
Mar. For love of her that’s gone,
Perhaps, she call’d it from among the rest.
Tit. Soft! see how busily she turns the leaves!
Help her: what would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read
This is the tragic tale of Philomel,
And treats of Tereus’ treason, and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.
Mar. See, brother, see! note, how she quotes the leaves.

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris’d, sweet girl,
Lavishly and wrong’d, as Philomela was,
’Werd in the ruins, vast, and gloomy woods—

Boy. See, see—

ly, such a place (there is, where we did hunt,
Had we never, never hunted there!)

Pattern’d by that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders, and for rapes.
Mar. O! why should nature build so foul a den,
Unless the gods delight in tragedies?
Tit. Give signs, sweet girl, for here are none but friends,
What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin crat,
That left the camp to sin in Lucrece’ bed?
Mar. Sit down, sweet niece:—brother, sit down by me.
Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,
Inspire me, that I may this treason find!—
My lord, look here;—look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain: guide, if thou canst,
This after me, where I have writ my name

[He writes his Name with his Staff, and guides it with Feet and Mouth.

Without the help of any hand at all.
Cure’d he the heart, that fore’d us to this shift!—
Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,
What God will have us discover’d for revenge.
Heave us thy pen to writ thy sorrows plain,
That we may know the traitors, and the truth!

She takes the Staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps, and writes.

Tit. O! do you read, my lord, what she hath writ?

Stuprum—Chiron—Demetrius.
Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora,
Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. Magni dominator poli,
Tum lentus audit sceleris? tum lentus videt?
Mar. O! calm thee, gentle lord, although, I know,
There is enough written upon this earth,
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
And arm the minds of infants to exclaims.
My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel,
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector’s hope,

[They kneel.

And swear with me,—as with the woful seer,—
And father, of that chaste dishonour’d dame,
Lord Junius Brutus, aware for Lucrece’ rape,—
That we will prosecute, by good advice,
Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

[They rise.

Tit. ’Tis sure enough, an you knew how to do it;
But if you hurt these bear-whelps, then beware:
The dam will wake, and if she wind you once,
She’s with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back;
And when he sleeps will she do what she list.
You’re a young huntsman: Marcus, let it alone;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words,
And lay it by. The angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sybil’s leaves, abroad,
And where’s your lesson then?—Boy, what say you?
Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother’s bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad bohemian to the yoke of Rome.
Mar. Ay, that’s my boy! thy father hath full oft
For his ungrateful country done the like.
Boy. And, uncle, so will I, an I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury,
Lucius, I'll fit shoe; and withal, my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents, that I intend to send them both.
Come, come; thou 'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?
Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandsire.
Tib. No, boy, not so: I'll teach another course.
Lavius, come.—Marcus, look to my house:
Lucius and I 'll go brave it at the court;
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we 'll be waited on.
[Exeunt Titus, Lavius, and Boy.
Mar. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than foe-men's marks upon his batter'd shield;
But yet so just, that he will not revenge.—
Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus!
[Exit.

SCENEII.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Aaron, Demetrius, and Chiron, at one Door;
at another door, young Lucius, and an Attendant, with a Bundle of Weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here 's the son of Lucius;
He hath some message to deliver us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandsire.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus;—
[Aside.] And pray the Roman gods, confound you both.

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius; What 's the news?
Boy. [Aside.] That you are both decipher'd, that's the news.

For villains mark'd with rape. [To them.] May it please you,
My grandsire, well advise'd, hath sent by me
The noblest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say,
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well.
And so I leave you both, [Aside.] like bloody villains.
[Exeunt Boy and Attendant.

Dem. What 's here? A scroll, and written round
Let 's see;—
Integer vita. scelerisque purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec aris.

Chi. O! 'tis a verse in Horace. I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.

Aar. Ay, just—a verse in Horace;—right, you have it.

[Aside.] Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!
Here 's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt,
And sends them weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
That would, beyond their feeling, to the quick;
But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit:
But let her rest in her unrest awhile.—
[To them.] And now, young lords, was 't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height?
It did me good, before the palace gate,
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely inminuate, and send us gifts.

Aar. Hath he not reason, lord Demetrius?
D' ye not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go, and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us
[Trumpets sound.

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus?

Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft! who comes here?

Enter a Nurse, hiding a Black-a-Moor Child in her Arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords, O! tell me, did you see
Aaron the Moor.

Aar. Well, more, or less, or 'er a whitt at all,
Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

Nur. O, gentle Aaron, we are all undone now!
Now help, or woe betide thee evermore.

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dest thou keep.
What dost thou wrap and tumble in thine arms?

Nur. O! that which I would hide from heaven's eyes,
Our empress' shame. and stately Rome's disgrace.
She is deliver'd, lords; she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom?

Nur. I mean she 's brought to bed.

Aar. Well, God
Give her good rest! What hath he sent her?

Nur. A boy.

Aar. Why, then she 's the devil's damn: a joyful birth

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful one.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad [Shouting]
Amongst the fairest burdens of our clime.
The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Zounds! ye whore, is black so base a hue—
Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aar. That which thou canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Chi. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choice!
Aceurs the offspring of so foul a fiend!

Chi. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must: the mother wills it so.

Aar. What! must it, nurse? then let no man but Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I 'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point.

Nur. Give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall blow thy bowels up.

[Takesthe Child from the Nurse, and dress.

Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother?

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,
That shone so brightly when this boy was got,
He dies upon mysemicar's sharp point,
That touches this my first-born son and heir.

I tell you, younglings, not Enceladus,
With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,
Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys!
Ye white-lim'd6 walls! ye alehouse painted sign!
Coal-black is better than another hue,
In that it scorrs to bear another hue;
For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn the swan's black leg to white,
Although she lave them hourly in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am a man [To the Nurse.] to keep mine own; excuse it how she can.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself;
The vigour, and the picture of my youth;
This, before all the world, do I prefer,
This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,
Or none of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother's blood, she is a damned.

Chi. Rome will despatch her for this foul escape.

Nur. The emperor in his rage will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.

Dem. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears.

Fe! treasonous hue, that will betray with blushing
The close encases and counsels of the heart:
Here's a young lad fram'd of another leer.
Look how the black slave smiles upon the father,
As he should say, "Old lad, I am thine own."
He is your brother, lords, sensibly fed
Or that self-blood that first gave life to you;
And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,
He is enfranchised and come to light:
Say, he is your brother by the sorer side,
Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice:
Sent thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.
My son and I have the wind of you:
Keep there; now talk at pleasure of your safety.

[They sit at a distance.

Dem. How many women saw this child of his?

Aar. Why, so, brave lords: when we all join in league,
I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor,
The caitiff boar, the mountain lioness,
The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms.—
Not say again, how many saw the child?

Nur. Cornelius, the midwife, and myself:
And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.

Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself:
Two may keep counsel, when the third's away.
So to the empress; tell her, this I said.—

[Stabbing her: she screams.

Woe, woe! — so cries a pig, prepared to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore didst

Aar. O lord! sir, 'tis a deed of policy. [thou this?
Sail she live to betray this guilt of ours?
A long-tong'd babbling gossip? no lords, no.
And now be it known to you my full intent.
Not far hence Muli lives, my countryman;
His wife but yesternight was brought to bed.
His child is like to her, fair as you are;
So pack with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell him both the circumstance of him.
And how by this their child shall be advance'd
And receiv'd for the empress's heir,
Subsisting in the place of mine,
To calm this tempest whispering in the court,
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Dark ye, lords; ye see, I have given her physic.

[Pointing to the Nurse.

And you must needs bestow her funeral:
The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms.
This done, see, that you make no long delays,
But send the midwife presently to me;
The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,
Then, let the ladies taste what they may.

Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air
With secrets.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Herself and hers are highly bound to thee.

[Exit Dem. and Chi. bearing off the Nurses.

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies,
There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,
And secretly to great the empress' friends.
Come on, these thick shops, I'll bear them safe;
I'll bear you hence for it is you that puts us to our shifts:
I'll make you thrive on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a camp.

[Exit with the child.

SCENE III.—The Same. A public Place.

Enter Titus, bearing Arrows, with Letters on the ends of them; with him Marcus, young Lucius, and other Gentlemen, with Bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, come.—Kinismen, this is the way.—

Sir boy, now let me see your archery:
Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight.

Terra Astrea reliquit:
Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.
Sire, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the watch, and cast your note;
Happily you may catch her in the sea,
Yet there's as little justice as at land.—
No; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it;
'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth:
Then, when you come to Pluto's region,
I pray you, deliver him this petition;
Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.—
Ah, Rome! — Well, well; I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.—
Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,
And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd:
This wicked emperor may have ship'd her hence,
And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Mar. O, Publius! is not this a heavy case,
To see thy noble uncle thus distracted?
Pub. Therefore, my lord, it slightly concerns us,
By day and night I attend him carefully;
And feed his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some careful remedy.

Mar. Kinamen, his sorrows are past remedy.
Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius, how now! how now, my masters! What Have you met with her?
Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word,
If you will have revenge from hell, you shall.

Mar. For Justice, she is so employ'd,
He thinks with Jove in Heaven, or somewhere else,
So that perform you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays.
I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.—
Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;
No big-bond men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size,
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back;
Yet wrung with wrongs, more than our backs can bear:—
And, sith no justice is in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven, and move the gods
To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs.
Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus.

[He gives them the Arrows.]

Ad Jovem, that's for you:—here, ad Apollinem:—
Ad Martem, that's for myself:—
Here, boy, to Pallas:—here, to Mercury.
To Saturn, Cacus, not to Saturnne;
You were as good to shoot against the wind.—
To it, boy: Marcus, loose when I bid.
Of my word, I have written to effect;
There's not a god left unsolicited.

Mar. Kinseman, shoot all your shafts into the court:
We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, well said! Lucius!

Good boy, in Virgo's lap: give it Pallas.

Mar. My lord, I aimed a mile beyond the moon:
Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?
See! Publius has shot one of Taurus' horns.

Mar. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot.
The bull, being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock
That down fell both the ram's horns in the court;
And who should find them but the empress' villain.
She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not choose
But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes; God give his lordship joy.

Enter the Cloven, with a Basket and Two Pigeons.

News! news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come.
Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?
Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clo. Ho! the gibbet-maker? he says, that he hath Taken them down again, for the man must not be Hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?

Clo. Alas, sir! I know not Jupiter: I never drank
With him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clo. From heaven? alas, sir! I never came there.

God forbid, I should be so bold to press to heaven
In my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal pleas, to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the emperors' men.

Mar. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither. Make no more ado,
But give your pigeons to the emperor;
By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.
Hold, hold; mean while, here's money for thy charges.
Give me pen and ink.—

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?

Clo. Ay, sir.

Tit. This is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneel; then kiss his foot: then deliver up your pigeons, and then look for your reward. I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

LUCIUS, and an Army of Goths, with Drum and Colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends, have received letters from great Rome, which signify what hate they bear their emperor, and how desirous of our sight they are. Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness, serious, and impatient of your wrongs; and, wherein Rome hath done you any scath, at him make treble satisfaction. 1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus, 2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd, gazed upon a ruinous monument, and as I earnestly did fix mine eye on the wasted building, suddenly heard a child cry underneath a wall. Made unto the noise; when soon I heard the crying babe control'd with this discourse:—Peace, tardy slave! half me, and half thy dam! 1 In old copies this line is given to Aaron. Theobald made the change.

Did not thy hue bewray whose brat thou art, Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look, Villain, thou mightest have been an emperor: But where the bull and cow are both milk-white, They never do beget a coal-black calf. Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the babe,—"For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth; Who, when he knows thou art the emperor's babe, Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake." With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him, Surpris'd him suddenly, and brought him hither, To use as you think needful of the man. Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil, That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand: This is the pearl that pleas'd thy emperor's eye, And here's the base fruit of his burning lust.— Say, wall-eyed slave, whither wouldst thou convey This growing image of thy fiend-like face? Why dost not speak? What! desast? no, not a word? A halter, soldiers! hang him on this tree, And by his side his fruit of bastardy. Aar. Touch not the boy; he is of royal blood. Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.— First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl; A sight to vex the father's soul withal. Get me a ladder! [A Ladder brought Aar. Lucius, save the child; And bear it from me to the emperor. If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things, That highly may advantage thee to hear: If thou wilt not, befall what may befal. I'll speak no more; but vengeance rot you all!
Luc. Say on: and if it please me which thou speak'st on,
Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.
Aar. An if it please thee? why, assurance thee, Lucius,
[Speaking on the Ladder.]
'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak;
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason, villainies
Ruthful to hear, dispiteously performed:
And this shall not be buried in my sight,
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.
Luc. Tell on thy mind: I say, thy child shall live.
Aar. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.
Luc. Whom should I swear by? thou believ'st no god:
That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?
Aar. What if I do not, as, indeed, I do no not;
Yet, for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,
Therefore I urge thee oath.—fulfil that, I know,
An idiot holds his bauble for a god,
And keeps the oath which by that god he swears,
To that I'll urge him.—Therefore, thou shalt vow by
That same god, what god so'er it be,
That thou ador'st and hast in reverencce,
To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up,
Or else I will discover nought to thee.
Luc. Even by my god I swear to thee, I will.
Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.
Luc. O most inseistant, luxurious woman!
Aar. Tut! Lucius, this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.
'T was her two sons that murder'd Bassianus:
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,
Cut her hands off, and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.
Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?
Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;
and 'twas
Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.
Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!
Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them.
That coddling spirit had they from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set:
That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay;
I wrote the letter that thy father found,
And hid the gold, within the letter mentioned,
Confederate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?
I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand,
And, when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.
I pray'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his:
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.
Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush?
Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.
Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?
Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
Even now I curse the day, (and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse)
Wherein I did not see some notorious ill:
As kill a man, or else devise his death;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself;
Set deadly enmity between two friends:
Make poor men's cattle offtimes break their necks
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carv'd, in Roman letters,
"Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead;"
Tut! I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.
Luc. Bring down the devil, for he must not die
So soon as death as hanging presently.
Aar. If there be devils, would I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!
Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.
[Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.
Luc. Let him come near.
[Enter EMILIUS.

Goth. Welcome, Emilius! what's the news from Rome?
Emil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,
The Roman emperor greets you all by me:
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He desires a parley at your father's house,
Willing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.
Goth. What says our general?
Luc. Emilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Under my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come.—March! away!

Enter TAMORA, DEMETRIUS, and CHIRON, disguised.

Revenge, Rape, and Murder.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habitiment,
I will encounter with Andronicus.
And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs.
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge:
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him.
And work confusion on his enemies.

[They knock.

Titus opens his study door above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?
Is it your trick to make me ope the door,
That so my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?
You are deceiv'd: for what I mean to do,
See here, in bloody lines I have set down,
[Shewing a Paper.

And what is written shall be executed.
Tam. Old! Titus, I am come to talk with thee.
Tit. No; not a word. How can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it action?
You hast the odds of me; therefore no more.
Tam. If thou didst know me, thou wouldst talk with me.

1 Not in f. e. 2 Yet piteously: in f. e. 3 The rest of this stage direction is not in f. e. 4 Not in f. e.
Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:
 witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines:
 witness these trenches made by grief and care;
 witness the tiring day, and heavy night;
 witness all sorrow, that I know thee well,
 of our proud empress, mighty Tamora.
 Is not thy coming for my other hand?
 Tam. Know, thou sad man, I am not Tamora:
 be thy enemy, and I thy friend.
 To Revenge; sent from the infernal kingdom,
 to ease the groaning vulture of thy mind,
 by working wreakful vengeance on thy foes.
 Some down, and welcome me to this world’s light;
 wither me of murder and of death.
 There’s not a hollow cave, or lurking-place,
 to last obscurity, or misty vale,
 where bloody murder, or detested rape,
 can afford, but I will find them out;
 and in their ears tell them my dreadful name,
 which makes the soul offender quake.
 Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me, to be a torment to mine enemies?
 Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome me.
 Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.
 ofl by thy side where Raper, and Murder, stand;
 give some assurance that thou art Revenge:
 take them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels,
 then I’ll come, and be thy waggoner,
 and whirl along with thee about the globe.
 We have two proper plentifuls, black as jet,
 oaks that vengeance Windsor swift away,
 and find out murderers in their guilty caves:
 when thy car is loaded with their heads,
 will dismiss, and by the waggon wheel not like a servile footman all day long, even from Hyperion’s rising in the east,
 till his very downfall in the sea:
 nor day by day I’ll do this heavy task,
 than destroy Rapine and Murder there.
 Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.
 Does thy leader say they are what they are?
 Tit. Rapine, and Murder; therefore called so, because they take vengeance of such kind of men.
 Tam. Good lord! how like the empress’ sons they are;
 and thou, the empress: but we worldly men are miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
 Sweet Revenge! now do I come to thee.
 Tit. If one arm’s embracement will content thee, will embrace thee in it by and by. [Exit Titus above.
 Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy.
 Baker, I force, to feed his brainick fits,
 to protect myself and maintain in your speeches,
 now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
 and being credulous in this mad thought,
 will make him send for Lucius, his son,
 whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
 and some cunning practice out of hand,
 scatter and dispere the giddy Goths,
 at the least, make them his enemies.
 Why here he comes, and I must pry’t my theme.
 Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee.
 Some dread fury, to my woeful house—spine, and Murder, you are welcome too—
 we like the empress and her sons you are!
 Tell me you fitted, had you but a Moor:—
 could not all hell afford you such a devil?
 as, well I wot, the empress never wags,
 But in her company there is a Moor;
 would you represent your queen aright,
 it were convenient you had such a devil.
 But welcome as you are. What shall we do?
 Tam. What willst thou have us do, Andronicus?
 Dem. Show me a murderer; I’ll deal with him.
 Chi. Show me a villain that hath done a rape, and I am sent to be reveng’d on him.
 Tam. Show me a thousand that have done thee wrong, and I will be revenged on them all.
 Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome, and when thou find’st a man that’s like thyself,
 Good Murder, stab him: he’s a murderer. —
 Go thou with him; and when it is thy hap.
 To find another that is like to thee,
 Good Rapine, stab him: he is a ravisher.—
 Go thou with them; and in the emperor’s court.
 There is a queen, attended by a Moor:
 Mayst thou know her by thine own proportion,
 For up and down she doth resemble thee.
 I pray thee, do on them some violent death;
 They have been violent to me and mine.
 Tam. Well hast thou lesson’d us: this shall we do,
 But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
 To send for Lucius, thy thrice valiant son,
 Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
 And bid him come and banquet at thy house,
 When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
 I will bring in the empress and her sons,
 The emperor himself, and all thy foes,
 And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
 And on them shall thou ease thy angry heart.
 What says Andronicus to this device?
 Tit. Marcus, my brother!—tis sad Titus calls.
 Enter Marcus.
 Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius;
 Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths:
 Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
 Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths;
 Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are.
 Tell him, the emperor, and the empress too,
 To feast at thy house, and he will fear with them.
 This do thou for my sake, and so let him,
 as he regards his aged father’s life.
 Marcus. This will I do, and soon return again. [Exit.
 Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,
 And take my ministers along with me.
 Nay, nay, let Raper and Murder stay with me,
 Or else I’ll call my brother back again,
 And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.
 Tam. [Aside to them.] What say you, boys? will you abide with him,
 Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
 How I have govern’d our determin’d jest;
 Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,
 And tarry with him, till I turn again.
 Tit. [Aside.] I know them all, though they suppose me mad;
 And will o’er-reach them in their own devices,
 A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam.
 Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure; leave us here.
 Farewell. Andronicus; to revenge now goes
 To lay a compleat to betray thy foes.
 Tit. I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.
 Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ’d?
 Tit. Tut! I have work enough for you to do —
 Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!
 Enter Publius, and others.
 Pub. What’s your will?
Tit. Know you these two?
Pub. The empress' sons
I take them; Chiron, and Demetrius.
Tit. Fie, Publius, fie! thou art too much deceived!
The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name:
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius;
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them.
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it: therefore bind them sure,
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.
[Exit Titus.—Publius, &c. seize Chiron, and Demetrius.
Ch. Villains; forbear! we are the empress' sons.
Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.
Caius. Stop close their mouths; let them not speak a word.
Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.
Re-enter Titus Andronicus, with Lavinia; she bearing a Bacon, and he a Knife.
Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound. —
Sirs, stop their mouths; let them not speak to me,
But let them hear what fearful words I utter. —
O villains! Chiron and Demetrius,
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud;
This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
Her hand cut off, and made a merry jest:
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more dear
Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say, if I should let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wrestles, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats,
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The bacon, that receives your guilty blood.
You know, your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad.
Hark, villains! I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste;
And of the paste a coaffin I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads;
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd.
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia come.
[He cuts their Throats, and she catches the Blood.
Receive the blood: and when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it:
And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd. —
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.
[Exeunt, bearing the dead Bodies.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Pavillion, with Tables, &c.
Enter Lucius, Marcus, and Goths; with Aaron, Prisoner.
Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
1 Goth. And ours, with thine, befall what fortune will.
Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor.
This ravensous tiger, this accursed devil.
Let him receive no sustenance; fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings.
And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
I fear the emperor means no good to us.
Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prays me that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!
Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave! —
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.—
[Exeunt Goths with Aaron. Trumpets sound.
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.
Enter Saturninus and Tamora, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.
Sat. What! hath the firmament more suns than one?
Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a sun?
Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the peace;
These quarrels must be quietly debated.
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end.
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome
Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.
Sat. Marcus, we will.
[Hautboys sound. The Company sit down at table.
Enter Titus, dressed like a Cook, Lavinia, tw'd, young Lucius, and others. Titus places the cup on the table.
Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, true queen:
Welcome, ye warlike Goths; and welcome, Lucius;
And welcome, all. Although the cheer be poor,
'T will fill your stomachs: please you eat of it.
Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus?
Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertain your higher, and your empress.
Tam. We are beholding to you, good Andronicus.
Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were
My lord the emperor, resolve me this:
Was it well done of rash Virginis,
To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deslour'd?
Sat. It was, Andronicus.
Tit. Your reason, mighty lord!
Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame
And by her presence still renew his sorrows.
Tit. A reason mighty, strong and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant,
For me, most wretched, to perform the like.—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;
[He kills LAVINIA.
And with thy shame thy father's sorrow flee.
Sat. What hast thou done? unnatural and unkind
Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me blind
I am as woful as Virginis was,
And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage,—and it is now done.
Sat. What! was she ravish'd? tell who did the deed
Tit. Will 't please you eat? will 't please your highness feed?
Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus
Tit. Not I; 'twas Chiron, and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 't was they, that did her all this wrong.
Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.
Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie;
Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspoken, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear.
Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?
Have we done aught amiss? Show us wherein,
And from the place where you behold us now,
The poor remainder of Andronicus
Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our house.
Speak, Romans, speak! and, if you say, we shall,
Lo! hand in hand, Lucius and I will fail.

_Emil._ Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for, well I know,
The common voice doth cry, it shall be so.

_Mar._ Lucius, all hail! Rome's royal emperor.—
Lucius, &c. descend.

Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house, [To an Attendant.
And hither hale that unbelieving Moor,
To be adjudg'd some direful lingering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.—
Lucius, all hail! Rome's gracious governor.

_Luc._ Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so,
To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!
But, gentle people, give me time awhile,
For nature puts me to a heavy style,
Stand all aloof,—but, uncle, if you near,
To shed obsequious tears upon this bier.—
O! take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips, [Kisses Titus.

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble son!

_Mar._ Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O! were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

_Luc._ Come hither, boy: come, come, and learn of us
To melt in showers. Thy grandaire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breath thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet and agreeing with thine infancy:
In that respect, then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require it so:
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe.
Bid him farewell; and commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, all that he can have.

_Boy._ O grandaire, grandaire! even with all my heart
Would I were dead, so you did live again.—
O lord! I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

_Enter Attendants, with AARON._

1 Rom. You said Andronicus, have done with woes:
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

_Luc._ Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him
There let him stand, and rave and cry for food:
If any one relieves, or pities him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom:
Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth.

_Aar._ O! why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?
I am no baby, I, that with base prayers
I should repent the evils I have done.
Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did
Would I perform, if I might have my will:
If one good deed in all my life I did,

*The rest of this speech is usually given to a Roman lord. * Not in the folio. * and take leave of him: in f. a.
I do repent it from my very soul.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,
And give him burial in his father's grave.
My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.
As for that ravenous tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,
No mournful bell shall wring her burial;

But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey.
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor,
By whom our heavy haps had their beginning:
Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
That like events may never it ruinate. [Exit.
PROLOGUE.

CHORUS.
Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.
The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove.
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter SAMSON and GREGORY, armed with Swords and Bucklers.

Sam. Gregory, on my word, we'll not carry coals.¹
Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.
Sam. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw,
Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.
Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.
Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.
Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.
Gre. To move is to stir, and to be valiant is to stand;² therefore, if thou art moved, thou run'st away.
Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand,
Will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.
Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest
Has the wall.
Sam. 'Tis true: and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall.—therefore,

¹ This was regarded as a low, degrading office.
² stand to it; therefore (of my word) if thou be mov'd, thou 'st run away : in quarto 1597.
³ civil: in f. e. ⁴ Only in quarto, 1597.
⁵ Salted and dried fish. ⁶ Only in the quarto, 1597.

I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maid to the wall.

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.

Sam. 'T is all one, I will show myself a tyrant:
When I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.
Gre. The heads of the maids?

Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.
Gre. They must take it in a sense, that feel it.

Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand; and, 'tis known, I am a pretty piece of flesh.
Gre. 'T is well, thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John.³ Draw thy tool; here come two of the house of the Montagues.

Enter ABRAM and BALTHASAR.

Sam. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I will back thee.
Gre. How! turn thy back, and run?

SCENE II.

ROMEo AND JULIET.

Romeo. Well, in that hit you miss: she’ll not be hit With Cupid’s arrow. She hath Dian’s wit; And in strong proof of chastity well arm’d. From love’s weak childhood bow she lives uncharm’d. She will not stay the siege of loving terms, Nor bide th’ encounter of assailing eyes, Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold: O! she is rich in beauty; only poor, That when she dies with beauty dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste?

Romeo. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge waste; For beauty, starv’d with her severity, Cuts beauty off from all piosity. She is too fair, too wise; too wisely fair, To merit bliss by making me despair: She hath forsaken to love, and in that vow Do I live dead, that live to tell it now.

Ben. Be rul’d by me; forget to think of her. Rome. O! teach me how I should forget to think.

Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes: Examine other beauties.

Rome. ’Tis the way To call her, exquisite, in question more. These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies’ brows, Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair: He, that is stricken blind, cannot forget The precious treasure of his eyesight lost. Show me a mistress that is passing fair; What doth her beauty serve, but as a note Where I may read who pass’d that passing fair? Farewell: thou canst not teach me to forget.

Ben. I’ll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. But though Montague is bound as well as I, In penalty alike; and ’tis not hard, I think, For men so old as we to keep the peace. Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both; And pity ’tis, you liv’d at odds so long. But now, my lord, how doth your lady suit? Cap. But saying o’er what I have said before. My child is yet a stranger in the world, She hath not seen the change of fourteen years: Let two more summers wither in their pride, Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride. Par. Younger than she are happy mothers made Cap. And too soon married are those so early married! Earth up hath swallowed all my hopes but she, She is the hopeful lady of my earth. But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart, My will to her consent is but a part; An she agree, within her scope of choice Lies my consent and fair according voice. This night I hold an old accustomed feast, Whereeto I have invited many a guest, Such as I love; and you, among the store, One more most welcome makes my number more. At my poor house look to behold this night Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven light: Stars, that make light day blacker to the eye, When well-apparel’d April on the heel Of limping winter tread, even such delicacy.

My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.

[Exeunt Capulet and Paris.

Serv. Find them out, whose names are written here? It is written, that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his brush: but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—in good time.

Enter Benvolio and Romeo.

Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burning.
One pain is lissen'd by another's anguish;
Turn giddy, and be holp by backward turning;
I have but desperate griefs and cares to tell another's languish:
Take thou some new invention to thy eye,
And the rank poison of the old will die.
Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.
Ben. For what, I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken shin.
Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is:
Shut up in prison, kept without my food.
Whipp'd, and torment'd, and—Good-den, good fellow.
Serv. God gi' good-den.—I pray, sir, can you read?
Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.
Serv. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book; but,
I pray, can you read any thing you see?
Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.

Serv. Stay, fellow; I can read.

"Signior Martino, and his wife, and daughters;
County Anselme, and his beauteous sisters; the lady widow of Vitruvio; Signior Placentio, and his lovely nieces: Mercutio, and his brother Valentine, mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; my fair niece Rosaline; Livia; Signior Valentio, and his cousin Tybalt: Lucio, and the lively Helena."

A fair assembly; whither should they come?

Serv. Up.

Rom. Whither? to supper?
Serv. To our house.

Rom. Whose house?
Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.
Serv. Now, I'll tell you without asking. My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine.
Rest you merry.

Ben. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's
Sups the fair Rosaline, whom thou so lov'st,
With all the admired beauties of Verona:
Go thither; and, with unattainted eye,
Compare in number, though in reckoning none.
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye
Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires;
And these, who, often drown'd, could never die,
Transparent hereticks, be burn'd for liars.

One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun
Ne'er saw her match since first the world began.

Ben. Tut! you saw her fair, none else being by,
Herself pois'd with herself in either eye;
But in those crystal scales let there be weigh'd
Your lady's love against some other's, then,
That I will show you abasing at this feast,
And she shall scant show well, that now shows best.

Rom. I'll go along, no such sight to be shown.
But to rejoice in splendour of mine own. [Exeunt

SCENE III.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call for her to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maiden-head at twelve years old,
I bade her come.—What, lamb! what, lady-bird?
God forbid!—where's this girl?—what, Juliet?

[Enter Juliet.

Jul. How now! who calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here.

What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter.—Nurse, give leave awhile.
We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again: I have remember'd me, thou shalt hear our counsel. Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. 'Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.

La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. 'Tis four and twenty years since I was fourteen.

I'll lay fourteen of my teeth
And yet to my teen' be it spoken I have but four,
She is not fourteen. How long is it now
To Lammas-tide?—

La. Cap. A fortnight, and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen
Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—
Were of an age. Well, Susan is with God;
She was too good for me. But, as I said,
On Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen:
That shall she marry: I remember it well.

'T is since the earthquake now eleven years:
And she was weend,—I never shall forget it—
Of all the days of the year, upon that day;
For I had then laid wormwood to my dug,
Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall:
My lord and you were then at Mantua.——
Nay. I do bear a brain:—but, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my dug, and felt it bitter, pretty fool,
To see it tetchy, and fall out with the dug!
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 't was no need, I trow;
To bid me trudge,
And since that time it is eleven years;
For then she could stand alone;—nay, by the roof.
She could have run and waddled all about,
For even the day before she broke her brow:
And then my husband—God be with his soul!
'A was a merry man'—took up the child:
"Yes," quoth he, "do st ill upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast more wit
Wilt thou not Jule?"  and, by my holy-dam,
The pretty wretch left crying, and said—"Ay."
To see, now, how a jest shall come about!
I warrant, an I should live a thousand years.
I never should forget it: "Wilt thou not Jule?" quoth 'a. And, pretty fool, it staint, and said—"Ay."

Nurse. Yes, madam. Yet I cannot choose but laugh; 'tis think it should leave crying, and say—"Ay!"

and yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow
a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone, perilous knock; and it cried bitterly.

Yes, quoth my husband, 'fall it upon thy face? how wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age; I'll thou not, Jan?" it stilled, and said—"Ay!"

Jul. And sting thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace! I have done. God mark thee to his grace, how wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd: in I might live to see thee married once, have my wish.

La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very theme came to talk of. —Tell me, daughter Juliet, how stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse, would say, thou hast suck'd wisdom from thy ted.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger than you,
there in Verona, ladies of esteem,
were made already mothers: by my count, was your mother, much upon these years that you are now a maid. Thus, then, in brief:—
he valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man, is all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.

La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.
Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.

La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?
his night you shall behold him at our feast: lead o'er the volume of young Paris' face, find delight writ there with beauty's pen. Examine every married lineament, and see how one an other lends content; and what observer'd in this fair volume lies, find written in the margin of his eyes. This precious book of love, this unbound lover, 'o beautify him only lacks a cover: the fish lives in the sea; and 'tis much pride, for fair without the fair within to hide. That book in many eyes doth share the glory; that in gold clasps locks in the golden story; 'o shall you share all that he doth possess by having him, making yourself no less.

Nurse. No less? nay, bigger women grow by men.

La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?

Jul. I'll look to like, if looking liking move; but no more deep will I endart mine eye, than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the Nurse urdled in the pantry, and every thing in extremity, must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

La. Cap. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

[Exeunt.]
Mrs. O! then, I see, queen Mab hath been with you. She is the fairies' midwife; and she comes in shape no bigger than an agate stone. Over men's noses as they lie asleep: Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs; The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers; The traces, of the smallest spider's web; The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams. Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film: Her web, golde, a small grey-coated guat, Not half so big as a round little worm: Pick'd from the lazy finger of a milkmaid. Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut, Made by the joiner squirel, or old grub, Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers. And in this state she gallops night by night Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love: On courtiers' knees, that dream on courtiers' straight: Or lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees. 'Tis he also straight on kings' dreams: Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues, Because their breaths with sweet-meats tainted are. Sometimes she gallops o'er a counsellor's nose, And then dreams he of smelling out a suit: And sometime comes she with a tithe-pig's tail, Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep, Then he dreams of another benefice. Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck, And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats, Of brevets, ambusacodes, Spanish blades, Of healths five fathom deep; and then anon Drums in his ear, at which he starts, and wakes; And, being thus frighted, swears a prayer or two, And sleeps again. This is that very Mab, That plats the manes of horses in the night; And makes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hair, Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes. This is the hang, when maids lie on their backs, That prosses them, and learns them first to bear, Making them women of good carriage. This is she. Rom. Peace, peace! Mercutio, peace! Thou talk'st of nothing. True, I talk of dreams, Which are the children of an idle brain, Begot of nothing but vain fantasy; Which is as thin of substance as the air, And more inconstant than the wind, who woos Even now the frozen bough of the north, And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence. Turning his tide to the dew-dropping south. Ben. This wind, you talk of, blows us from ourselves; Supper is done, and we shall come too late. Rom. I fear, too early; for my mind misgives, Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars, Shall bitterly begin his fearless date With this night's revels: and expire the term Of a despised life, cloy'd in my breath: By some vile forfeit of untimely death: But he, that hath the steerage of my course, Direct my sail.]

[Exeunt.]

1 Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away? he shift a trenched! he scrape a trenched! 2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too; 'tis a bad thing. 1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the coen cupboard, look to the plate —Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane; and, as thou lov'st me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell.—Antony and Potpan! 2 Serv. Ay, boy; ready. 1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

[They exit.]

Enter Capulet, &c. with the Guests, and the Madonna. Cap. Welcome, gentlemen! ladies, that have their use Unplucked with corns, will have a bout with you. —Ah, ha, my mistresses! which of you all Will now deny to dance? she that makes disdain, I'll swear, hath corns. Am I come near you now You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day, That I have worn a visor, and could tell [To Romeo, &c.] A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear. Such as would please: —'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis got: You are welcome, gentlemen.—Come, musicians, play! A hall! a hall! give room, and foot it, girls. [Music plays, and they dance.]

More light, ye knaves, and turn the tables up, And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot. —Ah! sirrah, this unlook'd-for sport comes well. Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin Capulet, For you and I are past our dancing days: How long is 'tis now, since last yourself and I Were in a mask? 2 Cap. By 'r lady, thirty years. 1 Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much: 'tis since the nuptial of Lucentio, Come pentecost as quickly as it will, Some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd. 2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder, sir; His son is thirty. 1 Cap. Will you tell me that? His son was but a ward two years ago. Rom. What lady is that, which doth enrich the head Of yonder knight? [Pointing to Jovian.] Serv. I know not, sir. Rom. O! she doth teach the torches to burn bright It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,
And touching hers, make blessed! my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
never saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague.
[Exit Boy.]  What! dares the slave
one hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To leer and scorn at our solemnity?
Low, by the stock and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

1 Cap. Why, how now, kinsman! wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz; let him alone,
Let him prove but a portly gentleman;
And to say truth, Verona brags of him,
'tis a virtuous and well-govern'd youth;
would not for the wealth of all this town,
here, in my house, do him dispensation;
Therefore, be patient, take no note of him:
I am my will; the which if thou respect,
how a fair presence, and put off these frowns,
ill-becoming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest.

'Twill not endure him.

1 Cap. He shall be endur'd:
that, goodman boy!—I say, he shall;—go to;
and, if I am the master here, or you?
'twill not endure him!—God shall mend my soul—
'twill make a mutiny among my guests.
will set cock-a-hoop: you'll be the man.

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

1 Cap. Go to, go to;
ou are a saucy boy.—Is 't so, indeed?—
his trick may chance to scath you;—I know what.
ou must contrary me! marry, 'tis time!—
'll said, my hearts!—You are a prince;—go:—
quiet, or—More light, more light!—for shame!
'twill make you quiet: What!—Cheerly, my hearts!
Patience perforce with willful choler meeting,
takes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
will withdraw, but this intrusion shall,
seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall.

[Exit.

Romeo and Juliet.

This holy shrine, the gentle fine! is this,— y lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, do you wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion shows in this;
saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
and palm to palm is holy pilgrims' kiss.

Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmer's too?

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O! then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;
They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.

Jul. Saint's souls do not move, though great for prayer's sake.

Rom. Then move not ever, while my prayer's effect I take.

[Silence.

Thus from my lips, by thine, my sin is purg'd.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.
Rom. Sin from my lips? O, trespass sweetly urg'd!
Give me my sin again.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.

[Juliet retires.

Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelor,
Her mother is the lady of the house.
And a good lady and a wise, and virtuous,
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal;
I tell you—he that can lay hold of her
Shall have the chinks.

Rom.

Is she a Capulet?

O, dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Ben. Away, begone: the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

[Going.

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.
Is it e'en so? Why then, I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night.—
More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed.
Ah, sirrah, by my fay, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest.

[Exit.

Jul. Come hither, nurse.

What is yond gentleman?

[The Guests retire severally.

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.

Jul. What's he, that follows here, that would not dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go, ask his name.—If he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding-bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague;

[Going and returning.

The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me.
That I must love a loathed enemy.

[Exeunt all Guests.

Nurse. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now
Of one I dance'd withal.

[One calls within, JULIET!

Nurse.

Anon, anon.—

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone.

[Exeunt Enter Chorus.

Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affections gaps to be his heir:
That fair, for which love groan'd for, and would die,
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,
Alike bewitched by the charm of looks;
But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,
And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks:

[Silence.

Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear;
And she as much in love, her means much less;

[Exeunt.

To meet her new-beloved any where:
But passion lends them power, time means to meet.
Tempering extremities with extreme sweet.

[Exit.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—An open Place, adjoining Capulet's Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Can I go forward, when my heart is here?—
Turn back; dull earth, and find thy centre out.

[He climbs the Wall, and leaps down within it.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo! Romeo!

Mer. And, on my life, hath stolen him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way, and leapt'd this orchard wall.

Call, good Mercutio.

Mer. Nay, I'll conjure too.—
Romeo, humours, madman, passion, lover!—
Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh:
Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;
Cry but—Ah me! pronounces but—love and love;
Speak to my gossipy Venus one fair word,
One nick-name for her purblind son and heir,
Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so true,
When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid—
He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not;
The ape is dead, and I must conjure him—
I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,
By her high forehead, and her scarlet lip,
By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,
And the domesness that there adjacent lie,
That in thy likeness thou appear to us.

Ben. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him: 't will anger spirit
To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle
Of some strange nature, letting it there stand
Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it down;
That were some spite. My invocation
Is fair and honest, and, in his mistress' name,
I conjure only but to raise up him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among these trees,
To be consorted with the humorous' night:
Blind is his love, and both belit the dark.

Mer. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,
As maids call medlars when they laugh alone.—
'0 Romeo! that she were, O! that she were
An open e'cfera, thou a poprin pear!
Romeo, good night:—I'll to my truckle-bed;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep.—
Come, shall we go?

Ben. Go, then; for 't is in vain
To seek him here, that means not to be found. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Capulet's Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.—

[Juliet appears above, at a window.

But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks?

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun.—

Arisen, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
Who is already sick and pale with grief.
That thou, her maid, art far more fair than she:

Be not her maid, since she is envious;
Her vestal livery is but white3 and green,
And none but fools do wear it; cast it off.—

It is my lady! O! it is my love:
O, that she knew she were!—

She speaks, yet she says nothing: what of that?
Her eye disconsol'd, I will answer it.—

I am too bold; 't is not to me she speaks:
Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
Having some business, do entreat her eyes
To twinkle in their spheres till they return.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head?
The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars,
As daylight doth a lamp: her eyes5 in heaven
Would through the airy region stream so bright,
That birds would sing, and think it were not night.
See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!
O! that I were a glove on that hand,
That I might touch that cheek.

Julit. Ah me! She speaks.

O, speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,
As is a winged messenger of heaven
Unto the white-upturned wond'ring eyes
Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazy-passing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?
Deny thy father, and refuse thy name:
Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

Jul. 'T is but thy name that is my enemy:
Thou art thyself, although 14 a Montague.
What's Montague? it is not in hand, nor foot,
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part
Belonging to a man. O! be some other name.
What's in a name? that which we call a rose
By any other name 'd smell as sweet:
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
Retain that dear 13 perfection which he owes
Without that title—Romeo, daff thy name;
And for thy name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself. 213

Rom. I take thee at thy word.

Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd;
Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that thou, thus beseech'st me night,
So stumblíest on my counsel?

Rom. By a name
I know not how to tell thee which I am:
My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
Because it is an enemy to thee:
Had I it written, I would tear the words.

Jul. My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's utterance, 11 yet I know the sound.
Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee displease.
Jul. How canst thou hither, tell me? and wherefore?
The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb, and the place death, considering who thou art, if ray of my kinsmen find thee here.
Rom. O, my love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls.
For stony limits cannot hold love out:
And what love can do, that dares love attempt;
Therefore, thy kinsmen are no lest to me.
Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.
Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye,
Than twenty of their swords: look thou but sweet,
And I am proof against their enmity.
Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.
Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their eyes;
And but thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death protracted, wanting of thy love.
Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?
Rom. By love, that first did prompt me to inquire;
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.
I am no pilot; yet, worth thou as far
As that vast sea which is the farthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.
Jul. Thou know'st the mask of night is on my face;
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.
Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain deny
What I have spoke: but farewell compliment.
Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say—Ay;
And I will take thy word; yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou may'st prove false: at lovers' perjuries,
Dost thou, like to laugh? O, gentle Romeo!
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo; but, else, not for the world.
A truth, fair Montague, I am too fond,
And therefore thou may'st think my baviour light;
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.
I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou over-hear'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore, pardon me;
And not impute this yielding to love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.
Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tip with silver all these fruit-tree tops,—
Jul. O! swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
As that thy love prove likewise variable.
Rom. What shall I swear by?—
Jul. Do not swear at all;
But, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry, and
I'll believe thee.
Rom. If my heart's dear love—
Jul. Well, do not swear. Although I joy in thee, have no joy of this contrast to-night:
I too rash, too unadvised: too sudden; so like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
'En one can say it lightens. Sweet, good night,
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast!
Rom. O! wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?
Rom. Th' exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine
Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it;
And yet I would it were to give again.
Rom. Wouldst thou withdraw it? for what purpose love?
Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again;
And yet I wish but for the thing I have.
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee.
The more I have, for both are infinite. [Nurse calls within
I hear some noise within: dear love, adieu!—
Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay but a little, I will come again.
Rom. O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet! to be substantial.
Re-enter JULIET above.
Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night, indeed.
In that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,
Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee my lord throughout the world.
Nurse. [Within.] Madam!
Jul. I come, anon.—But if thou mean'st not well,
I do beseech thee,—
Nurse. [Within.] Madam!
Jul. By and by; I come.—To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.
Rom. So thrive my soul,—
Jul. A thousand times good night.
Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.
Love goes toward love, as school-boys from their books,
But love from love, toward school with heavy looks.
[Going.
Re-enter JULIET, above.
Jul. Hist! Romeo, hist!—O, for a falconer's voice,
To lure this terecius gentle back again!
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave where echo lies,
And make her airy voice more hoarse than mine
With repetition of my name's.
Rom. It is my soul, that calls upon my name:
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending ears.
Rom. At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?
Jul. By the hour of nine.
Jul. I will not fail: 'tis twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back.
Rom. Let me stand here, till thou remember it.
Jul. I shall forget to have thee still stand there,
Remembering how I love thee company.
Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.
Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee gone;
And yet no farther than a wanton's bird,
Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would, I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I:
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night: parting is such sweet sorrow,
That I shall say good night, till it be morrow. [Exit.

Rom. Sleep dwelleth upon thy eyes, peace in thy breast—

Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!
Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell;
His help to crave, and my good hap to tell. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence, with a basket.

Fri. The grey-e'y'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Chequeering the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And flecked darkness like a drunken reels
From forth day's path and Titan's fiery wheels.
Now, ere the sun advance his burning eye
The day to cheer, and night's dank dew to dry,
I must up-fill this ciser cage of ours.
With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers.
The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb:
What is her burying grave, that is her womb;
And from her womb children of divers kind
We suckling on her natural bosom find:
Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some, and yet all different.
O! mickle is the powerful grace that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities:
For ought so vile that on the earth doth live
But to the earth some special good doth give;
Nor aught so good. But strain'd from that fair use,
Revolved from true virtue, from true love;
Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied,
And vice sometime's by action dignified.
Within the infant rind of this weak flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power:
For this, being smelt, with that act cheers each part;
Being tasted, slays all sense with the heart.
Two such opposed kings encamp them still
In man as well as herbs, grace, and rude will;
And where the worse is predominant,
Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father.

Fri. Beneficite!

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?—
Young son, it argues a distemper'd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed:
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;
But where unbusted youth, with unstuff'd brain,
Doth cough his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.
Therefore, thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art up-rous'd by some distempering cause:
Or if not so, then here I bid it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.—

Rom. That last is true: the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin! wert thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no;
I heard it from this name, and nothing more:

Fri. That's my good son: but where hast thou been, then?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.
I have been feasting with mine enemy:
Where, on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man; for, lo!
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy durt;
Riddling confession finds but riddlingshrift.

Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dearest love is
On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on her, so hers is set on mine;
And all combin'd, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage. When, and where, and how,
We met, we wou'd, and made exchange of vow,
I'll tell thee as we pass: but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us to-day—

Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is here!
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men's love, then, lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.

Jesu Maria! what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
How much salt water thrown away in waste
To season love, that of it doth not taste!
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo! here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet.
If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline:
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence, then—
Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou child'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,
To lay one in, another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she, whom I love so,
Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow:
The other did not so.

Fri. O! she knew well,
Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be,
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households' favour to pure love.

Rom. O! let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.

Fri. Wisely, and slow; they stumble that run fast.

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?—
Came he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father's: I spoke with his man.

Mer. Why, that same pale hard-hearted wench, Rosaline,
Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman to old Capulet,
Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man that can write may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer this letter's master, not
He dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo! he is already dead! state
ROMEO AND JULIET.

569

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting;[a] it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O! here's a wit of cheverel,[b] that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad: white added to the goose, proves thee far and wide abroad—goose.[c]

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable. now art thou Romeo,[d] now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this drivelng love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.

Ben. Thou wouldst else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O! thou art deceived. I would have made it short; for I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly gear! Enter Nurse and Peter.

Mer. A sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt, and a smock.

Nurse. Peter, pr'ythee give me my fan.

Mer. Pr'ythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan 's the fairer of the two.[e]

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den, fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. 'Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy band of the dial is now upon the prick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you.

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made for[18] himself to mar. 49

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said;—for himself to mar, quoth 'a?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him. I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yes! is the worst well? very well took, 'tis faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence[19] with you.

Ben. She will invite him to some supper.

Mer. A hawd, a hawd, a hawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hawd, sir; unless a hawd, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

An old hare hawr, and an old hare hawr,[Singing] 50

Is very good meat in lent:

But a hare that is hoar, is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent.—

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady;

Farewell, lady, lady, lady.[21] 51

[Singing] 52

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.]

Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his propery?
Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down, an 'a were luster than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scourvy knave! I am none of his flirt-gills: I am none of his skainen-mates. —And you must stand by, too, and shout and swear to use me at his pleasure!
Pet. I hope you cannot use me at your pleasure; if I had my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you. I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. —Scourvy knave! —Pray you, sir, a word; and as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out: what she bid me say, I will keep to myself; but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her in a false paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say, for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very wicked dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress.

I protest unto thee, —

Nurse. Good heart! and, i' faith, I will tell her as much. Lord, lord! she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come to shifting this afternoon; And there she shall at friar Lawrence's cell Be shrieve'd, and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to: I say, you shall. [Giving her money.

Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey-wall: Within this hour my man shall be with thee, And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair; Which to the high-top-gallant of my joy Must be my convoy in the secret night. Farewell! —Be truey, and I'll 'tiske thy pains. Farewell! —Commend me to thy mistres.

Nurse. Now, God in heaven bless thee! —[Hark you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you no' hear say, Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

Rom. I warrant thee; my man is true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady—

Lord, lord!—when 'tis a little prating thing, —O! —

There's a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain lay knife aboard; but she, good soul, had as like see a toad, as a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the proper man; but, 'I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any elout in the varsal world. Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. Ay, nurse; What of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mooser! that's the dog's name. R for these? no. I know it begins with some other let and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you a rosemery, that it would do you good to hear it.
Rom. Command me to thy lady.

[Exeunt.

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times.—Peter! Pet. Anon?

Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE V.—CAPULET'S Garden.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send the sun In half an hour she promis'd to return. Perchance, she cannot meet him: that's not so—
O! she is lame; 'tis love's heralds should be thought; Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams Driving black shadows over lowering hills: Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love, And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings. Now is the sun upon the highest hill Of the day; the moon is in her last gait; and from nine till twelve Is three long hours,—yet she is not come. Had she affections, and warm youthful blood, She 'd be as swift in motion as a ball; My words would bandy her to my sweet love, And his to me: but old folks, seem as dead; Unwieldy, slow, and dull as lead.

[Enter Nurse and Peter.

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O lord! why lose thou sad? Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily; If good, thou shamu'st the music of sweet news By playing it to me with so sour a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave awhile. Fie, how my bones ache! What a junta hath l'es. Jul. I would, thou hadst my bones, and I thy new Nay, come, I pray thee, speak; —good, good, ad

Nurse. Jesus, how haste! can you not stay still? Do you not see, that I am out of breath? Jul. Now art thou out of breath, when thou hast been To say to me—that thou art out of breath! The excuse that thou dost make in this delay Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse. Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that; Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance. Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad? Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, no, though his face be better than any man's, yet it excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet are past compare. He is not the flower of course; but, 'I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Of a ways, wench: serve God. What, have you done home?

Jul. No, no: but all this did I know before. What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.
My back! o' t' other side.—O, my back, my back!—
Be.Shr.e your heart for sending me about,
To catch my death with jaunting up and down.

Jul. I' faith, I am sorry that thou art not well...
Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?
Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And, I warrant, a virtuous.—Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within:
Where should she be?—How oddly thou reply'st:
'Your love says like an honest gentleman,—
Where is your mother?'

Nurse. O, God's lady dear!
Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the pokehole for my aching bones?
Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a coil—Come, what says Romeo?
Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shrift to-day?
Jul. I have.

Nurse. Then, hee you hence to friar Laurence' cell,
There stays a husband to make you a wife;
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks;
They'll be in scarlet straightway* at my* news.
Hie you to church; I must another way,
To fetch a ladder, by the which your love
Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark:
I am the drudge, and toil in your delight,
But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Jo. I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune!—Honest nurse, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That after hours with sorrow chide us not!

Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervail the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then love-devouring death do what he dares;
It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die: like fire and powder,
Which as they kiss consume. The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite:
Therefore, love moderately; long love doth so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

[Enter Juliet.

Here comes the lady.—O! so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:
A lover may bestride the gossamers.
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him. else are his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah, Juliet! if the measure of thy joy
Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be more
To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagin'd happiness, that both
Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit, more rich in matter than in words,
Brags of his substance, not of ornament:
They are but beggars that can count their worth;
But my true love is grown to such excess,
I cannot sum the sum* of half my wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, and we will make short work;
For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy church incorporate two in one.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Public Place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire:
The day is hot, the Capulets abroad,
And if we meet we shall not 'scape a brawl:
For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.4

Mer. Thou art like one of those that follow'st, when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, "God send me no need of thee!" and, by the operation of the second cup, draws him on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack, in thy mood, as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have some shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason, but thou hast hazel eyes: what eye,

Merc. Could you not take some occasion without giving?
Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort'st with Romeo.—
Merc. Consort! what! dost thou make us misrules? an thou make misrules of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddletick; here's that shall make you dance! 'Zounds, consort! [Striking his heel.]
Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men: Either withdraw unto some private place, And reason coldly of your grievances, Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.°
Merc. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze:
I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir. Here comes my man.

Merc. But, I'll be hang'd, sir, if he wear your livery!
Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower;
Your worship, in that sense, may call him—man.
Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee, can afford
No better term than this—thou art a villain.
Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee
Doth much exceed the appertaining rage
To such a greeting:—villain am I none;
Therefore farewell: I see, thou know'st me not.
Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me; therefore, turn and draw.
Rom. I do protest, I never injur'd thee;
But love thee better than thou canst devise,
Till thou shalt know the reason of my love:
And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender
As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.
Merc. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission!
A la stoccaata carries it away.

[Dresses as Tybalt is going.

Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Rom. What wilt thou have with me?

Merc. Good king of cats, nothing, but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pichers by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.°

[Drawing.
Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Merc. Come, sir, your passado.°

[They fight.

Rom. Draw, Benvolio;
Beat down their weapons.—Gentlemen, for shame, Forbear this outrage!—Tybalt—Mercutio— The prince expressly hath forbid this bandying In Verona streets.—Hold, Tybalt!—good Mercutio!°

[except Tybalt and his Partisans.

Merc. I am hurt:—
[Romfo supports Merc.
A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:— Is he gone, and hath nothing?°

Ben. What! art thou hurt?
Merc. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 'tis enough.—

Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a surgeon.

[Exeunt Page.

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Merc. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve: ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world:—a plague o' both your houses!—'Zounds! a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a bragget, a rogue, villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!—Wh the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Merc. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall faint.—A plague o' both your houses! They have made worms' meat of me: I have it, and soundly too—your houses!

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally,
My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt
In my behalf; my reputation stain'd
With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour
Hath been my cousin. O sweet Juliet! Thy beauty hath made me effeminate,
And in my temper softened valour's steel.

Re-enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo! brave Mercutio's dead;
That gallant spirit hath aspir'd the clouds,
Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend;
This but begins the woes others must end.

Re-enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph!° and Mercutio slain!
Away to heaven, respective lenity,
And fire-ey'd! fury be my conduct now!— Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again, That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul Is but a little way above our heads,
Staying for thine to keep him company:
Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that [They fight; Tybalt falls.

Ben. Romeo, away! begone!
The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:— Stand not amaz'd.—the prince will doom thee death If thou art taken.—Hence!—be gone!—away!

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool.

Ben. Why dost thou stay?°
[Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens, &c.

1 CIt. Which way ran he that kill'd Mercutio?

Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 CIt. You, sir:—go with me
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; Montague, Capulet, their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O noble prince! I can discover all The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl: There lies the man, slain by young Romeo, That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O my brother's child O prince! O cousin! husband! O, the blood is spur! Of my dear kinsman!—Prince, as thou art true, For blood of ours shed blood of Montague. O cousin, cousin!

Prin. Who began this bloody fray?

Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay:
Romeo, that spoke him fair, bade him bethink

Whiter than new snow on a raven's back.—
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,
Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.—
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it: and though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: for Jove is in his day,
As is the night before some festival.
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O! here comes my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with a Ladder of Cords.
And she brings news; and ev'ry tongue, that speaks
But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.—
Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there? the cords
That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords. [Threws them down.
Jul. Ah me! what news? why dost thou wring thy hands?
Nurse. Ah well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's dead!
We are undone, lady, we are undone!—
Alack the day!—he's gone. he's kill'd, he's dead!
Jul. Can heaven be so envious?
Nurse. Though heaven cannot.—O Romeo, Romeo—
Who ever thought that I — Romeo! —
Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me thus?
This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I, —
And that bare word, I, shall poison more
Than the death-daring eye of cockatrice:
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that make thee answer, I.
If he be slain, say—I; or if not—no:
Brief sounds determine or my weal or woe.
Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,—
God save the mark!—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as sahoo, all bedaub'd in blood,
All in gore blood; — I swounded at the sight.
Jul. O break, my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once!
To prison, eyes; ne'er look on liberty;
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here,
And thou, and Romeo, press one heavy bier! —
Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt! the best friend I had:
O courteous Tybalt, honest gentleman! —
That ever I should live to see thee dead!
Jul. What storm is this that blows so contrary?
Is Romeo slaughter'd? and is Tybalt dead?
My dear-lov'd cousin, and my dearest lord? —
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom;
For who is living, if those two are gone?
Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd:
Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd.
Jul. O God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's blood?
Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did.
Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flowering face!
Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
Beautiful tyrant; fiend angelical!
Dove-feather'd raven! wolvish-ravening lamb!
Despised substance of divinest show!
Jul. O, find him! give this ring to my true knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence’s Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful
Affliction is enamour’d of thy parts;
[masque
And thou art wedded to calamity.
Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince’s doom?
What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?
Fri. Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company;*
I bring thee tidings of the prince’s doom.
Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince’s doom?
Fri. A gentler judgment parted from his lips,
Not body’s death, but body’s banishment.
Rom. Ha! banishment? be merciful, say—death;
For exile hath more terror in his look,
Much more than death: do not say—banishment.
Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.
Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,
But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence banished is banish’d from the world,
And with the exile is death;—then, banished
Is death mis-term’d: calling death banishment,
Thou cut’st my head off with a golden axe,
And smit’st upon the stroke that murders me.
Fri. O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,
Taking thy part, hath brush’d aside the law,
And turn’d that black word death to banishment:
This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.
Rom. T’is torture, and not mercy: heaven is here,
Where Juliet lives: and every cat, and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven, and may look on her;
But Romeo may not.—More validity,
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet’s band,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips;
Who, even in pure and vesal modesty,
Still blush, as thinking their own kisser sin;
This may flies do, when I from this must fly,
And sayst thou yet, that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not: he is banished.
Flies may do this, but I from this must fly:
They are free men, but I am banished.
Hadst thou no poison mix’d, no sharp-ground knife,
No sudden mean of death, though ne’er so mean,
But—banished—to kill me; banished?
O friar! the damned used that word in hell;
Howling attends it: how hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess’d,
To muzzle me with that word—banished?
Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.
Rom. O! thou wilt speak again of banishment.
Fri. I’ll give thee armour to keep off that word;
Adversity’s sweet milk, philosophy,
To comfort thee, though thou be banished.
Rom. Yet banished?—Hang up philosophy:
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displace a town, reverse a prince’s doom,
It helps not, it prevails not. Talk no more

Fri. O! then I see that madmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.

Rom. Thou canst not speak of that thou dost not feel. Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love, to hour but married, Tybalt murdered, being like me, and like me banished, then mightst thou speak; then mightst thou tear thy hair, and fall upon the ground, as I do now, taking the measure of an unmade grave. [Falling.]

Fri. Arise; one knock; good Romeo, hide thyself. [Knocking within.]

Rom. Not I: unless the breath of heart-sick groans, dist-like, inflode me from the search of eyes. [Knocking.]

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—who's there?—Romeo, arise; thou wilt be taken. Stay a while.—Stand up; [Knocking.]

I am to my study.—By and by.—God's will! That wiltfulness is this!—I come, I come. [Knocking.]

Who knocks so hard? who is this?—what's your will?

Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in and you shall know my errand:

from lady Juliet. Welcome, then.

Fri. Enter Nurse. Nurse. O holy friar! O! tell me, holy friar, there is my lady's lord? where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O! he is even in my mistress' case; uist in her case.

Fri. O woful sympathy! Insidious predicament! Nurse. Even so lies she, rubbing and weeping, weeping and blubbering—stand up, stand up; stand, as you be a man; or let's sake, for her sake, rise and stand; why should you fall into so deep an O? [Romeo groans.]

Rom. Nurse! [Rising suddenly.] Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir!—Death is the end of all. Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her? but she not think me an old murderer, now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy With blood remov'd but little from her own? There is she? and how doth she? and what says she conceald lady to our cancell'd love?

Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps; and now falls on her bed; and then starts up, and Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries, and then down falls again.

Rom. As if that name, Shot from the deadly level of a gun, 2d murder her; as that name's cursed hand Murder'd her kinsman.—O! tell me, friar; tell me, a what vile part of this anatomy but my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack the hateful mansion. [Drawing his Sword.]

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand! Art thou a man? thy form cries out, thou art; thy tears are womanish; thy wild act doth The unreasonable fury of a beast: Unseemly woman, in a seeming man; ill-be seeming beast, in seeming both! Thou hast amaz'd me; by my holy order, I thought thy disposition better temper'd. Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself, And slay thy lady, too, that lives in thee, By doing damned hate upon thyself? 2 Why rail'st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth? Since birth, and heaven, and earth. all three do meet In thee at once, which thou at once wouldst lose. Fie, fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit, Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all, And usest none in that true use indeed Which shouldbedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit. Thy noble shape is an ensign for our envy, Diggessing from the valour of a man: Thy dear love, sworn, but hollow persury, Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish; Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love, Mis-shapen in the conduct of them both, Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask, Is set afire by thine own ignorance, And thou dismember'd with thine own defence. What! rouse thee, man: thy Juliet is alive, For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead; There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee, But thou slust Tybalt: there art thou happy too: The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend, And turns it to exile; there art thou happy: A pack of blessings lights upon thy back; Happiness courts thee in her best array: But, like a mis-beav'd and sullen wench, Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Take heed, take heed, for such dish is miserable. Go, get thee to thy love, as was agreed. Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her; But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set, For then thou canst not pass to Mantua; Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends, Bew pard of the prince, and call thee back, With twenty thousand thousand times more joy Than thou went'st forth in lamentation. Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady; And bid her hasten all the house to bed, Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto: Romeo is coming.

Nurse. O Lord! I could have stay'd here all the night, To hear good counsel: O, what learning is!— My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.

Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.

Nurse. Here is a ring she bid me give you, sir. Hee you, make haste, for it grows very late. [Exit Nurse. Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this! Fri. Go hence. Good night; and here stands all Either be gone before the watch be set, [your state: Or by the break of day disguis'd from hence. Sojourn in Mantua; 'twill find out your man, And he shall signify from time to time Every good hap to you that chances here. Give me thy hand: 'tis late; farewell; good night. Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me, It were a grief so brief to part with thee: Farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and Paris.

Cap. Things have fallen out, sir, so unluckily, That we have had no time to move our daughter. Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly, And so did I:—well, we were born to die—
'T is very late, she 'll not come down to-night:
I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo.—

Mama, good night: I commend you to your daughter.

La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow;
To night she 's nerv'd up in her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; say more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love,
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But, soft! what day is this?

Par. Monday, my lord.

Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too
O' Thursday let it be:—o' Thursday, tell her, [soon;—
She shall be married to this noble earl.
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We 'll keep no great ado:—a friend, or two;—
For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much.
Therefore, we 'll have some half a dozen friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?
Par. My love, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, go you to-morrow:—o' Thursday be it then.—
Go you to Juliet, ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.—

Par. Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me! it is so very late, that we
May call it early by and by.—Good night. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—JULIET's Chamber.

Enter ROMEO AND JULIET.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierced the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree.
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east.
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops:
I must be gone and live, or stand and die.

Jul. You light is not day-light: I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore, stay yet; thou need'st not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death; I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I 'll say, you grey is not the morning's eye, 'T is but the pale reflex of Cynthia's bow;
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes to last
The vaunting heaven so high above our heads:
I have more care to stay, than will to go:
Come, death, and welcome: Juliet wills it so.—
How is 't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is; his hence, be gone, away!
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and unpleasing sharps.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division;
This in no sort, for she divideth some
Some say, the lark and loath'deload change eyes;
O! now I would they had chang'd voices too,
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray.
Hunting thee hence with hunts-up to the day.
O! now be gone:—more light and light it grows.

Rom. More light and light, more dark and dark our woes.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam, Madam!

Nurse. Your lady mother 's coming to your chamber.
The day is broke;—be wary, look about. [Exit Nurse

Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I 'll descend [Descending.

Jul. Art thou gone so? love, lord! 'ay, husband.
I must hear from thee every hour in the day. [Friend For in a minute there are many days:
O! by this count I shall be much in years,
Ere I again behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
Jul. O! think'st thou, we shall ever meet again?
Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Jul. O God! I have an ill-divining soul:
Methinks, I see thee, now thou art so low,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.

Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:
Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu! adieu!

[Exit ROMEO.

Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle.
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with them
That is renowned for faith? Be fickle, fortune;
For, then, I hope thou wilt not keep him long,
But send him back.

La. Cap. [Within.] Ho! daughter, are you up?
Jul. Who is 't that calls? is it my lady mother?
Is she not down so late, or up so early?

What unaccustom'd cause procures her hither?

Enter Lady CAPULET.

La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?

Jul. Madam, I am not well.

La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death!
What! wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?
An if thou wouldst, thou couldst not make him live.
Therefore, have done. Some grief shows much of love,
But much of grief shows still some want of wit.
Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.

La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend
Which you weep for.

Jul. Feeling so the loss,
I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.

La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death,
As that the villain lives which slaughtered him.

Jul. What villain, madam?

Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder.

God pardon him! I do, with all my heart;
And yet no man, like him, doth grieve my heart.

La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.

Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands
Would none but I might venge my cousin's death.

La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not;
Then, weep no more. I 'll send to one in Mantua,—
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live.——
Shall give him such an unaccustomed draught.
Romeo and Juliet.

That he shall soon keep Tybalt company;
And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.
Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd—
Madam, if you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it,
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet.—O! how much he abhors
To bear him nam'd—and cannot come to him,
To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him!

La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girll.
Jul. And joy comes well in such a needy time.

What are they, I beseech your ladyship?
La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father, child;
One who, to put thee from thy heaviness,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,
That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.

Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is that?

La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morn,
The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris, at Saint Peter's church
Shall happily make thee a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a joyful bride.

I wonder at this haste; that I must wed.
ERE he be, that should be husband, comes to woo.
I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I swear,
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,
Rather than Paris.

La. Cap. These are news indeed! Here comes your father; tell him so yourself.

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse

Cap. When the sun sets, the earth doth drizzle dew;
But for the sunset of my brother's son
It rains downright.

How now! a conduit, girl? what! still in tears?
Evermore showering? In one little body
Thou counterfeits't a bark, a sea, a wind:
For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,
Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body,
Sailing in this sea with these winds, thy sighs.
Who, raging with thy tears, and they with them,
Without a sudden calm, will overset
Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife!
Have you deliver'd to her our decree?

La. Cap. Ay, sirs; but she will none, she gives you thanks.

I would, the fool were married to her grave.

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you, wife.
How! will she none? doth she not give us thanks?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her bless'd,
Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud you have, but thankful that you have:
Prond can I never be of what I hate;
But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Cap. How now, how now, choff-logic! What is this?
Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you not;—
And yet not proud,—Mistress Capulet, my notion, you.
Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds;
But settle your due joints 'gainst Thursday next
To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage!
You tallow face!

La. Cap. Fie, fie! what, are you mad?
Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch
I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thursday,
Or never after look me in the face.

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me;
My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us bless'd
That God had lent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her.
Out on her, hiding!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!

You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,
Good prudent: smatter with your gossip; go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O! God ye good den.

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool!

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need it not.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad.

Day, night, hour, tide, time, work, play,

Alone, in company, still my care hath been
To have her match'd: and having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demeanors, youthful, and nobly train'd,

Stuff'd (as they say) with honourable parts,
Proportion'd as one's thought would wish a man,

Then to have a wretched piling foul,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,

To answer,—"I'll not wed,"—"I cannot love,"
"I am too young,"—"I pray you, pardon me."

But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you;

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me:

Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.

Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise.

An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, haeg, beg, starve, die the streets,
For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good.

Trust to't, bethink you; I'll not be forewarn'd.

Exeunt.

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,

That sees into the bottom of my grief?

O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!

Delay this marriage for a month; a week;

Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed

In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.

Exeunt.

Jul. O God! O Nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;

How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send it me from heaven

By leaving earth?—Comfort me, counsel me.—

Alack! that heaven should practise stratagems

Upon so soft a subject as myself!—

What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?

Some comfort, Nurse.

Nurse. Faith, here 'tis. Romeo

Is banished, and all the world to nothing,
SCENE I.—Friar Laurence’s Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris.

Fri. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.

Par. My father Capulet will have it so; And I am nothing slow to slack’st his haste.

Fri. You say, you do not know the lady’s mind: Unseen is the course; I like it not.

Par. Immediately she weeps for Tybalt’s death, And, therefore, have I little talk’d of love; For Venus smiles not in a house of tears. Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous, That she doth give her sorrow so much way, And in his wisdom hasten our marriage, To stop the inundation of her tears; Which, too much minded by herself alone, May be put from her by society.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow’d.

[Aside.

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife.

Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That’s a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?

Jul. To answer that, I should confess to you.

Par. Do not deny to him that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you that I love him.

Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price, Being spake behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abused with tears. Jul. The tears have got small victory by that; For it was bad enough before their spit.

Par. Thou wrong’st it, more than tears, with that report.

Jul. That is no slander, sir, which is a truth, And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander’d it. Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own. Are you at leisure, holy father, now, Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

Nurse. What?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much. Go in; and tell my lady I am gone, Having displeas’d my father, to Laurence’ cell, To make confession, and to be absolv’d.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done.

[Exit.

Jul. Ancient damnation! O, most wicked deed! Is it more sin to wish me thus forewarned, Or to deprive my lord with that same tongue Which she hath praised him with above compare So many thousand times?—Go, counsellor; Thou and my bosome henceforth shall be twain.— I’ll to the friar, to know his remedy; If all else fail, myself have power to die. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now— My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Par. God shield, I should disturb devotion!— Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you: Till then, adieu; and keep this holy kiss. [Exit Par.

Jul. O! shut the door; and when thou hast done Come weep with me; past hope, past cure, past help! [Exit. O Juliet! I already know thy grief; It strains me past the compass of my wit; I hear thou must, and nothing must deprive it, On Thursday next be married to this Count.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hear’st of this, Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it: If in thy wisdom thou canst give no help, Do thou but call my resolution wise, And with this knife I’ll help it presently. [Swooning’s God join’d my heart and Romeo’s, thou our hands; And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal’d, Shall be the label to another deed, Or my true heart with treacherous revolt Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Therefore, out of thy long-experienced time, Give me some present counsel; or, behold, ’Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that, Which the commission of thy years and art Could to no issue of true honour bring. Be not so long to speak; I long to die, [Offers to strik’ If thou what speak’st speak not of remedy. Fri. Hold, daughter! I do spy a kind of hope, Which craves as desperate an execution As that is desperate which we would prevent. If, rather than to marry county Paris, Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself, Then is it likely thou wilt undertake A thing like death to chide away this shame, That cop’st with death himself to scape from it, And, if thou dar’st, I will give thee remedy.

Jul. O! bid me leap, rather than marry Paris, From off the battlements of yonder tower; Or walk in thievish ways; or bid me lurk Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears; Or hide me nightly in a charnel-house, O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones, With reeky shanks, and yellow charless skulls;
Or bid me go into a new-made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;
Things that to hear them told have made me tremble;
And I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unaided wife to my sweet love.

Fri. Hold, then: go home, be merry, give consent
To marry Paris. Wednesday is to-morrow;
To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,
Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:
Take thou this phial, being then in bed,
And this distillèd liquor drink thou off;
When the sharpness of the draught shall run
A cold and drowsy humour; for no pulse
Shall keep his native progress, but surcease:
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou livest;
The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade
To palp'ashen; thy eyes' windows fall,
Like death when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, dep'tvd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark and cold, appear like death:
And then I say, thou shalt no more drink death
Thou shalt continue two and forty hours,
And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.
Now, when the bridgewater in the morning comes
To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then, as the manner of our country is,
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,
Be borne to burial in thy kindred's grave:
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the meantime, against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift;
And hither shall he come, and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame,
If no unconstant toy, nor womanish fear,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, give me! 'O! tell me not of fear.
Fri. Hold; get you gone: be strong and prosperous
In this resolve. I'll send a friar with speed
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength, and strength shall help afford.

Fri. Farewell, dear father. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Capulet’s House.

Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, Nurse, and SERVANTS.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ.—

[Exit Servant.

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.
Serv. You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.

Cap. How canst thou try them so?
Serv. Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone.—

[Exit Servant.

We shall be much unfinish'd for this time.

What, is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence?

Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her: A poesy will-wit'd harlotry it is.

Enter JULIET.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shift with marry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the sin Of disobedient opposition
To you, and your behests; and am enjoin'd
By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here, [Kneeling.
And beg your pardon.—Bidden, I beseech you: Henceforward I am ever ready by your command.

Cap. Send for the County: go tell him of this.
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence' cell:
And gave him what becoming' love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on 't; this is well,—stand up
This as 't should be, do me good—Let me see the County:
Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.
Now, afore God, this is my reverend holy friar.
All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,
To help me sort such needful ornaments
As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

Cap. No. not till Thursday: there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her.—We'll to church to-morrow.

[Exeunt JULIET and Nurse.

Cap. We shall be short in our provision:
'Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush! I will stir about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife.
Go thou to Juliet; help to deck up her:
I'll not to bed to-night;—let me alone;
I'll play the housewife for this once.—What ho!—
They are all forth; well, I will walk myself
To county Paris, to prepare him up
Against to-morrow. My heart is won'drous light,
Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Juliet's Chamber.

Enter JULIET and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best;—but, gentle nurse,
I pray thee leave me to myself to-night;
For I have need of many orisons
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What, are you busy, ho? need you my help?

Jul. No, madam; we have cull'd such necessaries
As are behoveful for our state to-morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you;
For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,
In this so sudden business.

Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.

[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Jul. Farewell!—God knows when we shall meet again.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me.--
Nurse!—What should she do here?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone.
Come, phial,—
What if this mixture do not work at all,
Shall I be married, then, to-morrow morning?—
No, no;—this shall forbid it:—lie there thou there.

[Placing down a Dagger.

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead,
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I fear, it is; and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man:
I will not entertain so bad a thought,—
How if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point.
Shall I not then, be stiffed in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?
Or, if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,—
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies festering in his shroud; where, as they say,
At some hours in the night spirits resort:—
Alack, alack! is it not like, that I,
So early waking.—what with loathsome smells,
And shrieks like mandrakes' torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad;—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environed with all these hideous fears,
And madly play with my forefathers' joints,
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?
O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point.—Stay, Tybalt, stay!—
Romeo! Romeo! Rome!—here's a drink—I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the bed.

SCENE IV.—CAPULET'S Hall.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold; take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pantry.

Enter Capulet.

La. Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd.
The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock.—
Look to the ba'k'd meats, good Angelica:—
Spare not for cost.

Nurse. Go, go, you cot-quisen, go.

Get you to bed; faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.

Cap. No, not a whit. What! I have watch'd ere now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt² in your
But I will watch you from such watching now. [time;[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!—Now, fellow,
What's there?

Enter Servants, with Spits, Logs, and Baskets.

1 Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what
Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 Serv.]
2 Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs.
And never trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit
Cap. 'Mass, and well said; a merry whoreon, ha!
Thou shalt be logger-head. —Good faith! 'tis day:
The County will be here with music straight.

[Music within

For so he said he would.—I hear him near.—
Nurse!—Wife!—what, ho!—what, nurse, what, I say!

Enter Nurse.

Go, waken Juliet: go, and trim her up:
I'll go and chat with Paris. He, make haste,
Make haste; the bridegroom he is come already.
Make haste, I say. [Exit.

SCENE V.—JULIET'S Chamber; JULIET on the Bed.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress!—what, mistress!—Juliet!—fa,
I warrant:
Why, lamb!—why, lady!—die, you slug-a-bed!—
Why, love, I say!—madam! sweet-heart!—thy, bride!—
What! not a word?—You take your pennyworths
Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,
The county Paris hath set up his rest,
That you shall rest but little.—God forgive me,
Marry and amen, how sound is she asleep!
I needs must wake her.—Madam, madam, madam!—
Ay, let the County take you in your bed:
He'll fright you up, i' faith.—Will it not be?
What, drest! and in your clothes! and down again:
I must needs wake you. Lady! lady, lady!—
Alas! alas!—Help! help! help my lady's dead!—
O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!—
Some aqua vitae, ho!—my lord! my lady!

[Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What noise is here?—
Nurse. A lamentable day!
La. Cap. What is the matter?
Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!—
La. Cap. O me! O me!—my child, my only life.
Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!—
Help, help!—call help.

[Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame! bring Juliet forth; her lord is see:
Nurse. She's dead, decease'd; she's dead; alack, to day!

La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead she's dead.

Cap. Ha! let me see her.—Out, alas! she's cold
Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated:
Death lies on her, like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.
Nurse. O lamentable day!—
La. Cap. O woful time!—

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to mass as Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

[Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with Musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?
And go, sir Paris:—every one prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave.
The heavens do low'r upon you, for some ill;
Move them no more, by crossing their high will.

[Exeunt Capulet, Lady Capulet, Paris, and Friar.]

1 Mus. 'Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.

Nurse. Honest good fellows, sh! I put up, put up, for well you know, this is a pitiful case. [Exit Nurse]

1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended Enter Peter.

Pet. Musicians, 0 musicians! "Heart's ease,"
"Heart's ease:" O! an you will have me live, play—
"Heart's ease."

1 Mus. Why "Heart's ease?"

Pet. O, musicians! because my heart itself plays
"My heart is full of woeful play": O! play me some merry dump," to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we: 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not, then?

Mus. No.

Pet. I will, then, give you it soundly.

1 Mus. What will you give us?

Pet. No money, on my faith; but the gleeck: I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then, will I give you the serving-creature.

Pet. Then, will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your palm. I will carry no crotchets: I'll re you, I'll fa you. Do you note me? [Draws his Dagger.]

1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

2 Mus. Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. Then have at you with my wit. I will dry-beat you with my iron wit, and put up my iron dagger.

—Answer me like men:

When griping grief the heart doth wound; 9
And doleful wounds the mind oppress;

Then music, with her silver sound;

Why, "silver sound?" why, "music with her silver sound?"

What say you, Simon Catling?

1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Pet. Thou protest? 10—What say you, Hugh Rebeck?

2 Mus. I say "silver sound," because musicians sound for silver.

Pet. Thou protest too!—What say you, James Soundpost?

3 Mus. 'Faith, I know not what to say.

Pet. O! I cry you mercy; you are the singer: I will say for you. It is "music with her silver sound," because musicians have seldom gold for sounding:—

Then music with her silver sound,
With speedy help doth lend redress.

[Exit.

1 Mus. What a pestilent knave is this same.

2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll be in here; tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner. [Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Mantua. A Street.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering death1 of sleep, My dreams presage some joyful news at hand.2 My bosom’s lord sits lightly3 in his throne; And, all this day, as uncustom’d spirit Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts. I dreamt, my lady came and found me dead; (Strange dream! that gives a dead man leave to think) And breath’d such life with kisses in my lips, That I reviv’d, and was an emperor.

Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess’d,4 When but love’s shadows are so rich in joy?

Enter BALTHASAR.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthasar? Doest thou not bring me letters from the friar?5 How doth my lady? Is my father well? How fares my6 Juliet? That I ask again; For nothing can be ill if she be well.

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill: Her body sleeps in Capulet’s monument. And her immortal part with angels lives. I saw her laid low in her kindred’s vault, And presently took post to tell you. O pardon me for bringing these ill news, Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it e’en so? then, I defy7 you, stars! Thou know’st my lodging: get me ink and paper, And hire post horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. I do beseech you, sir, have patience: Your looks are pale and wild, and do import Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush! thou art deceiv’d8 Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do. Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter; get thee gone.

And hire those horses: I’ll be with thee straight.

[Exit BALTHASAR.

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night. Let’s see for means;—O, mischief! thou art swift9 To enter in the thoughts of desperate men. I do remember an apothecary, And hereabout he dwells, which late I noted In tatter’d weeds, with overbearing brows, Culling of simples: meagre were his looks, Sharp misery had worn him to the bones; And in his needy shop a tortoise hungeth, An alligator stuff’d, and other skins Of ill-shap’d fishes; and about his shelves A beggarly account of empty boxes, Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds, Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of rose, Were thinly scat’terd to make up a show. Noting this penury, to myself I said— An if a man did need a poison now,

Whose sale is present death in Mantua, Here lives a cutiff wretch would sell it him. O! this same thought did but forerun my need, And this same needy man must sell it me. As I remember, this should be the house: Being holiday, the beggar’s shop is shut.— What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man.—I see, that thou art poor; Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have A dram of poison; such soon-spreeding gear As will dispense itself through all the veins, That the life-wearied taker may fall dead; And that the trunk may be discharg’d of breath As violently, as hasty powder b’d Doth hurry from the fatal cannon’s womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua’s law Is death to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness? And fear’st to die? famine is in thy cheeks, Need and oppression starveth in thy eye,10 Contemn and beggar hang on thy back, The world is not thy friend, nor the world’s law: The world affords no law to make thee rich; Then, be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

[Exeunt.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will. Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will, And drink it off: and, if you had the strength Of twenty men, it would despatch you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold; worse poison to most souls, Dougl more murders in this loathsome world, Than these poor compounds that thou mayst not ail: I sell these poison, thou hast sold me none.

Farewell; buy food, and get thyself in flesh— Come, cordial, and not poison, go with me To Juliet’s grave, for there must I use thee. [Exit

SCENE II.—Friar LAURENCE’S Cell.

Enter Friar JOHN.

John. Holy Francisian friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar LAURENCE.

Law. This same should be the voice of friar John— Welcome from Mantua: what says Romee? Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter. John. Going to find a bare-foot brother out, One of our order, to associate me, Here in this city visiting the sick, And finding him, the searchers of the town, Suspecting that we both were in a house Where the infectious pestilence did reign, Seal’d up the doors, and would not let us forth; So that my speed to Mantua there was stay’d.

Law. Who bare my letter, then, to Romee?

1 truth: in f. e.; eye: in quarto, 1597. 2 good event to come: in quarto, 1597. 3 cheerful: in quarto, 1597. 4 This and the next line not in quarto, 1597. 5 As lady my: in later quarto, and folio. 6 In later name of folio. 7 The quarto, 1597, reads: As I do remember, Here dwell a pothecary, whom oft I noted As I pass by, whose needy shop is stufft With beggarly accounts of empty boxes: And in the same as alligator hang’d Old ends of packthread, and cakes of rose, Wherein, by cunning, to make up a show; here’s twenty: in quarto, 1597. 8 poverty: in quarto, 1597. 9 The quarto, 1597, has in place of this, and next line: Upon thy beak hang ragged misery, And starred famine dwellath in thy cheeks.
Scene III.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

June. I could not send thee,—here it is again,— [Giving it.]

More get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Las. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import; and the neglecting it
May do much danger. Friar John, go hence;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

John. Brother, I'll go and bring it.
[Exit.

Las. Now must I to the monument alone.
Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake;
She will beshrew me much, that Romeo
 Hath had no notice of these accidents;
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come:
Poor living corse, clode'd in a dead man's tomb! [Exit.

Scene III.—A Churchyard; in it the Monument
Of the Capulets.

Enter Paris, and his Page, bearing Flowers, and a Torch.

Par. Give me thy torch, boy; hence, and stand
Not put it out, for I would not be seen. [aloof.

And, under yond' yew-trees lay thee all alone,
Lest thine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread,
King base, unfirm with digging up of graves,
But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me,
Is signal that thou hear'st something approach.
I love thee flowers. Do as I bid thee; go.
[Giving a basket.

Page. I am almost afraid to stay alone
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure. [Retires.

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers thy bridal bed I
Woe! thy canopy is dust and stones, [strew.

Which with sweet water nightly I will dew,
Or wanting that with tears distill'd by moans;
The obsequies, that for thee will keep,
Lightly shall be to strew thy grave and weep.

[The Boy whistles.

He boy gives warning something doth approach.

What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
O cross my obsequies, and true love's rite?
What! with a torch?—mufle me, night, a while.
[Retires.

Enter Romeo and Balthasar, with a Torch,
Mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me what thou mattock, and the wrenching iron.
Fold, take this letter: early in the morning
Thee deliver it to my lord and father;
I love thee. Upon thy life I charge thee,
Thou or thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.
Thy signal do I descend into this bed of death
Partly to behold my lady's face;
Ut chiefly to take thence from her dead finger
Precious ring, a ring that I must use
In dear employment. Therefore hence, be gone:
If thou, jealous, dost return to pry
What I farther shall intend to do,
Yet heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint,
And strw this hungry churchyard with thy limbs.
The time and my intents are savage, wild;
More fierce, and more inexorable far,
Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shalt thou show me friendship.—Take thou
That:
[Giving his Purse.

Par. Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow.

Rom. Thou faithful maw, thou wond of death,
Gord with the dearest most in the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open.

[Breaking open the Monument
And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that banish'd haunted Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin,—with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature died,—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.

[Advancing

Stop thou unhallow'd toil, vile Montague.
Can vengeance be pur'd farther than death?
Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must, indeed; and therefore came I hither.
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man;
Fly hence and leave me:—think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee.—I beseech thee, youth,
Put not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury:—O! be gone.
By heaven, I love thee better than myself,
For I come hither armed against myself.
Stay not, be gone:—live, and hereafter say—
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy commiseration,
And apprehend thee for a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then, have at thee,
Boy. [They fight.

Page. O Lord! they fight: I will go call the watch.
[Exit Page.

Par. O! I am slain. [Falls.] If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet.

[Dies.

Rom. In faith, I will.—Let me peruse this face:—
Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris!—
What said my man when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, bearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O! give me thy hand, [Taking it.

One writ with me in sour misfortune's book!
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave,—
A grave? O, no! a lantern, slayer's youth,
For here lies Juliet; and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, bid thou there, by a dead man inter'd;

[Laying Paris in the Monument

How oft, when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry:° which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O! how may I
Call this a lightning?—O, my love! my wife!

Accept this latest favour at my hands,
That the living honored thee, and being dead,
With funeral praises did adorn thy tomb.

Thee I love, and love thee not; but stay thou,
For thou hast pleased thy love above thy life

Not in f. e. °1 Been bliss and pleasant: in quarto, 1597.
Death; that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.---
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O! what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thee in twain,
To tender his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah!—Dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? I will believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous;
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour.
For fear of that I still will stay with thee,
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again: here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids; O! here
Will I set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.—Eyes, look your last:
Arms, take your last embrace; and lips, O you,
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death.—
Come, bitter conduct, come, unsavoury guide!
Thou sordid pilot, now at once on
The dashing rocks thy sea-nick weary bark.
Here's to my love!—[Drinks.] O, true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies near JULIET.]

Enter, at the other End of the Churchyard, Friar Laurence, with a Lantern, Crow, and Spade; and Balthazar following.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night
Have my old feet stumbled at graves?—Who's there?
Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.
Fri. Bist thou here? Yea, I'll tell thee, good my friend,
What torch is yond', that vainly lends his light
To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capulets' monument.
Bal. It doth so, holy air; and there's my master,
One that you love.

Fri. Who is it?

Bal. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he been there?

Bal. Full half an hour.

Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, sir.
My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.

Fri. Stay, then, I'll go alone.—Fear comes upon me
O! much I fear some ill unthriftly thing.
Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.
[Exit.]

Fri. Alack! alack! what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre?—
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolor'd by this place of peace!

[Entering the Monument.]

Romeo! O, pale!—Who else? what, Paris too?

And steep'd in blood?—Ah! what an unkind hour
Is guilty of this lamentable chance!—

The lady stirs.

Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am.---Where is my Romeo?
[Noise within.]

Fri. I hear some noise.—Ladly, come from that source
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.
A greater power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents: come, come, away.

Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too: come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns.
Stay not to question, for the watch is near Come, go, good Juliet.---[Noise again.] I dare not longer stay.

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away.
What's here? a cup, close'd in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end.---
O churl! drink all, and left no friendly drop,
To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips;"
Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative.

[Kisses her.]

Thy lips are warm!

1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy:—which way?
Jul. Yea, noise?—then I'll be brief.—O happy gear!
[Snatching ROMEO'S CLOTH.] This is thy abode; [Stabs himself] there rest; as let me die.
[Exeunt Watch, with the Page of PARIS.]

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch is—burn.

1 Watch. The ground is bloody, search about the churchyard.

Go, some of you; who' er you find, attach. [Exeunt.

Pitiful sight! here lies the County slain:—
And Juliet bleeding; warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain these two days buried.
Go, tell the Prince,—run to the Capulets.
Raise up the Montagues, some others search.—

[Execut other Watchmen.]

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie,
But the true ground of all these piteous woes
We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter some of the Watch, with BALTHAZAR.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man; we found him in the churchyard.

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the Prince saves his bither.

Enter another Watchman, with Friar Laurence.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps.
We took this mattock and this spade from him,
As he was coming from this churchyard side.

1 Watch. A great suspicion: stay the friar too.
Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up,
That calls one person from our morning rest?
Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.
Cap. What should it be, that so shriek abroad?
Some Juliet, and some Paris; and all run
With open outcry toward our monument.
Prince. What fear is this which startles in your ears?

---
1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris alain; And Romeo dead; and Juliet, dead before, Warn and new kill’d.

Prince. Search, seek and know how this foul murder comes.

1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter’d Romeo’s man, With instruments upon them, fit to open These dead men’s tombs.

Cap. O, heaven! — O, wife! look how our daughter bleeds! This dagger hath miss’t en.—for, lo! his house’s empty on the back of Montague, And is mis-shathed in my daughter’s bosom.

La. Cap. O me! this sight of death is as a bell, That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter Montague and others.

Prince. Come, Montague: for thou art early up, To see thy son and heir more early down. Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night; a brief of my son’s exile has stopp’d her breath. What farther woe conspires against mine age?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O thou untaught! what manners is this, To press before thy father to a grave?

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outcry for a while, Till we can clear these ambiguities, And know their spring, their head, their true descent; And then will I be general of your woes, And lead you even to death. Mean time forbear, And let mischance be slave to patience.—Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least, Yet most suspected, as the time and place Do make against me, of this direful murder; And here I stand, both to impeach and purge myself condemned, and myself excuse’d.

Prince. Then, say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath a not so long as is a tedious tale. Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet; And she, there dead, that Romeo’s faithful wife: married them; and their stolen marriage-day Was Tybalt’s dooms-day, whose untimely death banish’d the new-made bridegroom from this city; For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin’d. Soo, to remove that siege of grief from her, Jetroth’d, and would have married her perforce, To county Paris: then, comes she to me, And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means To rid her from this second marriage. In my cell there were she kill herself. Then gave I her, (so tutor’d by my art) A sleeping potion; which so took effect As I intended, for it wrought on her The form of death. Meantime, I write to Romeo, That he should hither come, as this dire night, To help to take her from her borrow’d grave, Being the time the potion’s force should cease: But he bore my letter, friar John, Was stay’d by accident, and yesternight Return’d my letter back. Then, all alone, At the prefixed hour of her waking, Came I to take her from her kindred’s vault, Meaning to keep her clerely at my cell, Till I conveniently could send to Romeo: But, when I came, (some minute ere the time Of her awakening) here untimely lay The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead. She wak’d; and I entreated her come forth, And beat her back with all the tenderest of heaven with patience: But then a noise did scare me from the tomb, And she, too desperate, would not go with me, But (as it seems) did violence on herself. All this I know, and to the marriage Her nurse is privy; and, if aught in this Miscarried by my fault, let my old life Be sacrificed some hour before the time, Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.— Where’s Romeo’s man? what can he say in this?

Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet’s death, And then in post he came from Mantua, To this same place, to this same monument. This letter he early bid me give his father; And threaten’d me with death, going in the vault, If I departed not, and left him there.

Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.— Where is the county’s page, that rais’d the watch?— Sirrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady’s grave And bid me stand aloof, and so did I: Anon, comes one with light to ope the tomb, And, by and by, my master drew on him; And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter doth make good the friar’s words, Their course of love, the tidings of her death; And here he writes, that he did buy a poison Of a poor pothecary; and therewithal Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.— Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague! See, what a scourge is laid upon your hate, That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love; And I, for winking at your discords too, Have lost a brace of kinmen:—all are punish’d.

Cap. O, brother Montague! give me thy hand: This is my daughter’s jointure; for no more

[They shake hands.

Mon. Can I demand. But I can give thee more; For I will raise her statue in pure gold, That, while Verona by that name is known, There shall no figure at such rate be set, As that of fair and faithful Juliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie; Poor sacrifices of our enmity.

Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it brings, The sun for sorrow will not show his head. Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things; Some shall be pardon’d, and some punished: For never was a story of more woe, Than this of Juliet and her Romeo.

[Exeunt.

1 Shaks. 2 And it is stathed in our daughter’s breast: in quarto, 1597. 3 The quarto, 1597, adds: And young Benvolio is dessayed. 4 outrage: in f. e. 5 in quarto, 1597: And let us seek to find the authors out. 6 Of such a heinous and wilde seen mischance. 7 The quarto, 1597, has in place of this and the next four lines: Where are these enmities? See what base hath done! 8 Net in i. o. true: in f. e. 9 in quarto, 1597: There shall no statue at such price be set, As that of Romeo and loved Juliet. 10 gloomy: in quarto, 1597.

ACT I.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several Doors.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you’re well.

Poet. Have you not seen you long. How goes the world there?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that’s well known.

But what particular rarity? what strange
Which manifold record not matches? See,
Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power
Hath conjur’d to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both: th’other’s a jeweller.

Mer. O! ’tis a worthy lord.

Jew. Nay, that’s most fine.

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath’d, as it were,
To an unirable and continuous goodness.

He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here—[showing it]

Mer. O! pray, let’s see it. For the lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate; but, for that—

Poet. ‘Tis when we for recompense have pris’d the vile,

It stains the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good.

Mer. ’Tis a good form.

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look ye.

Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication.

Poet. A thing slipp’d idly from me.

Our poesy is as a gum, which issues
From whence ’t is nourish’d: the fire, the mint
Shows not, till it be struck: our gentle flame

Provokes itself, and, like the current, slips
Each bound it chases. What have you there?

Pain. A picture, sir.—When comes your bountiful Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.

Let’s see your piece.

Pain. ’Tis a good piece. [showing it]

Poet. So ’tis: it cometh off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable! How this grace
Speaks his own standing; what a mental power
This eye shoots forth; how big imagination
Moves in this lip to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

Pain. Is it a pretty mocking of the life.

Here is a touch; is it good?

Poet. I’ll say of it,

It tutors nature: artificial strife.

Lives in these looks, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, who pass over the Stage.

Pain. How this lord is follow’d!

Poet. The senators of Athens:—happy men!

Pain. Look, more!

Poet. You see this confluence, this great foot of visitors.

I have in this rough work shap’d out a man.
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug.

With amnest entertainment: my free drift
Hails not particularly, but moves itself.

In a wide sea of verse ‘tis no level’d malice
Infests one comma in the course I hold,

But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,

Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I will unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,
(As well of gift and slippery creatures, as

M schöne and austere quality) tender down their services to lord Timon: his large fortune, upon his good and gracious nature hinging, indebted, and properties to his love and tendance,
all sorts of hearts; yes, from the glass-look'd flatterer for Aesoparatius, that few things loves better than to abhor himself: even he drops down the knee before him, and returns in peace
most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill rested Fortune to be throw'd; the base o' the mount a rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures, that labour on the bosom of this sphere to propagate their states; amongst them all, whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
he do I personate of lord Timon's frame;
whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her,
whose present grace to present slaves and servants translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope
this throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks.
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
bowing his head against the steepy mount,
'to climb his happiness, would be well express'd
in our condition.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on.
All these which were his fellows but of late,
Some better than his value) on the moment below his strides; his lobbies fill with tendance, taint sacrificial whisperings in his ear, dake sacred even his stirrup, and through him brink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood, turns down her late belov'd, all his dependants, whose labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
ot one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
that thousand moral paintings I can show,
that shall demonstrate these quick blows of Fortune's dore pregnant than words. Yet you do well,
'to show lord Timon that: mean eyes have seen
the foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, attended; the Servant of Ventidius talking with him.

Tim. Prison'd is he, say you?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;
his means most short, his creditors most strait:
our honourable letter he desires to those have shut him up; which failing, periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well; are not of that feather, to shake off my friend when he most needs me. I do know him a gentleman that well deserves a help, which shall he have? I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Tim. Command me to him: I will send his ransom;
and, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me.—
I is not enough to help the feeble up,
but to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely. good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servent nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: what of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attend he here, or no?—Lucilius!

Enter Lucilius.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service. [creature.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy by night frequents my house. I am a man that from my first have been inclin'd to thrive, and my estate deserves an heir, more rais'd than one which holds a treacher.

Tim. What? what farther?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I; no kin else, on whom I may confey what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride, and I have bred her at my dearest cost in qualities of the best. This man of thine Attempts her love: I pray thee, noble lord, join with me to forbid him her resort;
myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards hith in itself;
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:
our own precedent passions do instruct us
what levity's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord; and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choose mine heir from forth the beggars of the world, and dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd, if she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long:
To build his fortune I will strain a little,
for 't is a bond in men. Give him thy daughter;
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
and make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord, pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise
Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship. Never may that state or fortune fall into my keeping, which is not ow'd to you!

[Exit Lucilius and old Athenian.

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship.
Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:
go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The painting is almost the natural man;
for since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work, and you shall find, I like it: wait attendance.
Till you hear farther from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you! Tim. Well fare you, gentleman: give me your hand;
we must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord, displeasure?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.
If I should pay you for 't as 't is extoll'd,
it would unclaw me quite.

Jew. My lord, 't is rated as those which sell would give: but you well know
Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters. Believe 't, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by the wearing it.
Tim. Well mock'd.
Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
Which all men speak with him. [tongue.
Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid?
Enter APENANTUS.
Jev. We'll bear, with your lordship.
Mer. He'll spare none.
Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus.
Apen. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow;
when thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.
Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou know'st them not.
Apen. Are they not Athenians?
Tim. Yes.
Apen. Then I repent not.
Jev. You know me, Apemantus.
Apen. Thou know'st, I do; I call'd thee by thy name.
Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.
Apen. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like
Timon.
Tim. Whither art going?
Apen. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.
Tim. That's a deed thou 'lt die for.
Apen. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.
Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?
Apen. The best, for the innocence.
Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it?
Apen. He wrought better that made the painter;
and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.
Pain. Y' are a dog.
Apen. Thy mother's of my generation: what's she,
if I be a dog?
Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?
Apen. No; I eat not lords.
Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.
Apen. O! they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.
Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.
Apen. So thou apprehend'st it. Take it for thy labour.
Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?
Apen. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.
Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?
Apen. Not worth my thinking. —How now, poet!
Pet. How now, philosopher!
Apen. Thou liest.
Pet. Art not one?
Apen. Yes.
Pet. Then, I lie not.
Apen. Art not a poet?
Pet. Yes.
Apen. Then, thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.
Pet. That's not feign'd; he is so.
Apen. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: he that loves to be flattered is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!
Tim. What wouldst thou then, Apemantus?
Apen. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.
Tim. What, thyself?
Apen. Ay.
Tim. Wherefore?
Apen. That I had so hungry a wish to be a lord.—
Art not thou a merchant?
Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apen. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!
Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.
Apen. Traffic's thy god; and thy god confound the Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.
Tim. What trumpet's that?
Serv. 'T is Alcibiades, and
Some twenty horse, all of companionship.
Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to...
[Exeunt some Attendants.
You must needs dine with me. —Go not you hence,
Till I have thank'd you; and when dinner's done,
Show me this piece. —I am joyful of your sights.—
Enter Alcibiades, with his Company.
Most welcome, sir!
Apen. So, so, there.—
Aches contract and starve your supple joints! —
That there should be small love 'mongst these two knaves,
And all this courtesy. The strain of man's bred is to baboon and monkey.
Alicib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feel
Most hungerily on your sight.
Tim. Right welcome, sir:—
Ere we depart, we 'll share a bounteous time
In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.
[Exeunt all but Apemantus.

Enter two Lords.
1 Lord. What time o' day is 't, Apemantus?
2 Lord. That time serves still.
Apen. The more accursed thou, that still erupt'st
2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
Apen. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine fill fools.
2 Lord. Fare thee well; fare thee well.
Apen. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.
2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?
Apen. Shouldst have kept one thyself, for I was to give thee none.
1 Lord. Hang thyself.
Apen. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: nay thy requests to thy friend.
2 Lord. Away, unanswerable dog, or I'll spank the hence.
Apen. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the are.[Ext
1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we
And taste lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes
The very heart of kindness.
2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutos, the god of gold.
Is but his steward: no meed but he repays
Sevenfold above itself: no gift to him,
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.
1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,
That ever govern'd man.
2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we?
2 Lord. I'll keep you company.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud. Music. A great banquet ord in; FLAVIUS and others attending: then, enter Timo, ALCIBIADES, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SENOFRINTS, an other Athenian Senators, with VERTIUS, who Timon exclaimed from prison, and Attendants: the comes, dropping after all, APENANTUS, dauntlessly, like himself.
Ven. Most honour'd Timon, it hath pleased the gods to remember
SCENE II.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

My father's age, and call him to long peace.
He is gone happy, and hast left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents,
Doubled with thanks and service, from whose help
I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O! by no means,
Honest Venitius: you mistake my love.
I gave it freely ever; and there's none
Can truly say, he gives, if he receives.
Our better plays at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: faults that are rich are fair.
Tim. A noble spirit!

Tim. Nay, my lords,
Ceremony was but devil'd at first,
To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Receasing goodness, sorry ere 't is shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray, sit: more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confesst it.
Aepm. Have I confess'd it? hang'd it, have you not?
Tim. O, Aepamantus!—you are welcome.

Aepm. No, you shall not make me welcome:
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors. [there

Tim. Fie! thou 'rt a churl: you have got a humour
Does not become a man: 't is much to blame.
They say, my lords, 5 ara furo brevis est,
But yond' man is ever 6 angry.
Go, let him have a table by himself;
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for't, indeed.
Aepm. Let me stay at thine apperit, 7 Timon:
I come to observe: I give thee warning on 't.
Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian, therefore, welcome. I myself would have no power;
prythee, let my meat make thee silent.

Aepm. I scorn thy meat; 't would choke me, for
I should ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods! what a number of men eat Timon, and he sees them not! A grief vives me, to see so many dip their meat in one man's blood;
and all the madness is, he cheers them up too.
I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:
Methinks, they should invite them without knives,
Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.
There's much example for 't; the fellow, that sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him: it has been proved. If I were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals.
Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous notes:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats.
Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.
Aepm. Flow this way? A brave fellow!—he keeps his tides well. Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon.
Here's that, which is too weak to be a fire, 8
Honest water, which ne'er left man? the mire:
This and my food are equals, there's no odds;
Fears are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

AEPAMANTUS' GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man, but myself.
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond:
Or a harlot for her weeping;
Or a dog that seems a sleeping;

Or a keeper with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amen. So fall to: 9
Rich men sit, and I eat root.

Eats and drinks

Much good don't thy good heart, Aepamantus!
Tim. Captain Alciabiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alci. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.
Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alci. So they were bleeding new, my lord, there's no meat like 'em: I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Aepm. 'Would all those flatterers were thin enemies
then, that then thou mightst kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeal, we should think our-ourselves for ever perfect.

Tim. O! no doubt, my good friends; but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: how had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods! think I, what need we have any friends, if we should ne'er have need of 'em? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for ' em; and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves.

Aepm. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits; and what better or properer can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O! what a precious comfort
't is, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes. O joy, e'en made away ere 't can be born! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks:
forget their faults, I drink to you.

Aepm. Thou wouldst to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that instant, like a babe, sprung up.
Aepm. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard,

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.
Aepm. Much! [Tucket sounded.

Tim. What means that trump?—How now!

Enter a SERVANT.

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies! What are their wills?
Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office to signify their pleasures.
Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon; and to all
That of his bounty's taste!—The five best senses
Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely
To gratulate thy plentiful bosom. The ear,
Taste, touch, smell, [please'd from thy table rise;
They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They're welcome all. Let them have kind admittance:
Music, make their welcome.

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how amply y' are belov'd.
Music. Re-enter Cupid, with a masque of Ladies as Amazons, with Lutes in their Hands, dancing, and playing.

Act 1

Timon of Athens

Aper. Hey day! what a sweep of vanity comes this way! They dance: they are mad women. Like madness is the glory of this life, As this pomp shows to a little oil, and root. We make ourselves foils, to dispore ourselves; And spend our flatteries, to drink those men, Upon whose age we void it up again, With poisonous spit, and envy. Who lives, that's not depraved, or depraves? Who dies, that bears not one spurn to their graves Of their friends' gift? I should fear, those, that dance before me now, Would one day stamp upon me: 't has been done. Men shut their doors against the setting sun.
The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring of Timon; and, to show their loves, each singes out an Amazon, and all dance, Men with Women, a lofty Strain or two to the Hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies, Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, Which was not half so beautiful and kind: You have added worth unto 't, and lustre, And entertain'd me with mine own device; I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take me ever at the best.

Aper. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet Attends you: please you to dispose yourselves. All Lord. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt CUPID AND LADIES.]

Tim. Flavius!
Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord. [Aside.] More jewels yet! There is no crossing him in his humour; Else I should tell him,—well,—'t faith, I should, When all 's spent he 'd be cross'd then: and he could, 'Tis pity bounty had not eyes behind, That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.

[Exit, and returns with the Casket.]

1 Lord. Where be our men?
Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses!

Tim. O, my friends! I have one word to say to you. Look you, my good lord, I must entreat you, honour me so much, As to advance this jewel; accept it and wear it, Kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour, Vouchsafe me a word: it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee. I pr'ythee, let's be provided to show them entertainment. Flav. I scarce know how.

Enter another Servant.

Serv. May it please your honour, lord Lucius, Out of his free love, hath presented to you Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents Enter a third Servant.

Be worthily entertain'd,—How now! what news?

Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entertains your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd, Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to? He commands us to provide, and give great gifts, And all out of an empty offer.

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this, To show him what a beggar his heart is, Being of no power to make his wishes good, His promises fly so beyond his state, That what he speaks is all in debt; he owes For every word: he is so kind, that he now Pays interest for 't; his land's put to their book. Well, would I were gently put out of office, Before I were for'd out! Happier is he that has no friend to feed Than such as do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord.

Tim. You do yourselves Much wrong: you bait too much of your own men. Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I shall receive it.

3 Lord. O! he is the very soul of bounty.

Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave Good words the other day of a day courser I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.

2 Lord. O! I beseech you, pardon me! my lord, i that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord: I know a man Can justly praise, but what he does affect: I weigh my friend's affection with mine own; I'll tell you true. I'll call to you.

All Lords. O! none so welcome.

Tim. I take all, and your several visitations, So kind to heart, 't is not enough to give: Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friend, And ne'er be weary. Aleciades, Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich: It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living is 'mongst the dead, and all the lands thou hast Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcibi. Ay, defil'd land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—Tim. And so Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endeard,—Tim. All to you.—Lights! more lights!

1 Lord. The best of happiness, Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon.

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt AELCIABIDES, LORDS, &c.

Aper. What a coil's here! Serving of becks, and jutting out of bums! I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of drear. Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs. Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on courtiers.

Tim. Now, Apermentus, if thou wert not sues, I'd be good to thee.

Aper. I'll nothing; for if I should be brill too, there would be none left to rail upon thee, and then thou wouldest sin the faster. Thou giv'st so less Timon, I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly: what need these feasts, poms, and vain glory!
TITON OF ATHENS.

SCENE II.

Tim. Nay, an you begin to rail on society once, I am sworn not to give regard to you. Farewell; and come with better music.

[Exit.]

Aepm. So;—thou will not hear me now;—

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter A Senator, with Papers in his Hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore
He owes nine thousand, besides my former sum,
Which makes it five-and-twenty—Still in motion Of racing waste? It cannot hold; it will not.
If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog cooks gold:
If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon;
Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me straight
A stable o' horses. No porter at his gate;
But rather one that smiles, and still invites
All that pass by. It cannot hold: no reason
Can sound his state in safety. Caphis, ho!

Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir: what is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord Timon:
Importune him for my moneys; be notcess'd
With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—
"Command me to your master"—and the cap
Plays in the right hand, thus:—but tell him, sирrah,
My uses cry to me. I must serve my turn
Out of mine own: his days and times are past,
And my reliances on his fracted dates.
Have smit my credit. I love, and honour him,
But must not break my back to heal his finger.
Immediate are my needs; and my relief
Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Get you gone:
Put on a most importunate aspect,
A visage of demand; for, I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. Ay, go, sir:—Take the bonds along with you,
And have the dates in compt.

Caph. I will, sir.

Sen. Go. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with many Bills in his Hand.

Flavius. No care, no stop, the senseless of expense,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
For cease his flow of riot; he wants no account
How things go from him; no reserve; no care
That shall be done? He will not hear, till feel must be round with him, now he comes from hunting,
He, fie, fie, fie!—

Enter CAPHIS, and the Servants of ISIDORE and VARRO.

Caph. Good even, Varro. What! you come for money?
Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

A pem. No; 'tis to thyself.—Come away. [To the Fool.

Ind. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

A pem. No, thou stand'st single; thou'rt not on him yet.

Caph. Where's 's fool now?

A pem. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues, and usurpers' men; bawds between gold and want.

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

A pem. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

A pem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool. How does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would, we could see you at Corinth!

A pem. Good: gramercy.

Enter Page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain! what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apemantus?

A pem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pr'ythee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters: I know not which is which.

A pem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

A pem. There will little learning die, then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alebiades: Go: thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not; I am gone.

A pem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

A pem. If Timon stay at home,—You three serve three usurers.

All Serv. I would they served us.

A pem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merrily; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

A pem. Do it, then, that we may account thee a whore-master, and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whore-master, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime like a lawyer; sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one. He is very often like a knight; and generally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much 'solery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.
Scene I. Timon of Athens. 688
To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart, if I would broach the vessels of my love, and try the argument of heart's by borrowing, men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use, as I can bid thee speak.

Flas. Assurance bless your thoughts! that account them blessings: for by these shall I try friends. You shall perceive how you mistake my fortunes: I am wealthy in my friends. Within there!—Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,
Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You, to lord Lucius;—to lord Lucius;—to lord Lucius;—I hunted with his honour to-day;—you, to Sempronius. Command me to their loves; and, I am proud, say, that my occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flas. As you have said, my lord.

Flas. Lord Lucius, and Lucullus? Humph! Tim. Go you, sir, to Another Serv. to the senators, (Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have observed this bearing) bid 'em send o' the instant A thousand talents to me.

Flas. I have been bold, (For that I knew it the most general way) To them to use your signet, and your name; But they do shake their heads, and I am here No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can't be?

Flas. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at full, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable, But yet they could have wish'd—they know not— Something hath been amiss—a noble nature May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity. —And so, intending other serious matters, After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions, With certain half-caps, and cold-moving nods, They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!—Pr'ythee, man, look cheerly; these old fellows have their ingratitude in them hereditary: Their blood is ca'd, 'tis cold: it seldom flows; 'tis lack of kindly warmth they are not kind, and nature, as it grows again toward earth, Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy. —Go to Ventidius,—[To a Serv.] Pr'ythee, [To Flavius] be not sad;

Thou art true, and honest: ingeniously I speak, No blame belongs to thee.—[To Serv.] Ventidius lately Buried his father; by whose death, he's stepp'd Into a great estate: when he was poor, Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends, I clear'd him with five talents: greet him from me; Bid him suppose some good necessity Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd With those five talents:—that had, [To Flav.] give it to these fellows
To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak, or think, That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends can sink.

Flas. I would, I could not think it; that thought is bounty's foe:
Being free itself, it thinks all others so. [Exit.]

ACT III.

Scene I.—The Same. A Room in Lucullus's House.

Flaminius waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flas. I thank you, sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night.—Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine. —[Exit Servant.] And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master? Flas. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir. And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminia?

Flas. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir, which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have lined with him, and told him on't; and come again to supper to him of purpose to have him spend less, and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I have told him on't; but I could ne'er get him from it.

Re-enter Servant with Wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flas. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towards prompt spirit, give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and cannot use the time well, if the time use thee well; good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who exits.]—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise, and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares for thee: good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well. —[Giving money.]

Flas. Is't possible, the world should so much differ, And we alive that liv'd? Fly, damned baseness, To him that worships thee. [Throwing the money away.]

Lucul. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit Lucullus us.

Flas. May these add to the number that may serve thee! Let molten coin be thy damnation, Thou disease of a friend, and not himself! [Exeunt.]
TimoN OF Athens.

Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
As turns in less than two nights? O you gods! I feel my master's passion. This slave Unto his honour has my lord's meat in him: Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment, When he is turn'd to poison? O! may diseases only work upon't,
And, when he's sick to death, let not that part of nature, Which my lord paid for, be of any power To expel sickness, but prolong his hour! [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Public Place.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who? the lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

Str. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours: now lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie! no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

Str. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents: nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

Str. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man? there was very little honour showed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him, and sent to me, I should never have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter Servilius.

Serv. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord.—

[To Lucius.

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: commend me to thy honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Serv. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord, he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, thickest thou? And what has he sent now?

Serv. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with five hundred talents.

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me: he cannot want five hundred talents.

Serv. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous, I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Serv. Upon my soul, 't is true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to dishonour myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour!—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do: the more beast I, I say.—I was sending to use lord Timon myself; these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope, his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind:—and tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Serv. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I'll look you out a good turn, Servilius.—

[Exit Servilius.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed; And he that's once denied will hardly speed.

[Exit Lucius.

1 Str. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Str. Ay, too well.

1 Str. Why this Is the world's soul; and just of the same piece Is every flatterer's port. Who can call him His friend, that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse, Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: he ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet, (O, see the monstrousness of man, When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!) He does deny him, in respect of his, What charitable men afford to beggars.

2 Str. Religion groans at it.

1 Str. For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me, To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation, And the best half should have returned to him, So much I love his heart. But I perceive, M'an must learn now with pity to dispense: For policy sits above conscience. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.—A Room in Sempronius's House.

Enter Sempronius, and a Servant of Timon's.

Serv. Must he needs trouble me in't, humph! 'bove all others? He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison: all these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord, They have all been touch'd, and found base metal; For they have all denied him.

Serv. How! have they denied him? Have Ventidius and Lucullus denied him, And does he send to me? Three? humph! It shows but little love or judgment in him: Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians, Thrive! give him over: must I take the cure upon me? He has much disgra'd me in't: I am angry at him. That might have known my place. I see no sense for't. But his occasions might have won'd me first; For, in my conscience, I was the first man That e'er received gift from him: And does he think so backwardly of me now, That I'll require it last? No: so it may prove An argument of laughter to the rest, And amongst lords I be thought a fool. I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum, He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake.

SCENE IV.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

TIT. One of lord Timon's men.
Luc. Serv. Flaminius! Sir, a word. Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?
Flam. No, indeed, he is not.
TIT. We attend his lordship: pray, signify so much.
Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows, you are too diligent.
[Exit FLAMINIANUS.

Enter FLAVIUS in a Cloak, muffled.
Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his Steward muffled so?
He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.
Tit. Do you hear, sir?
1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—
Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?
Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.
Flav. Ay, if money were as certain as your waiting,
'Twere sure enough. Why then prefer'd you not
Your sums and bills, when your false masters ate
Of my lord's meat? Then, they could smile, and fawn
Upon his debts, and take down the interest
Into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves but Wrong.
To stir me up; let me pass quietly:
Believe 't, my lord and I have made an end:
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.
Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.
Flav. If 't will not serve,
'T is not so base as you; for you serve knaves. [Exit.
1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier'd worship matter?
2 Var. Serv. No matter what: he's poor and that's a revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILLIUS.

Tit. 0! here's Servillius; now shall we know some answer.
Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair
Some other hour, I should derive much from 't; 't, or, take 't of my soul, my lord, I know wondrously discontented. His comfortable temper has forsaken him he's much out of health, and keeps his chamber.
Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not sick
And if he be so far beyond his health, METHIUS, he should the sooner pay his debts, and make a clear way to the gods.
Ser. Good gods!
Tit. We cannot take this for an answer, sir.
Flam. [Within] Servillius, help—my lord! my lord! Enter Timon, in a rage; FLAMINIANUS, following.
Tim. What! are my doors oppos'd against my passage? Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?
The place which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?
Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.
Tit. My lord, here is my bill.
Luc. Serv. Here's mine.
Hor. Serv. Alas! my lord.
Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.
Phi. All our bills.
Tim. Knock me down with 'em; cleave me to the girdle.
Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,—
Tim. Cut my heart in sums.
Tit. Mine, fifty talents.
Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that.—

What yours?—and yours?

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me; and the gods fall upon you!—[Exit.

Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money; these debts may well be called deepera one for a madman owes 'em.'—[Exeunt.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves:

Creditors?—devils!

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so.—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fifty? Go bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:
I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord!

You only speak from your distracted soul:
There is not so much left to furnish out
A moderate table.

Tim. 'tis not in thy care: go,
I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide
Of knives once more; my cook and I will provide.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Senate-House.

The Senate sitting. Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to 't: the fault's bloody; 't is necessary he should die.

Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine; who, in hot blood,
Hath steep'd it into the law, which is past depth
To those that without heed do plunge into 't.

He is a man, setting his fault aside,
Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice;
(An honour in him which buys out his fault)
But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,
Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion
He did repro've his anger, ere 't was spent,
As if he had but mov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paroxysm,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:
Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring manslaughter into form, and set quarrelling
Upon the head of value; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born.

He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs
His outside; to wear them like his raiment, carelessly,

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,
What folly 't is to hazard life for ill?

Alcib. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear
To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then under favour, pardon me,
If I speak like a captain.

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threats? sleep upon 't,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats,
Without repugnany? if there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we Abroad? why then, women are more valiant,
That stay at home, if, in bearing carry it,
And the ass more capitu than the lion; the fellow,
Loaden with irons, wiser than the judge,
If wisdom be in suffering. O, my lords!
As you are great, be pitifully good:
Who dare condemn rashness in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gout;
But in defence, by mercy, 't is most just.

To be in anger, is impiety;
But who is man, that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain? his services are

At Lacedæmon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, say's my lords, he has done fair service,
And slain in fight many of your enemies.

How full of valour did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds:

2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em,

He's a sworn rioter: he has a sin, that often
Owns him, and takes his valour prisoner.

Were there no foes, that were itself enough
To overcome him; in that beastly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions. 'T is infer'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.

My lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arm might purchase his own time.
And be in debt to none, yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both:
And for, I know, your reverend ages love
Security, I'll lay my victories, all
My honour to you, upon his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receive it in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law: he dies; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure. Friend, or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How!

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen. What?

Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me:
It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue, and be denied such common grace.

My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?

SCENE VI.—A Banquet-hall in Timon’s House.

Mus. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several Doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.
2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered. I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so. He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here’s so. What would he have borrowed of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?

2 Lord. He sent to me, sir.—Here he comes.

Enter Timon, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both:—And how fare you? 1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willingly, than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter; such summer-birds are men. [To them.] Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay, feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly o’ the trumpet’s sound; we shall do’t presently.

1 Lord. I hope, it remaining not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O! sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah! my good friend, what cheer?

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e’en sick of shame that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on’t, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,— Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance.

—Come, bring in all together.

[To the Servants.]

2 Lord. All covered dishes!

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

2 Lord. Doubt not that, if money, and the season can yield it.

1 Lord. How do you? What’s the news?

3 Lord. Alebiades is banished: hear you of it?

1 & 2 Lord. Alebiades banished!

3 Lord. ’Tis so; be sure of it.

1 Lord. How? how?

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

3 Lord. I will tell you more anon. Here’s a noble feast toward.

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will ‘t hold? will ‘t hold?

2 Lord. It does; but time will show.

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

"You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts make yourselves praised, but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another; for, were your goheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved, more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are.—The rest of your faces, O gods! the senators of Athens, together with the common folk of people,—what is amis in them, you gods make suitable for destruction. For these, my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome."

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The Dishes uncovered are full of warm water. Some speak. What does his lordship mean? Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never behold.

You knot of mouth-friends! smoke, and lake-warm water In your perfection. This is Timon’s last; Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces. [Throwing water in their faces. Your reeking villainy. Live loath’d and long, Most smiling, smooth, detected parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears; You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time’s flies, Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks! Of man, and beast, the infinite malady Crust you quite o’er!—What! dost thou go? Soft, take thy physic first—they too,—and thou:— [Throws the Dishes at them, and drives them out.

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.— What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast,

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords!
2 Lord. Know you the quality of lord Timon’s fury?
3 Lord. Push! did you see my cap?
4 Lord. I have lost my gown.
3 Lord. He’s but a mad lord, and nought but humour aways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat:—did you see my cap?
4 Lord. Did you see my cap?
2 Lord. Here’s it is.
4 Lord. Here lies my gown.
1 Lord. Let’s make no stay.
2 Lord. Lord Timon’s mad.
3 Lord. I feel ’t upon my bones.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth,
And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent;
Obedience fail in children! slaves, and fools,
Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench,
And minister in their steads! to general filths
Convert o’ the instant green virginity!
Do ’t in your parents’ eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast;
Rather than render back, out with your knives,
And cut your trusters’ throats! bound servants, steal!
Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law. Maid, to thy master’s bed;
Thy mistress is o’ the brothel! son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin’d orutch from thy old limping sire,
With it beat out his brains! piety, and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries,
And let confusion live!—Plagueus, incident to men,
Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciacics,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth,
That ’gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot! itchess, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and their crop
Be general leprosy! breath infect breath,
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison! Nothing I’ll bear from thee,
But nakedness, thou detestable town.

[Casting away his Clothes.

Take thou that too, with multiplying bans,
Timon will to the woods; where he shall find
Th’ unkindest beast more kinder than mankind.
The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all) The Athenians, both within and out that wall! And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
To the whole race of mankind, high, and low!
Amen. [Exit

SCENE II.—A Room in Timon’s House.

Enter Flavius, with two or three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward! where’s our master?
Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?
Flav. Alack! my fellows, what should I say to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,

1. Not in f. e. 2. or: in f. e. 3. The words, “and revive,” are not in f. e. 4. all what state compounds: in f. e. 5. Disposition

I am as poor as you.
1 Serv. Such a house broke!
So noble a master fallen! All gone, and not
One friend to take his fortune by the arm,
And go along with him!
2 Serv. As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave,
So his familiars to his buried fortunes
Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick’d; and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shamed poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin’d house.
3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon’s livery,
That see I by our faces: we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow. Leak’d is our bark;
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I’ll share amongst you.
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon’s sake,
Let’s yet be fellows; let’s shake our heads, and say,
As ’t were a knell unto our master’s fortunes,
“We have seen better days.” Let each take some: [Giving them money
Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[They embrace, and part several ways.

O, the fierce wrathfulness that glory brings us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt?
Who’d be so mock’d with glory as
To live but in a dream of friendship? and revive
To have his pomp, and all state comprehends,
But only painted, like his vanish’d friends?
Poor honest lord! brought low by his own heart;
Undone by goodness. Strange, unusual blood.
When man’s worst sin is, he does too much good!
Who, then, dares to be half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.
My dearest lord,—bless’d, to be most acur’d,
Rich, only to be wretched,—thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord! He’s flung in rage from this ingrateful seat
Of monstrous friends:
Nor hath he with him to supply his ingrate,
Or that which can command it.
I’ll follow, and inquire him out:
I’ll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold I’ll be his steward still.

[Exeunt

Findings:
- Timon is in a state of despair.
- He has lost his wealth and is now in debt.
- Timon's friends have abandoned him.
- Timon has given away all his possessions.
- Timon is now in the woods, planning to bring disaster upon the Athenians.
-Flavius is urging Timon to stay and help them.
Timo. I know thee too; and more, than that: I know thee,
I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules:
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel:
Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubins look
Phry. Thy lips rot off!
Timo. I will not kiss thee; then, the rot returns
To thine own lips again.
Alci. How came the noble Timo to this change?
Timo. As the moon does, by wanting light to give
But then, renew, I could not, like the moon;
There were no sums to borrow of.
Alci. Noble Timo,
What friendship may I do thee?
Timo. None, but to Maintain my opinion.
Alci. What is it, Timo?
Timo. Promise me friendship, but perform none: if thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man!
Alci. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.
Timo. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.
Alci. I see them now; then was a blessed time.
Timo. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.
Timon. Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardfully?
Timo. Art thou Timandra?
Timon. Yes.
Timo. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use
thee:
Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves
For tubs, and baths; bring down rose-cheeked youth
To the tub-fast, and the diet.
Timon. Hang thee, monster!
Alci. Pardon him, sweet Timandra, for his wife
Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.—
I have had but little gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band: I have heard and griev'd,
How cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgot thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.—
Timo. I pr'ythee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.
Alci. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
Timo. How Jost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?
I had rather be alone.
Alci. Why, fare thee well:
Here is some gold for thee.
Timo. Keep it, I cannot eat it,
Alci. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,— Timo. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?
Alci. Ay Timon, and have cause.
Timo. The gods confound them all in thy conquest.
And thee after, when thou hast conquered:
Alci. Why me, Timon?
Timo. That, by killing of villains
Thou wast born to conquer my country.
Put up thy gold: go on.—here's gold,—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, who
Will o'er some high—r'd city hang his poison
In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one.
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer. Strike me the counterfeit matron; It is her habit only that is honest, Herself's a bawd. Let not the virgin's cheek Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milk-paps, That through the window-bare bosom at men's eyes, Are not within the leaf of pity writ, But set them down horrible traitors. Spare not the babe, Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their mercy: Think it a bastard, whom the oracle Hath doubtfully pronounced th' throat shall cut, And mine it was remove; swear against objects; 1 Put armour on thine ears, and on thine eyes, Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babies, Nor sight of priests, in holy vestments bleeding, Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers: 2

[Throwing it.]

Make large confusion; and thy fury spent, Confounded be thyself! Speak not; be gone. Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me, Not all thy counsel. Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee? Phr. & Timan. Give us some gold, good Timon: hast thou more? Tim. Enough to make a whore forsake her trade, And to make whores abhor 3'd. Hold up, you sluts, Your sprons mountant: you are not oathable,— Although I know, you'll swear, terribly swear, Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agoes, The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths, I'll trust to your conditions: be whores still; And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you, Be strong in whore; allure him, burn him up; Let your close fire predominate his smoke, And be no turncoats. Yet may your pains, six months, Be quite contrary: and thatch your poor thin roofs With burdens of the dead,—some that were hang'd, No matter,—wear them, betray with them: whom still; Paint till a horse may mire upon your face: A pox of wrinkles! Phry. & Timan. Well, more gold.—What then?—Believe 't, that we'll do any thing for gold. Tim. Consumptions sow In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shins, And mar men's spurring. Crash the lawyer's voice, That he may never more false title plead, Nor sound his quillet shrilly: hoar the damen, That scolds against the quality of flesh, And not believes himself: down with the nose, Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away Of him, that his particular to foresee, Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate ruffians bald; And let the unsavour'd braggets of the war Derive some pain from you. Plague all, That your activity may defeat and quell The source of all erection.—There's more gold: 4

[Throwing it.] Do you damn others, and let this damn you, And ditches grave you all! Phr. & Timan. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon. Tim. More whore, more mischief first: I have given you earnest. Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens! Farewell, Timon:

If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again. Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more. Alcib. I never did thee harm. Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me. Alcib. Call'st thou that harm! Tim. Men daily find it. Get thee away, And take thy beggies with thee. Alcib. We but offend him.—

[Drum beats. Exeunt Alcibiades, Phryn, and Timandra. Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness, Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou,

[Sepulchre,

Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd, Engenders the black toad, and adder blue, The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm, With all the abhorred burhs below crisp heaven Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all the human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensear thy fertile and conceit'd worm; Let it no more bring out ingratitude man! Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears; Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face Hath to the marbled mansion all above Never presented!—O! a root:—dear thanks! Dry up thy meadows 4, vines, and plough-torn leas; Whereof ingratitude man, with liquorish drafts, And morsels unctuous, greece his pure mind, That from it all consideration slips.—

Enter Apeamantus. More man? Plague! Plague! Aper. I was directed hither: men report, Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them. Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep a dog Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee! Aper. This is in thee a nature but infected; A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung From change of fortune. 5 Why this spade? this ploe! This slave-like habit, and these looks of care? Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft, Hug their disea'd perfume, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods, By putting on the cunning of a carper. Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee, And let his very breath, whom thou 'st observe, Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain, And call it excellent. Thou wast told thus; Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters that bade weless To knaves, and all approachers; it's most just, That thine turn rascal: hadst thou wealth again, Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness. Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself Aper. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like by self; A madman so long, now a fool. What! think'st That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moist 6 That have outlived the eagle, page thy heels, And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brook, Candied with ice, candle thy morning taste, To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? call the creature,— Whose naked nature live in all the spite Of wreakful heaven, whose bare unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements exposer'd,
Answer more nature,—bid them flatter thee;
O! thou shalt find—
Aepm. I love thee better now than e'er I did. Tim. I hate thee worse.
Aepm. Why?
Tim. Thou flatter'st misery. Aepm. I flatter not, but say thou art a cafiff.
Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?
Tim. What! a knife too?
Aepm. If thou didst put this sour cold habit on To castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou Doest it enforc'dly: thou'dt courtier be again, Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery Outlines uncertain pomp, is crown'd before: The one is filling still, never complete: The other, at high wards, best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst content. Thou ought'st desire to die, being miserable.
Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable. Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm With favour never clasp'd, but bred a dog. Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath, proceeded The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive dugs of it Freely command, thou wouldst have plung'd thyself In general not; melted down thy youth In different beds of lust; and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd The sugar'd game before thee. But myself, Who had the world as my consecration; The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men At duty, more than I could frame employment; That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare For every storm that blows. —I, to bear this, That never knew but better, is some burden: Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time Hath make thee hard in't. Why shouldst thou hate men? They never flatter'd thee: what hast thou given? If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag, Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff To some she beggar, and compounded thee Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone! If thou hast not been born the worst of men, Thou hadst been a knave, and flatterer.
Aepm. That proud yet? Tim. Ay, that I am not thee. Aepm. I, that I was No prodigal.
Tim. I, that I am one now:
Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee, I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—
That the whole life of Athens were in this! Thou should I eat it. [Eating a root.
Aepm. Here; I will mend thy feast.
Offering something.
Tim. First mend my* company, take away thyself.
Aepm. So shall I mend mine own, by the lack of thine.
Tim. 'T is not well mended so, it is but beth'd; if not, I would it were.

* Aepm. What wouldst thou have to Athens?
Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt, Tell them there I have gold: look, so I have.
Aepm. Here is no use for gold.
Tim. The best, and truest For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.
Aepm. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?
Tim. Under that's above me Where feed'st thou o' days, Apermantus?
Aepm. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.
Tim. Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!
Aepm. Where wouldst thou send it?
Tim. To sauce thy dishes.
Aepm. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, theymocked thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou knewest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee; eat it.
Tim. On what I hate I feed not.
Aepm. Dost hate a medlar?
Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.
Aepm. An thou hadst hated meddlers sooner, thou shouldst have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift, that was belov'd after his means?
Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?
Aepm. Myself.
Tim. I understand thee: thou hast done means to keep a dog.
Aepm. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?
Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apermantus, if it lay in thy power?
Aepm. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.
Tim. Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?
Aepm. Ay, Timon. Tim. A bassetly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to. If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee, and still thou livedst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be killed by the horse: wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard: wert thou a leopard, thou wert germane to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life; all thy safety were remotion, and thy defence, absence. What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seek not thy loss in transformation.
Aepm. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou mightest have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.
Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?
Aepm. Yonder comes a poet, and a painter. The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to Tim. Now, thieves?
All. Soldiers, not thieves.
Tim. Both two; and women's sons.
All. We are not thieves, out men that much do want.
Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat. Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots; Within this mile break forth a hundred springs; The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips; The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?
1 Band. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water, As beasts, and birds, and fishes.
Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes; You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you own, That you are thieves professed, that you work not In holier shapes; for there is boundless theft In limited professions. Rascel thieves. Here's gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape.
[Throwing gold.

Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging: trust not the physician; His antidotes are poison, and he slays More than you rob: take wealth and lives together; Do villainy, do, since you protest to do't.
Like workmen: I'll example you with thievry: The sea's a thief, and with his great attraction Robs the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun: The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears:
[End of Timon.

3 Band. He has almost charmed me from my professions, by persuading me to it.
Tim. 'Tis in the nature of mankind, that he that advises us, shall have to us thrive in our mystery.

1 Band. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

Flav. O you gods!

Is your despised and ruined man my lord?

Full of decay and failing! O monument, And wonder of good deeds evils bestow'd! What an alteration of honour has desperate want made: What viler thing upon the earth, than friends Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends? How rarely does it meet with this time's guise, When man was wish'd to love his enemies: Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo Those that would mischiefe me, than those that do! He has caught me in his eye: I will be the means Of my honest grief unto him; and, as my lord, Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

Timon comes forward from his Cave.
Tim. Away! what art thou?
Flav. Have you forgot me, sir?
Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true,
(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure)
Is not thy kindness subtle, covertous,
Is't not aearing kindness as rich men deal gifts,
Expecting in return twenty for one?
Flav. No, my most worthy master; in whose breast
Doubt and suspect, alas! are plac'd too late.
You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast.
Suspict still comes when an estate is least.
That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love,
Duty and zeal to your unmatch'd mind,
Care of your food and living: and, believe it,
My most honour'd lord,
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope, or present, 'I'd exchange
For this one wish,—that you had power and wealth
To require me by making rich yourself.
Tim. Look thee, 'tis so.—Thou singly honest man,
Here, take:—the gods out of my misery [Giving gold.]
Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy,
But thus condition'd:—thou shalt build from men;
Hate all, curse all; show charity to none,
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs
What thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow 'em,
Debits wither 'em to nothing. Be men like blasted woods,
And may diseases lick up their false bloods!
And so, farewell, and thrive.
Flav. O! let me stay,
And comfort you, my master.
Tim. If thou hast't
Curses, stay not: fly, whilst thou 'rt bless'd and free,
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.
[Exit Flavius; and Timon into his Cave.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter.

Poet. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Painter. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?
Poet. Certain: Alcibiades report it; Phthia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor stragglers soldiers with great quantity. 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Painter. Nothing else; you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore,
't is not amiss we tender our loves to him in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us, and is very likely to load our purses* with what we travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?
Painter. Nothing at this time but my visitation; only,
I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very
* the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the dullest for his sake; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying

1 gracious: in f. 2 Southern made the change. 3 Not in f. 4 Exeunt severally: in f. 5 purposes: in f. 6 they: in f.
But where one villain is, then him abandon—
Hence! pack! there's gold; ye came for gold, ye slaves:
You have done* work for me, there's payment: hence!
You are an alchymist, make gold of that.
Out, rascal dogs! [Exit, beating them out.

SCENE II.—The Same. Enter Flavius, and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;
For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave:
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike
Men are not still the same. 'T was time, and grief,
That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer hand
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him. Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.—
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends. Th' Athenians,
By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd:
For each true word, a blister; and each false
Be as a cauterizing to the root of the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking:

1 Sen. Worthy Timon,—
Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.
2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.
Tim. I thank them; and would send them back in plague,
Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O! forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators, with one consent of love,
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities. which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess
Toward thee forgetfulness, too general, gross;
Which now the public body, which doth seldom
Play the recantor, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrowed reader,
Together with a recompense, more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it:
Surprise me to the very brink of tears:
Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,
And I'll bewEEP these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us,
And of our Athenes, thine and ours, to take
This captainship, thou shall be not met with thanks,
Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name
Live with authority:—so, soon we shall drive back
Of Alcibiades th' approaches wild;
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

* In fo. * Not in folio. Added by Maloney.
TITON OF ATHENS.

SCENE V.

And shakes his threat'ning sword
Against the walls of Athens.
1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—
Tis. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir; thus,—
If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war,
Their blood on him know,—and tell Mischief, Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him,—that I care not.
And let him take's at worst; for their knives care not,
While you have threats to answer: for myself,
There's not a whittle in th' unruly camp,
But I do prone it at my love, before
The reverend'st threat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.
Flav. Stay not: all's in vain.
Tis. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,
It will be seen to-morrow. My long sickness
Of health, and living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go; live still:
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

We speak in vain.
Tis. But yet I love my country; and am not
One that rejoices in the common woe,
As common fruit doth put it.
1 Sen. That's well spoke.
Tis. Command me to my loving countrymen,—
1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

And enter in our ears, like great triumphers
In their appealing gates.
Tis. Command me to them;
And tell them, that to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, and other insentience
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them,
I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.

I like this well; he will return again.
Tis. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it: tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his halter,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe.
And hang himself,—I pray you, do my greeting.
Flav. Trouble him no farther; thus you still shall find him.
Tis. Come not to me again; but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Whom once a day with his embossed' froth
The turbulent surge shall cover: thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.
Lips, let sour words go by, and language end:
What is amiss, plague and infection mend:
Graves only be men's works, and death their gain.
Sun, hide thy beams: Timon hath done his reign.

[Exit Timon.

1 Sen. His discontents are unremovably coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead. Let us return,

And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators, and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his files
As full as they report?
Mess. I have spoke the least;
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.
Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend,
Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends: this man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
Himself fellowship: the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

[Enter Senators from Timon.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers
3 Sen. No talk of Timon; nothing of him expect—
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring.
Doth choke the air with dust. In, and prepare:
Ours is the fall, I fear, our foes the snare.

SCENE IV.—The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a
Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place
Who 's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What is this?—
Timon is dead, who hath outstretched'd his span.
Some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man.
Dead, sure, and this his grave.—What's on this tomb
I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax:
Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days.
Before proud Athens he's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades, and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach.

[Ad Parley soundeth.

Enter Senators, on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and till'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice: till now myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our traves'd arms, and breath'd
Our suffrance vainly. Now the time is flush,
When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong,
Cries of itself, "No more!" now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And purvey insolence shall break his wind
With fear, and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble, and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee, to give thy rages balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with love
Above their quantity.

2 Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love;
By humble message, and by promise'd means:
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.
1 Sen. These walls of ours
Wcre not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your grief: nor are they such,
That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall
For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living,
Who were the motives that you first went out:
Shame, that they wanted cunning in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,
Into our city with thy banners spread:

By decimation, and a tithed death
(If thy revenge hunger for that food
Which nature leaths) take thou the destin'd tenth;
And by the hazard of the spotted die
Let die the spotted.

1 Sen. All have not offended;
For those that were, is't not severe to take,
On those that are, revenge? crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage:
Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that have offended. Like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and cull th' infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2 Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Than hew to 't with thy sword.

1 Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall ope,
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say, thou 'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen. Throw thy glove,
Or any token of thine honour else.
That thou wilt use the war as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

---

Alcib. Then, there's my glove.
Descend, and open your uncharged ports.
Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own,
Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
Fall, and no more; and,—to atone' your fears
With my more noble meaning,—not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied by your public laws
At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

[The Senators descend, and open the Gate.
Enter a Soldier.

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea;
And on his grave-stone this inscription, which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads.] "Here lies a wretched core, of wretched soul bereft:
Seek not my name. A plague consume you wretched castrats left!

Here lie I Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate.
Pass by, and curse thy will; but pass, and stay not here thy gait."

These well express in thee thy later spirits:
Though thou abhorrest in us our human griefs,
Scorn'dst our brain's flow, and those our droplet's, when
From nignard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon; of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,
And I will use the olive with my sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stilt war; make each
Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.—
Let our drums strike.

[Exeunt.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Flaviius, Marullus, and a body of Citizens.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home.

Is this a holiday? What! know you not,
Being mechanical, you ought not walk
Upon a labouring day without the sign
Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?
1 Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule?
What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—
You, sir; what trade are you?
2 Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but as you would say, a cobbler.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Flav. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade?
2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: yet if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What mean'st thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?
2 Cit. Why, sir, cobbler you.
Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?
2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the avl; I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with all. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I re-cover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's-leather have gone upon my handywork.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day?
Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?
2 Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Caesar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?
What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels?
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!
O! you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft
Have you climbed up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The live-long day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath her banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in her concave shores?
And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now pull out a holiday?
And do you now strewn flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone!

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen; and for this fault
Assemble all the poor men of your sort:
Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. [Exeunt Citizens
See, whe'r their basest metal be not mov'd;
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol;
This way will I. Dierobe the images,
If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.
Mar. May we do so?
You know, it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images
Be hung with Caesar's trophies. I'll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets:
So do you too, where you perceive them thick.
These growing feathers pluck'd from Caesar's wing,
Will make him fly an ordinary pitch,
Who else would soar above the view of men,
And keep us all in servile fearfulness. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Public Place.

Enter, in Procession, with Trumpets and other Music. Caesar; Antony, for the course; Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero. Brutus, Cassius, and Casca; a Soothsayer, and a crooked following them.

Cas. Calphurnia,
Cas. Calphurnia,—
Cas. Here, my lord.
Cas. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course.—Antonius.
Ant. Caesar, my lord.
Cas. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia; for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Slake off their sterile curse.
Ant. I shall remember.

When Caesar says, "Do this," it is perform'd.
Cas. Set on: and leave no ceremony out. [Music.
Sooth. Caesar!
Cas. Ha! who calls?
Casca. Bid every noise be still.—Peace yet again! [Music ceases.

Cas. Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, Caesar! Speak: Caesar is turn'd to hear.
Sooth. Beware the ideas of March.
Cas. What man is that?
Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ideas of March.
Cas. Set him before me; let me see his face.
Cas. Fellow, come from the throng: look upon Caesar.
Cas. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.
Sooth. Beware the ideas of March.
Cas. He is a dreamer; let us leave him.—Pax.
[Sennet. Exeunt all but Bru. and Cas.
Cas. Will you go to see the order of the course?
Bru. Not I.
Cas. Let us then you, do.
Bru. I am not gamsome: I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony,
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;
I'll leave you.
Cas. Brutus, I do observe you now of late;
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love, as I was wont to have:
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you. Cassius,
Be not deceiv'd: if I have well'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vexed am I
Of late with passions of some difference,
Conceotions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours;
But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd,
(Among which number, Cassius, be you one)
Nor construe any farther my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

[Laughter: in folio. Pope made the change.

Cas. Then Brutus, I have much mistook your passion
By means whereof, this breast of mine has been buried
Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.
Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?
Bru. No, Cassius; for the eyes sees not itself,
But by reflection, by some other things.
Cas. 'Tis just;
And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you are in no such manner, as I will turn
Your hidden worthinesse into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortal Caesar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.
Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me, Cassius,
That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me?
Cas. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear:
And, since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself, which you yet know not of.
And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laughar, or did use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new proster; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banquetting,
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish, and Show.

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear, the people
Choose Caesar for their king.
Cas. Ay, do you fear it?
Then, must I think you would not have it so.
Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well.
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?
If it be taught toward the general good,
Set honour in one eye, and death in the other,
And I will look on both indifferently;
For, let the gods so speed me, as I love
The name of honour more than I fear death.
Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
As well as do you know your outward favour.
Well, honour is the subject of my story.—
I cannot tell what you and other men
Think of this life; but for my single self
I had as lief not be, as live to be
In awe of such a thing as myself.
I was born free as Caesar, so were you;
We both have fed as well, and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he:
For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,
Caesar said to me, 'Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?'—Upon the word,
Accoutr'd as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinewes, throwing it aside,
And stemming it, with hearts of controversy;
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd.
Caesar cried, "Help me, Cassius, or I sink." I, as Enneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anarchies hear, so from the waves of Tyber
Did I the tired Caesar. And this man
Is now become a god; and Caesar is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body,
If Caesar carelessly but not on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 't is true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend cloth awe the world,
Did look upon me. I did hear him groan;
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speechess in their books,
Alas! it cried, 'Give me some drink, Titinius,"
As a sick girl.' Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should Set the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone.

[Shout. Flourish.

Bru. Another general shout! I do believe that these applause are
For some new honours that are paid'd on Caesar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bodestrite the narrow world,
Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.

Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Bru. and Caesar: what should be in that Caesar?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Caesar.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd:
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods.
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
What could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walls! encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd
Th' eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim;
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter: for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any farther mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear, and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this:
Brutus had rather be a villain,
Than to reproach himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions, as this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad, that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Bru. The games are done, and Caesar is returning.

Re-enter Caesar, and his Train.

Cas. As they pass by pluck Casca by the sleeve;
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day.

[Enter Caesar and his Train.

Cas. Caesar will tell us what the matter is.

Ant. Caesar.

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights.
Yond! Caesar has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks much too: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. 'Would he be fatter; but I fear him not.
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not now the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much,
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music:
Seldom he smiles, and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear, for always I am Caesar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'lt of him.

[Exeunt Caesar and his Train. Casca stays behind.

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak: would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Cassa; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day.
That Caesar looks so sad.

Cassa. Why you were with him, were you not?

Bru. I should not, then, ask Cassa what hath chanc'd.

Casa. Why, there was a crown offer'd him; and,
Being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry, was 't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by mine honest neighbours shouted.

Casa. Who offer'd him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Cassa.

Casca. I can as well be hang'd, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery, I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown—yet 't was not a chance neither, 't was one of these coronets:—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to, my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again, but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it.
And then he offer'd it the third time: he put it the third time by; and still as he refused it, the rabble-men shouted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath, because Caesar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Caesar; for he swooned, and fell down at it. And for mine own part
I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you. What! did Caesar swoon? At mouth, and was speechless.

bru.'Tis very like he hath the falling-sickness.

Cas. No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and I. And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that: but, I am sure, Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and kiss him, according as he pleased, and dress their best, and see they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut:—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues:—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenchers, where I stood, cried, "Alas, good soul!"—and forgave him with all their hearts. But there's no need to be taken of them: if Caesar had stabbed his mothers, they would have done no less.

bru. And after that he came thus sad away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you in the face again: but those that understood him smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news, too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well: there was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you.

Casca. Do so. Farewell, both. [Exit Casca.

bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be. He was quick mettled when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now, in execution of any bold or noble enterprise, however he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite.

bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you: To-morrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so:—till then, think of the world.

[Exit Brutus.

Well, Brutus, thou art noble: yet I see, Thy honourable mettle may be wrought: From that it is disposed: therefore, 'tis meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes; For who so firm that cannot be seduced? Caesar doth bear me hard, but he loves Brutus: If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humour me. I will this night, In several hands, in at his windows throw,
SCENE I. JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.—The Same. Brutus’s Orchard.

Enter Brutus.

Bru. What, Lucius! ho!—cannot, by the progress of the stars, live guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—

1 in fav'ri:'s tre's fello's

Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know
My answer must be made: but I am arm’d,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Cas. You speak to Casca; and to such a man,
That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold, my hand:
Be factious for redresse of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There’s a bargain made.

Now know you, Casca, I have mov’d already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honourable, dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey’s porch: for now, this fearful night,
There is no stir, or walking in the streets,
And the complexion of the element
In favour’s like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Cas. Stand close around me, for here comes one in haste.
Cas. ’Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait:
He is a friend.—Cinna, where haste you so?
Cin. To find out you. Who’s that? Metellus Cimber?
Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not stay’d for, Cinna?
Cin. I am glad on’t. What a fearful night is this
There’s two or three of us have seen strange sights.
Cas. Am I not stay’d for? Tell me.
Cin. Yes, you are, O, Cassius! if you could but win the noble Brutus
To our party—

Cas. Be you content. Good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the pretor’s chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus’s statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey’s porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?
Cin. All but Metellus Cimber, and he’s gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will be,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.
Cas. That done, repair to Pompey’s theatre.

[Exit Cinna. Come, Casca, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Cas. O! he sits high in all the people’s hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchemy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.
Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You have right well conceived. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and, ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when? Awake, I say: what, Lucius?

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call’d you, my lord?

Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.
Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.
Bru. It must be by his death; and, for my part, I know no personal cause to spur him at. But for the general, he would be crown'd; How that might change his nature, there's the question. I: is the bright day that brings forth the adder, And that craves wary walking. Crown him?—that; And then, I grant, we put a sting in him, That at his will he may do danger with. Th' abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins Remorse from power; and, to speak truth of Caesar, I have not known when his affections sway'd More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof, That lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber-upward turns his face; But when he once attains the upmost round, He then unto the ladder turns his back, Looks in the cloud, scorning the base degrees By which he did ascend. So Caesar may: Then, lest he may, prevent: and, since the quarrel Will bear no colour for the thing he is, Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented, Would run to these, and these extremities; And then, he would have a serpent's egg, Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous, And kill him in the shell.
Re-enter Lucius.
Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir. Searching the window for a florin, I found This paper, thus seal'd up; and, I am sure, It did not lie there when I went to bed. [Giving him the paper.
Bru. Get you to bed again; it is not day. Is not to-morrow, boy, the idea' of March? Luc. I know not, sir. Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word. Luc. I will, sir. [Exit.
Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air, Give so much light that I may read by them. [Opens the paper, and reads.
"Brutus, thou sleepest: awake, and see thyself. Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress! Brutus, thou sleepest: awake!"— Such instigations have been often dropp'd Where I have took them up. "Shall Rome, &c." Thus must I piece it out; Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What! Rome? My ancestors did from the streets of Rome The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king. "Speak, strike, redress!"—Am I entreated To speak, and strike? O Rome! I make thee promise, If the redress will follow, thou receiv'est Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!
Re-enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen' days.
Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate: somebody knocks. [Exit Lucius.
Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar, I have not slept. Between the acting of a dreadful thing, And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phaetum or a hideous dream: The Genius, and the martial instruments, Are then in council; and the state of a man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then The nature of an insurrection.
Re-enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door, Who doth desire to see you.
Bru. Is he alone?
Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.
Bru. Do you know them?
Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears, And half their faces buried in their cloaks, That by no means I may discover them By any mark of favour.
Bru. Let them enter. [Exit Lucius.
They are the faction. O conspiracy! Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night, When evils are most free? O! then, by day Where will thou find a cavern dark enough To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none; conspirate; Hide it in smiles, and affability: For if thou path' thy native semblance on, Not Eребus itself were dim enough To hide thee from prevention.
Enter Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Trebonius.
Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest: Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?
Bru. I have been up this hour; awake, all night. Know these men that come along with you?
Cas. Yes, every man of them: and no man here, But honours you: and every one doth wish, You had but that opinion of yourself, Which every noble Roman bears of you. This is Trebonius.
Bru. He is welcome hither.
Cas. This Decius Brutus.
Cas. This Casca; this Cinna; And this Metellus Cimber.
Bru. They are all welcome.
What watchful cares do interpose themselves Betwixt your eyes and night?
Cas. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.
Dec. Here lies the east: doth not the day break here?
Casca. No.
Cin. O! pardon, sir, it doth; and yond' grey line That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.
Cas. You shall consent? what shall we do, sir? Here as I point my sword, the sun arises; Which is a great way growing on the south, Weighing the youthful season of the year. Some two months hence, up higher toward the north He first presents his fire; and the high east Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.
Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one. [He takes them kine.
Cas. And let us swear our resolution.
Bru. No, not an oath: if not the face of men, The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse, If these be motives weak, break off betimes, And every man hence to his idle bed; So let high-sighted tyranny range on, Till each man drop by lottery. But if these, As I am sure they do, bear fire enough To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen, What need we any spur; but our own cause, To prick us to redress what other odds, Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word, And will not palter? and what other oath, Than honesty to honesty engag'd, That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
swear priests, and cowards, and men callous, lik feelie carrions, and such suffering souls
That welcome wrongs: unto bad causes swear
Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
For th' insensible mistle of our spirits,
To think that, or our cause, or our performance,
Did need an oath, when every drop of blood,
That every Roman bear, and nobly bear,
A guilty of a several bastardy,
If he do break the smallest particle
Of a promise that hath been made from him.
Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him
Think he will stand very strong with us.
Casce. Let us not leave him out.
Cin. No, by no means.
Met. O! let us have him; for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It shall be said, his judgment ruled our hands;
Our youth, and wildness, shall not whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity.
Bru. O! name him not; let us not break with him,
For he will never follow any thing
That other men begin.
Cas. Then, leave him out.
Casce. Indeed he is not fit.
Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd, but only Caesar?
Cas. Decius, well urg'd.—I think it is not meet,
Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Caesar,
Should outlive Caesar: we shall find of him
A seed and conquer; and, you know, his means,
If he improve them, may well stretch so far
As to annoy us all; which to prevent,
Let Antony and Caesar fall together.
Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cassius,
To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs,
Like wrath in death, and envy after wards;
For Antony is but a limb of Caesar.
Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar,
And in the spirit of Mark Antony.
That, we then could come by Caesar's spirit,
And dismember Caesar! But, alas! I
Cæsar must bleed for it. And, gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wraithfully;
Let's crave him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds:
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide 'em. This shall mark
Our purpose necessary, and not envious;
So much appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him,
For he can do no more than Caesar's arm,
When Caesar's head is off.
Cas. Yet I fear him:
For in the ingraft'd love he bears to Caesar—
Bru. Alas! good Cassius, do not think of him.
If he love Caesar, all that he can do
Is to serve him, and die for Caesar;
And that much he should: for he is given
To sports, to wildness, and much company.
Tre. There is no fear in him; let him not die,
For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter. [Clock strikes.
Bru. Peace! count the clock.
Cas. The clock hath stricken three.
Tre. 'T is time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet,
Whether Caesar will come forth to-day, or no;
For he is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.
It may be, these apparent prodigies,
The unaccustomed terror of this night,
And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the Capitol to-day.
Dec. Never fear that: if he be so resolv'd,
I can o'er way him: for he loves to hear;
That unsoever may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,
Lions with tails, and men with flatterers:
But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers,
He says, he does, being then most flattered.
Let me work;
For I can give his humour the true bent,
And I will bring him to the Capitol.
Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.
Bru. By the eighth hour: is that the uttermost?
Cas. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.
Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey:
I wonder, none of you have thought of him.
Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him:
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.
Cas. The morning comes upon us: we'll leave you,
Brutus.—
And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember
What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.
Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily.
Let not our looks put on our purposes;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With uthird spirits, and formal constancy:
And so, good-morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but Brutus.

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep. It is no matter;
Enjoy the heavy honey-dew of slumber:
Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men;
Therefore, thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord!
Bru. Portia, what mean you? Wherewithal rise you now?
It is not for your health thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. You have ungently, Brutus,
Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing and sighing, with your arms across;
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You start'd upon me with ungentle looks.
I urg'd you farther; then, you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not;
But, with an angry wanton of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you. So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled; and, withal,
Hoping it was but an effect of human trouble,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.
Por. Brutes is wise, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do.—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick, and is it physical
To walk unbraided, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? What! is Brutus sick,
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night,
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offence within your mind,
Which, by the right and virtue of my place,
I ought to know of: and upon my knees [Kneeling.]
I charm you, by my once commended heart,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy, and what men to-night
Have had resort to you; for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia. [Raising her.]
Por. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I yourself
But, as it were, in sort, or limitation;
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs
Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus’ harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife;
As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman that lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman well-reputed, Cato’s daughter.
Think you, I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father’d, and so husband’d?
Tell me your counsel. Would you dissemble them.
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here, in the thigh; can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband’s secrets?

Bru. O ye gods!
Render me worthy of this noble wife. [Knocking within.]
Hark! hark! one knocks. Portia, go in a while;
And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart.
All my engagments I will construe to thee,
All the charactery of my sad brows.

Leave me with haste.

[Exit Portia.]
Enter Lucius and LIGARIUS.

Luc. Who is’t that knocks?

Lig. Here is a sick man, that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.—
Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how?
Lig. You safe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Bru. O! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To wear a kerchief? Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,
There discurd my sickness. Soul of Rome!

[Throwing away his bandage.]

Brave son, deriv’d from honourable loins,
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjured up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,
And I will strive with things impossible;
Yes, get the better of them. What’s to do?

Bru. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.
Lig. But are not some whole that we must make sick?

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going,
To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot,
And with a heart new-f’rd I follow you,
To do I know not what; but it sufficeth,
That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me, then. [Enter SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in Caesar’s Palace.
Thunder and Lightning. Enter Caesar, in his Night-gown.

Cas. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace to-night:
Three hath Calphurnia, in her sleep cried out,
“Help, ho! They murder Caesar!” —Who’s within?
Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord.

Cas. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord.

[Exit.
Enter CALPHURNIA.

Cal. What mean you, Caesar? Think you to wait for you? You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Cas. Caesar shall forth: the things that threaten’d me
Ne’er look’d but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Caesar, they are vanished.

Cal. Caesar, I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me. There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A lioness hath whelped in the streets;
And graves have yawn’d, and yielded up their dead;
Fierce furry warriors fight upon the clouds.
In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurled in the air;
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan;
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.
O Caesar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cas. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purposed by the mighty gods?
Yet Caesar shall go forth; for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Caesar.

Cal. When beggars die there are no comets seen:
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Cas. Cowards die many times before their deaths,
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear,
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

[Re-enter a Servant.

What say the augurers?

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-day,
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cas. The gods do this in shame of cowardice:
Caesar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Cassius, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Caesar.

Cas. Welcome, Publius.—

What, Brutus, are you still'd so early too?—

Good-morrow, Cassius.—Caius Ligarius,

Cæsar was never so much your enemy,

As that sameague which hath made you lean.—

What is 't o'clock?

Bru. Caesar, 't is stricken eight.

Cas. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights,

Is notwithstanding up.—Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Caesar.

Cas. Bid them prepare within.

I am to blame to be thus waited for.—

Now, Cinna.—Now, Metellus.—What, Trebonius! I have an hour's talk in store for you.

Remember that you call on me to-day:

Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar, I will:—and so near will I be, [Aside]

That your best friends shall wish I had been farther.

Cas. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me,

And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Caesar! [Aside.] The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street near the Capitol

Enter Artimidorus, reading a Paper.

Art. "Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Cassia; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar. If thou best not immortal, look about you: security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover,

"Artimidorus."

Here will I stand till Caesar pass along,

And as a suitor will I give him this,

My heart laments that virtue cannot live

Out of the teeth of emulation.

If thou read this, O Caesar! thou may'st live; If not, the fates with traitors do contrive. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I pray thee, boy, run to the senate-house:

Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.

Why dost thou stay?—

Luc. To know my errand, madam

Por. I would have had thee there, and here again, Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.—

O constancy! be strong upon my side: Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue! I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.

How hard it is for women to keep counsel! Art thou here yet?—

Luc. Madam, what should I do? Run to the Capitol, and nothing else, And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well, For he went sickly forth: and take good note, What Caesar doth, what suitor press to him. Hark, boy! what noise is that?—

Luc. I hear none, madam.
Julius Caesar.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of People in the Street leading to the Capitol; among them ARTEMIDIUS, and the Soothsayer.

Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lepidus, Popilius, Publius, and others.

Cæsar. The idea of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Hai! Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,

At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O, Cæsar! read mine first; for mine's a suit

That touches Cæsar nearer. Read it, great Cæsar.

Cæsar. That touches us? ourself shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar: read it instantly.

Cæsar. What is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cæsar. What! urge you your petitions in the street?

Come to the Capitol.

Cæsar enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish, your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cæsar. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well. [Advances to Cæsar.]

Brutus. What said Popilius Lena?

Cæsar. He wish'd, to-day our enterprise might thrive.

I fear, our purpose is discovered.

Brutus. Look, how he makes' to Cæsar: mark him.

Cæsar. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back.

For I will stay myself.

Brutus. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;

For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cæsar. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you,

Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt Antony and Trebonius. Cæsar and the Senators take their Seats.

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,
And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Brutus. He is address'd; press near, and second him.

Cæsar. Cassas, you are the first that rears your hand.

Cæsar. Are we all ready?

Casca. is Are we all ready?

Cæsar. What is now amiss?

That Cæsar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat

A humble heart.—

Kneeling.

Cæsar. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These crouchings, and these lowly courtesies, Might fire the blood of ordinary men, And turn pre-ordinance, and first decree, Into the law of children. Be not fond, To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood, That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words, Low-crouch'd courtesies, and base spaniel fawning. Thy brother by decree is banished: If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him, I spur thee like a cur out of my way. Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice, more worthy than my own. To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear, For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Brutus. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar;

Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cæsar. What, Brutus?

Cas. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardons As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall,
To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæsar. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me; But I am constant as the northern star, Of whose true, fix'd, and resting quality, There is no fellow in the firmament. The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks, They are all fire, and every one doth shine; But there's but one in all doth hold his place. So, in the world: 't is furnish'd well with men, And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive; Yet in the number I do know but one That unassailable holds on his rank, Unshak'd of motion: and, that I am he, Let me a little show it, even in this. That I was constant Cimmer should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cas. O Caesar!

Cæs. Hence! Wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Caesar;—

Cæs. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Cæs. Speak, hands, for me.

[CAESAR STABS CAESAR IN THE NECK. CAESAR CATCHES HOLD OF HIS ARM. HE IS THEN STABBED BY SEVERAL OTHER CONSPIRATORS, AND LAST BY MARCUS BRUTUS.

Cæs. Et tu, Brute?—Then fall, Caesar.

[Dec. The Senators and People retire in confusion.

Cæs. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—

Em harkens, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cæs. Some to the common pulpit, and cry out,

"Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement?"

Brut. People, and senators! be not affrighted.

Fly not; stand still;—ambition’s debt is paid.

Cæs. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Brut. Where’s Publius?

Cæs. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Caesar’s should change.

Brut. Talk not of standing,—Publius, good cheer:

There is no harm intended to your person,

Nor to no Roman else; so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Brut. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed,

But we, the doers.

[Re-enter TIBERIUS.

Cas. Where’s Antony?

Tib. Fleed to his house amast’d.

Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomsday.

Brut. Fates, we will know your pleasures.

That we shall die, we know; ‘tis but the time,

And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cæs. Why, that he cuts off twenty years of life,

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Brut. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:

So are we Caesar’s friends, that have abrig’d

His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Caesar’s blood.

Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords;

Then walk we forth, even to the market-place,

And, waving our red weapons o’er our heads,

Let’s all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be act’d over,

In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Brut. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey’s base lies along,

No worthier than the dust?

Cas. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of us be call’d

The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What! shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away.

Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

[Enter a Servant.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;

[Curse. }

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down,

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say.

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:

Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him;

Say, I fear’d Cæsar, honour’d him, and lov’d him.

If Brutus will vouche-safe, that Antony

May safely come to him, and be receiv’d

How Cæsar hath deserved to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,

Thorough the hazards of this untrodden state,

With all true faith. So says my master Antony. [Rising.

Brut. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman:

I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,

He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,

Depart untouch’d.

Serv. I’ll fetch him presently. [Exit Servant.

Brut. I know, that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish, we may; but yet have I a mind,

That fears him much, and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

[Enter Antony.

Brut. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cæsar! dost thou lie so low?

[Kneeling over the Body.

Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,

Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well.—

I now not, gentlemen, what you intend, [Rising.

Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:

If I myself, there is no hour so fit

As Cæsar’s death hour; nor no instrument

Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich

With the most noble blood of all this world.

I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard,

Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,

Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,

I shall not find myself so apt to die;

No place will please me so, no mean of death,

As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,

The choice and master spirits of this age.

Brut. O Antony! beg not your death of us.

Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,

As by our hands, and this our present act,

You see we do; yet see you but our hands,

And this the bleeding business they have done.

Our hearts you see not: they are pitiful,

And pity to the general wrong of Rome

(Ash fires drive out fire, so pity, pity)

Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,

To you our swords have heen pointed, Mark Antony.

Our arms, in strength of welcome, and our hearts,

Of brothers’ temper, do receive you in

With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man’s,

In the disposing of new dignities.

Brut. Only be patient, till we have appeas’d

The multitude, beside themselves with fear,

And then we will deliver you the cause,

Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,

Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom

Let each man render me his blood by hand:

[One after the other.

First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;

Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand:

Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Metellus;

Yours, Cinna;—and, my valiant Cassca, yours;

Though last, not least in love, yours good Trebonius,

Gentlemen all,—alas! what shall I say?
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad ways you must conceive me,
Either a coward, or a flatterer.
That I did love thee, Caesar! O, 'tis true:
[Turning to the Body, and bending over it.]
If, then, thy spirit look upon us now,
Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,
Most noble! in the presence of thy corpse?
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better, than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me, Julius! Here wast thou bay'd, brave heart;
Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand,
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy death.
O world! thou wast the forest to this hart;
And this, indeed, O world! the heart of thee.
How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie?
Cas. Mark Antony!
Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:
The enemies of Caesar shall say this;
Then, in a friend it is cold modesty.
Cas. I blame you not for praising Caesar so,
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends,
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?
Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point by looking down on Caesar.
Friends are I with you all, and love you all,
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,
Why, and wherein, Caesar was dangerous.
Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle.
Our reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you, Antony, the son of Caesar,
You should be satisfied.
Ant. That's all I seek:
And am moreover suitor, that I may
Prescribe this body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.
Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.
Cas. Brutus, a word with you.——
You know not what you do: do not consent. [Apart.
That Antony speak in his funeral.
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter?
Bru. By your pardon; I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Caesar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented, Caesar shall
Have all due rites, and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more, than do us wrong.
Cas. I know not what may fall: I like it not.
Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Caesar's body.
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But, as all good you can devise of Caesar;
And say, you do't by our permission.
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.
Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.

1 Not in t.s

Bru. Prepare the body, then, and follow us.

Ant. O! pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers.
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
(Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue)
A curse shall light upon the louns of men;
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war,
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds;
And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Atë by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Cry "Havock!" and let slip the dogs of war,
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not?
Serv. I do, Mark Antony.
Ant. Caesar did write for him to come to Rome.
Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming,
And bid me say to you by word of mouth.——
O Caesar! [Seeing the Body.
Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?
Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.
Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd.

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet:
His hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while;
Thou shalt not back, till I have borne this corse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand. [Exeunt, with Cæsar's Body.

SCENE II.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.
Cit. We will be satisfied: let us be satisfied.
Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience, friends —
Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.——
That which will hear me speak, let them stay here;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Caesar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.
2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons
When severally we shall hear them recite.
[Exeunt, with some of the Citizens.

Bru. Caesar goes into the Forum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is descended. Silence!
Bru. Be patient till the last.
Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent that you may hear: believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe, censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar’s, to him I say, that Brutus’ love to Cæsar was no less than his. If, then, that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar? this is my answer,—not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more.
Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him; but, as he was ambitious, I slew him. There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour;
and death for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him I offended. Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended.
Who is here so vile, that will not love his country?
If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

3. None, Brutus, none.

Brut. Then, none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar, than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy, nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Antony and others, with Cæsar’s Body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony: who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart; that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

All. Live, Brutus! live! live!

1. Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2. Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3. Cit. Let him be Cæsar.

4. Cit. Cæsar’s better parts

Shall now be crown’d in Brutus.

1. Cit. We’ll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Brut. My countrymen,—

1. Cit. Peace, ho!

Brut. Good countrymen, let me depart alone;
And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:
Do grace to Cæsar’s corpse, and grace his speech
Tending to Cæsar’s glories, which Mark Antony,
By our permission, is allow’d to make.
I do entreat you, not a man depart,
Save I alone, till Antony have spoke.

[Exit.

1. Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3. Cit. Let him go up into the public chair:
We’ll hear him.—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus’ sake, I am beholding to you.

4. Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3. Cit. He says, for Brutus’ sake,
He finds himself beholding to us all.

4. Cit. ’T were best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1. Cit. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3. Cit. Nay, that’s certain:
We are bless’d, that Rome is rid of him.

2. Cit. Peace! let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears:
I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.
The evil that men do live after them,
The good is oft interred with their bones;
So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus
Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious:
If it were so, it was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Cæsar answer’d it.
Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,
(For Brutus is an honourable man,
So are they all, all honourable men)
Come I to speak in Cæsar’s funeral.
He was my friend, faithfull and just to me:
But Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill.
Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor had cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sternier stuff:
Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
You all did see, that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?
Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And, sure, he is an honourable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once, not without cause:
What cause withheld you, then, to mourn for him?
O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason.—Bear with me;
My heart is in my coffin there with Cæsar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

1. Cit. Me thinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

2. Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,
Cæsar has had great wrong.

3. Cit. Has he, masters?

I fear, there will a worse come in his place.

4. Cit. Mark’d ye his words? He would not take the crown:

Therefore, is certain, he was not ambitious.

1. Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.

2. Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

3. Cit. There’s not a nobler man in Rome than Antony.

4. Cit. Now mark him; he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might
Have stood against the world: now, lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O masters! if I were disposed to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
Who, you all know, are honourable men.
I will not do them wrong: I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,
Than I will wrong such honourable men.
But here’s a parchment with the seal of Cæsar;
I found it in his closet, ’tis his will:
Let but the common hear this testament,
(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read)
And they would go, and kiss dead Cæsar’s wounds,
And dip their napkins in his sacred blood;
Yes, beg a hair of him for memory,
And, dying, mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
Unto their issue.

4. Cit. We’ll hear the will. Read it, Mark Antony.

All. The will, the will! we will hear Cæsar’s will

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends; I must not read it:
It is not meet you know how Caesar lov'd you.
You are not wood, you are not stones, but men,
And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad.
'T is good you know not that you are his heirs;
For if you should, O! what would come of it?
4 Cit. Read the will! we'll hear it, Antony;
You shall read us the will: Caesar's will!
Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay a while?
I have o'erbat my selfe to tell ye of it.
I fear, I wrong the honourable men,
Whose daggers have stabb'd Caesar: I do fear it.
4 Cit. They were traitors: honourable men!
All. The will! the testament!
2 Cit. They were villains, murderers. The will! read the will.

Ant. You will compel me, then, to read the will?
Then, make a ring about the corpse of Caesar,
And let me show you him that made the will.
Shall I descend? and will you give me leave?
All. Come down.
2 Cit. Descend. [He comes down.
3 Cit. You shall have leave.
4 Cit. A ring! stand round.
1 Cit. Stand from the hearers; stand from the body.
2 Cit. Room for Antony;—most noble Antony!
Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.
All. Stand back! room! hear back!
Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.
You all do know this mantle: I remember
The first time ever Caesar put it on;
'T was on a summer's evening, in his tent,
That day he overcame the Nervii.
Look! in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through:
See, what a rent the envious Cassius made:
Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd;
And as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Caesar follow'd it,
As rushing out of doors, to be resolve'd
If Brutus so unkindly know'd, or no;
For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's angel:
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Caesar lov'd him!
This was the most unkindest cut of all;
For when the noble Caesar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms, a
Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;
And in his mantle muffing up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
Which all the while ran blood, great Caesar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
O! now you weep: and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.
Kind souls! what! weep you, when you but behold
Our Caesar's ventrue wounded? Look you here,
Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with traitors.
1 Cit. O piteous spectacle!
2 Cit. O noble Caesar!
3 Cit. O wuffful day!
4 Cit. O traitors! villains!
1 Cit. O most bloody sight!
All. We will be revenged. Revenge! about,—seek,
—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.
Ant. Stay, countrymen. [They are rushing out.¹
1 Cit. Peace! There! hear the noble Antony.
2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not sin you up
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this deed are honourable:
What private griefs they have, alas! I know not,
That made them do it; they are wise and honourable,
And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts:
I am no traitor, Brutus is,
But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full well
That gave me public leave to speak of him.
For I have neither wit,⁴ nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood: I only speak right on:
I tell you that, which you yourselves do know,
Show you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths,
And bid them speak for me: but were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Caesar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

All. We'll mutiny.
1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.
3 Cit. Away then! come, seek the conspirators.
Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.
All. Peace, ho! Hear Antony; most noble Antony.
Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what.
Wherein hath Caesar thus deserv'd your loves?
Alas! you know not:—I must tell you, then.
You have forgot the will I told you of.
All. Most true;—the will:—let's stay, and hear it will.
Ant. Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal.
To every Roman citizen he gives,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.
2 Cit. Most noble Caesar!—we'll revenge his death
3 Cit. O royal Caesar!
Ant. Hear me with patience.
All. Peace, ho!
Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbours, and new-planted orchards,
On this side Tyber: he hath left them you,
And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,
To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Caesar: when comes such another?
1 Cit. Never, never!—Come, away; away;
We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.
2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.
3 Cit. Pluck down benches.
4 Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing.

[Exeunt Citizens, with the Body.

Ant. Now let it work. Mischiev's, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt.—How now, fellow.
Enter a Servant.
Serv. Sir. Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?
Serv. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.
Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him.
He comes upon a wish: Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.
Serv. I heard them say. Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike, they had some notice of the people
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius. [Exeun-
SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter CINNA, the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night, that I did feast with Cæsar,
And things unlikely charge my fancy.
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

Enter Citizens.

1 Cit. What is your name?
2 Cit. Whither are you going?
3 Cit. Where do you dwell?
4 Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?
2 Cit. Answer every man directly.
1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.
4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.
3 Cit. Ay, and truly; you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor?
Then, to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly, wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

2 Cit. 'Tis as much as to say, they are fools that marry—you'll bear me a bang for that, I fear. Proceed: directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.
1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?
Cin. As a friend.
2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.
4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.
Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.
3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.
Cin. Truly, my name is Cænna.
1 Cit. Tear him to pieces: he's a conspirator.
Cin. I am Cænna, the poet; I am Cænna, the poet.
4 Cit. Tear him for his bad verses; tear him for his bad verses.
Cin. I am not Cænna the conspirator.
2 Cit. It is no matter; his name's Cænna: pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.
3 Cit. Tear him, tear him! Come: brands, ho! firebrands! To Brutus, to Cassius; burn all. Some to Decius' house, and some to Pandar's; some to Ligarius.
Away! go! [Exit. Forcing out CINNA.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in Antony's House.

Antony, OCTavius, and LEPIDUS, seated at a Table.

Ant. These many, then, shall die: consent you, Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent.

Ant. Upon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn him.
But Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house; Fetch the will hither, and we will determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here, or at the Capitol. [Exit LEPIDUS.

Ant. This is a slight unmerciful man,
Mest to be sent on errands: is it fit,
The threefold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to die
In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you:
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business,
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears,
And graze on commons.

Oct. You may do your will;
But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and for that I do appoint him store of provender;
It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on.
His corporeal motion govern'd by my spirit:

And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so:
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth.
A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds
On objects, arts, and imitations,
Which, out of use and staled by other men,
Begin his fashion; do not talk of him,
But as a property. And now, Octavius,
Listen great things. Brutus and Cassius,
Are levying powers: we must straight make head;
Therefore, let our alliance be combin'd,
Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out; 1
And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclose'd,
And open perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so, for we are at the stake,
And bayed about with many enemies;
And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear,
Millions of mischief. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Dram. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Lucius, and Soldiers.

TITIUS and PARDARUS meet them.

Brut. Stand, ho!
Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Brut. What now? Lucilius? is Cassius near?
Luc. He is at hand; and Pardarus is come
To do you saluation from his master.

[Exit PARDARUS gives a Letter to Brutus.

Brut. He greets me well.—Your master, Pardarus,
In his own change, or by ill officers,
Hath given me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, undone; but, if he be at hand,
I shall be satisfied.

Pis. I do not doubt,
But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard and honour.

Brut. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius:
How he receive'd you let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy and with respect enough;

1 satisfactorily: in f. o. 8 The rest of this direction is not in f. o. 9 So the folio, 1623; first folio gives the line: Our best friends made, our means stretch'd, i.e.
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly conference,
As he hath used of old.

 bru. Thou hast describ'd
A hot friend cooling. Ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay,
It useth an enforced ceremony.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle,
But when they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests, and, like deceitful judas,
Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?
Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd:
The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius. [March within.
bru. Hark! he is arriv'd.—March gently on to meet him.

Enter Cassius and Soldiers.
cas. Stand, ho!
bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.
With. Stand.
Within. Stand.
[One after the other, and fainter.
cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.
bru. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine enemies?
And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?
cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs;
And when you do them——Cassius, be content;
Speak your griefs softly: I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle: bid them move away;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.
cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.
bru. Lucilius, do you the like: and let no man
Come to our tent, till we have done our conference.
Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus.
Lucius and Titansius at some distance from it.

Enter Brutus and Cassius.
cas. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this:
You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella
For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
Wherein my letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, were sighted off.
bru. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.
cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet
That every nice offence should bear his comment.
bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm;
To sell and mart your offices for gold
To underservers.
cas. I am an itching palm?
You know that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or by the gods this speech were else your last.
bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,
And chasteisement does therefore hide his head.
cas. Chastisement!
bru. Remember March, the ide of March remember.
Did not great Julius bleed for justice's sake?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice? What! shall one of us,

That struck the foremost man of all this world,
But for supporting robbers, shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,
And sell the mighty space of our large honours,
For so much trash as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman.
cas. Brutus, bay not me,
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself,
To hedge me in. I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.
bru. Go to; you are not, Cassius
cas. I am.
bru. I say, you are not.
cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself:
Have mind upon your health; tempt me no farther.
bru. Away, slight man!
cas. Is't possible?
bru. Hear me, for I will speak.
Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frightened, when a madman stares?
cas. O ye gods! ye gods! Must I endure all this!
bru. All this? ay, more. Fre't, till your proud heart break;
Go show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?
Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you; for from this day forth,
I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are wapish.
cas. Is it come to this?
bru. You say, you are a better soldier:
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well. For mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of abler men.
cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me
I said, an older soldier, not a better:
did I say, better?
bru. If you did, I care not.
cas. When Caesar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.
bru. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted him
cas. I durst not?
bru. No.
cas. What! durst not tempt him?
bru. For your life you durst not.
cas. Do not presume too much upon my love;
I may do that I shall be sorry for.
bru. You have done that you should be sorry for.
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats,
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me;
For I can raise no money by vile means:
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drogoams, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection. I did send
To you for gold to pay my legion,
Which you denied me: was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To look such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts
Enter Lucilius and Titinius.
 Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders
 Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.
 Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala with you,
 Immediately to us. [Exeunt Lucilius and Titinius.
 Lucilius, a bowl of wine.
 Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry.
 Titinius. O Cassius! I am sick of many griefs.
 Cassius. Of your philosophy you make no use,
 If you give place to accidental evils.
 Titinius. No man bears sorrow better.—Portia is dead.
 Cas. Ha! Portia?
 Titinius. She is dead.
 Cas. How said I killing, when I cross'd you so?—
 O, insupportable and touching loss!—
 Upon what sickness?
 Titinius. Impatient of my absence,
 And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony
 Have made themselves so strong;—for with her death
 That tidings came.—With this she fell distract,
 And, her attendants absent, swallowed'd fire.
 Cas. And died so?
 Titinius. Even so.
 Cas. O, ye immortal gods!
 Enter Lucius, with Wine and Tapers.
 Lucius. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine:
 In this I bury all unkindness. Cassius. [Drinks.
 Cassius. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.—
 Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erawell the cup;
 I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks.
 Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.
 Titinius. Come in, Titinius.—Welcome, good Messala.
 Now sit we close about this taper here,
 And call in question our necessities.
 Cas. Portia, art thou gone?
 Titinius. No more, I pray you.
 Messala. I have here received letters,
 That young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
 Come down upon us with a mighty power,
 Bending their expedition toward Philippi.
 Messala. Myself have letters of the self-same tenour.
 Cassius. What by proscription, and bills of outlawry,
 Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
 Have put to death an hundred senators.
 Cassius. Therein our letters do not well agree:
 Mine speak of seventy senators, that died
 By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.
 Messala. Cicero one?
 Cassius. Cicero is dead,
 And by that order of proscription.—
 Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?
 Titinius. No, Messala.
 Messala. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?
 Titinius. Nothing, Messala.
 Messala. That, methinks, is strange.
 Titinius. Why ask you? Have you sought of her in yours?
 Messala. No, my lord.
 Titinius. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.
 Messala. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:
 For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.
 Titinius. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die, Messala.
 With meditating that she must die once,
 I have the patience to endure it now.
 Messala. Even so great men great losses should endure.
 Cassius. I have as much of this in art as you,
 But yet my nature could not bear it so.
 Titinius. Well, to our work alive.—What do you think
Of marching to Philippi presently?
Cas. I do not think it good.

Brutus. Your reason?
Cas. This it is.
'Tis better, that the enemy seek us:
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.
Brutus. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.
The people, twixt Philippi and this ground,
Do stand but in a fored affection,
For they have grudg'd us contribution:
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-hearted', and encourag'd;
From which advantage shall we cut him off,
If at Philippi we do face him there,
These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.
Brutus. Under your pardon.—You must note beside,
That we have tried the utmost of our friends.
Our legions are brim-full, our cause is ripe:
The enemy increaseth every day;
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on:
We will along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.
Brutus. The deep of night has crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity,
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say?
Cas. No more.—Good night:
Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Brutus. Lucius, my gown. [Exit Lucius.]-Farewell, good Messala.—
Good night, Titinius.—Noble, noble Cassius,
Good night, and good repose.

Cas. O! my dear brother,
This was an ill beginning of the night.
Never come such division 'twixt our souls!
Let it not, Brutus.
Brutus. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.
Brutus. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mess. Good night, lord Brutus.
Brutus. Farewell, every one.
[Exeunt Cas. Tr. and Mess.]

Re-enter Lucius, with the Gown.
Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?
Lucius. Here in the tent.
Brutus. What! thou speakst drowsily? Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'er-watch'd.
Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Lucius. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter Varro and Claudius.
Varro. Calls my lord?
Brutus. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep:
It may be, I shall raise you by and by
On business to my brother Cassius.
Varro. So please you, we will stand, and watch your pleasure.
Brutus. I will not have it so; lie down, good sirs:

It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.
Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so:
I put it in the pocket of my gown. [Servants lie down]
Lucius. I was sure, your lordship did not give it me.

Brutus. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgerful.
Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?
Lucius. Ay, my lord, an't please you.

Brutus. It does, my boy,
I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Lucius. It is my duty, sir.
Brutus. I should not urge thy duty past thy might:
I know, young blood looks for a time of rest.
Lucius. I have slept, my lord, already.

Brutus. It was well done, and thou shalt sleep again;
I will not hold thee long; if I do live,
I will be good to thee.

[Music, and a Song.]
This is a sleepy tune.—O murderous slumber!
[Lucius falls asleep.]

Lay'st thou thy leader mace upon my boy,
That plays thee music?—Gentle knave, good night;
I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.
If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument:
I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good night.
Let me see, let me see: is not the leaf turn'd down,
Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down to read.]

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this taper burns.—Ha! who comes here?
I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon me.—Art thou any thing?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare?
Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Brutus. Why com'st thee?
Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Brutus. Well; then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

Brutus. Why, I will see thee at Philippi then.—
Now I have taken heart, thou vanihest:
Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.—
Boy! Lucius!—Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!—

Clau dius!

Lucius. The strings, my lord, are false.
Brutus. He thinks, he is still at his instrument.—
Lucius, awake!

Lucius. My lord.
Brutus. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so cried out?

Lucius. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Brutus. Yes, that thou didst. Didst thou see any thing?

Lucius. Nothing, my lord.
Brutus. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius!
Follow thou: awake!

Varro. My lord.

Clau dius. My lord.

Brutus. Why didst thou so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?

Var. Claudius. Did we, my lord?

Brutus. Ay: saw you any thing?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau dius. Nor I, my lord.

Brutus. Go, and command me to my brother Cassius:
Bid him set on his powers betimes before,
And we will follow.

Varro. Claudius. It shall be done, my lord. [Exeunt]
SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered. In sad, the enemy would not come down, but keep the hills and upper regions; proves not so: their battles are at hand; they mean to warn us at Philippi here, answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut! I am in their bosoms, and I know therefore they do it: they could be content 'e' visit other places; and come down with fearful bravery, thinking by this face 'e' sense in our thoughts that they have courage; and 'is' not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals; be enemy comes on in gallant show: heir bloody sign of battle is hung out, and something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on, on the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I: keep them on the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army; Lucilius, Titinius, Messalla, and others.

Brut. They stay, and will have parley.

Cas. Stand fast, Titinius; we must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

Ant. No, Cassius; we will answer on their charge. Take forth the generals would have some words.

Oct. Stir not until the signal.

Brut. Words before blows; is it so, countrymen? Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Brut. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words:

"I'll set you in Caesar's heart; crying, 'Long live! hail, Caesar!'"

Cas. Antony, posture of your blows is yet unknown; it for your words, they rob the Hyble bee, do leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless, too.

Brut. O! yes, and soundless too;

if you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony, at very wisest threat before you sting.

Ant. Villains! you did not so when your vile daggers tick'd one another in the sides of Cassar: I show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds, I bow'd like hounds, kiiming Cassar's feet; I hile damned Cassar, like a cur, behind rock Cassar on the neck. O, you flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself; the tongue had not offended so to-day, Cassius might have ru'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: if arguing make us swear,

'to proof of it will turn to redder drops.

oh! I draw sword against conspirators:—

then think you that the sword goes up again—

'er, till Cassar's three and thirty wounds

ACT V.

Be well aveng'd; or till another Cassar

Have added slaughter to the word of traitor.

Brut. Cassar, thou canst not die by traitors' hands,

Unless thou bring it them with thee.

Oct. So I hope.

I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Brut. O! if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,

Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.

Cas. A poevious schoolboy, worthless of such honour

Join'd with a masker and a reveller.

Ant. Old Cassius still.

Oct. Come, Antony; away!—

Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth.

If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;

If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Cas. Why now, blow wind, swell billow, and swim bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Brut. Ho, Lucilius! hark, a word with you.

Luc. My lord. [Brutus and Lucilius talk apart.

Cas. Messala: What says the general?

Mess. This is my birth-day; as this very day

Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:

Be thou my witness, that against my will,

As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set

Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know, that I held Epicurus strong,

And his opinion: now, I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do pressage.

Coming from Sardis, on our forward ensign

Two mighty eagles fall; and there they perch'd,

Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;

Who to Philippi here consorted us:

This morning they are fled away, and gone,

And in their steads do ravens, crows, and kites,

Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,

As we were sickly prey: their shadows seem

A canopy most fatal, under which

Our army lies ready to give up the ghost.

Mess. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly,

For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd

To meet all perils very constantly.

Brut. Even so, Lucilius. [Lucilius stands back.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,

The gods to-day stand friendly: that we may,

Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age:

But since the affairs of man rest still incertain,

Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

If we do lose this battle, then is this

The very last time we shall speak together:

What are you then determined to do?

Brut. Even by the rule of that philosophy,

By which I did blame Cato for the death

Which he did give himself. I know not how,

But I do find it cowardly and vile,

For fear of what might fall, so to prevent

The terms of life,—arming myself with patience,

To stay the providence of those' high powers,

That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Thorough the streets of Rome?

Bru. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble Roman,
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind: but this same day
Must end that work the idea of March began,
And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore, our everlasting farewell take:—
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius.
If we do meet again, why we shall smile;
If not, why then, this parting was well made.
Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus.
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Bru. Why then, lead on.—O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business, ere it come!
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The Field of Battle.

Alarum. Enter Brutus and Messalla.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills
Unto the legions on the other side. [Loud Alarum.

Let them set on at once: for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gains them the overthrow.
Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Another Part of the Field.

A larum. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look! the villains fly.
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy;
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius! Brutus gave the word too early;
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pin. Fly farther off, my lord, fly farther off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord:
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me, Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troopes,
And here again; that I may rest assur'd,
Whether yond' troopes are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought. [Exit.

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill:
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—

[Exit Pindarus.

This day I breathed first; time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end:
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah, what news?

Pin. [Above.] O my lord!

Cas. What news?

Pin. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;—
Yet he spurs on:—now they are almost on him.
Now, Titinius!—now some light;—O! he light'st too:
He's ta'en: and, hark! [Shout.] they shout for joy.

Cas. O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

Enter Pindarus.

Come hither, sirrah.
In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life
That whatsoever I did bid thee do,
Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath
Now be a freeman; and with this good sword,
That ran through Caesar's bowels, search this bosom
Stand not to answer: here, take thou the hilt;
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.—Caesar, thou art reveng'd.
Every man, a sword that kill'd thee.

Pin. So, I am free; yet would not so have been.
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius!

Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.

Re-enter Titinius, with Messalla.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.
Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsome
With Pindarus, his bondsman, on this hill.

Mes. Is not that he, that lies upon the ground?

Tit. He lies not like the living.—O my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala.
But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun!
As in thy red rays thou dost wink to-night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set:
The sun of Rome is set. Our day is done;
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done.
Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.

O hateful error! melancholy's child,

Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O error! soon conceiv'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Tit. What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;
For piercing steel, and darts envenomed,
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,
As tidings of this sight.

Tit. His eye, Messala, and I will seek for Pindarus the while. [Exit Messalla.

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didst not then hear their shouts?

Alas! thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee; take this garland on thy brow:
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come space,
And see how I regard'd Caius Cassius.—

By your leave, gods:—This is a Roman's part:
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart.

[Exeunt:

A larum. Re-enter Messalla, with Brutus, young Cinna,

Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Bru. Where, where, Messalla, doth his body lie?

Mes. Lo! yonder; and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cin. He is slain.

Cin. O Julius Caesar! thou art mighty yet,
Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails. [Low Alarum.
SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then Brutus, Cato, Lucilius, and others.

Brut. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Vol. You see the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:—

Enter Antony.

Ant. Fly, fly, my lord! there is no tarrying here.

Clu. You are a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some snatches of honour in it.

Enter Octavius, Antony, Messala, Lucilius, and their Army.

Oct. What man is that?

Mez. My master’s man.—Strato, where is thy master?

Str. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala:—
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;—
For Brutus only overcame himself, and no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov’d Lucilius’ saying true.

Oct. All that serv’d Brutus I will entertain them.

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Str. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Cato. Brave Titinius! Look, wher’e he have not crown’d dead Cassius!

Brut. Are ye two Romans living such as these?—

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!—
i am impossible that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more tears to this dead man, than you shall see me pay.—

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thrasos send his body:
His funerals shall not be in our camp,

Let it discomfort us.—Lucullus, come;—

And come, young Cato; let us to the field—

Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on!—

’Tis three o’clock; and, Romans, yet ere night

We shall try fortune in a second fight.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Brut. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

Clu. Statilius shew’d the torch-light; but, my lord,

He came not back: he is or ta’en, or slain.

Clitus. Sit thee down, Clitus; slaying is the word;—

A deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.

Clu. What! I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

[Whispering.

Brut. Peace then: no words.

Clu. I’ll rather kill myself.

Brut. Hark thee, Dardanius!

Clu. O, Dardanius!

Dard. Shall I do so as thee?

Clu. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dard. To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.

Clu. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,

That it runs over even at his eyes.

Brut. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Brut. Why, this, Volumnius.

The ghost of Cæsar hath appear’d to me
Two several times by night: at Sardis once;
And, this last night, here in Philippi’s fields.

I know my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Brut. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:—
Lest tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know’st that we two went to school together;
Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,
Hold thou my sword-hilts whilst I run on it.

Vol. That’s not an office for a friend, my lord.

Clu. Fly, fly, my lord! there is no tarrying here.

Brut. Farewell to you;—and you, and you, Volumnius.

Clu. Shaking hands severally.

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;—
Fa’th better to thee too. Strato.—Countrymen,
My heart doth joy, that yet in all my life
I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day,
More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,

By this vile conquest shall attain unto.

So, fare you well at once; for Brutus’ tongue

Hath almost ended his life’s history.

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would res’
That have but labour’d to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within; Fly, fly, fly!

Clu. Fly, my lord, fly!

Brut. Hence: I will follow.

[Exeunt Clitus, Dardanius, and Volumnius.

I pr’ythee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord.

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;—

Thy life hath had some snatches of honour in it:

Hold, then, my sword, and turn away thy face;
While I do run upon it. Will thou, Strato?

Strato. Give me your hand first: fare you well, my lord.

Brut. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still:
I kill’d not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his Sword, and dies.

Oct. What man is that?

Mez. My master’s man.—Strato, where is thy master?

Strato. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala:—
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;—
For Brutus only overcame himself, and no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov’d Lucilius’ saying true.

Oct. All that serv’d Brutus I will entertain them.

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Strato. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.
Mrs. How did my master, Strato?
Strat. I held the sword, and he did run on it.
Mrs. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.
And. This was the noblest Roman of them all:
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar;
He, only, in a generous' honest thought
Of common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"
Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect, and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.—
So, call the field to rest; and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open Place.
Thunders and lightning. Enter three Witches.

1 WITCH. When shall we three meet again, thunder, lightning, or in rain?
2 WITCH. When the hurlyburly's done, then the battle's lost and won.
3 WITCH. That will be ere the set of sun.
1 WITCH. Where the place?
2 WITCH. Upon the heath.
3 WITCH. There to meet with Macbeth.
1 WITCH. I come, Graymalkin! All. Paddock calls:—Anon.—air is foul, and soul is fair:
over through the fog and filthy air. [Witches vanish.

SCENE II.—A Camp near Fores.
Meeting within. Enter King Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report, seemeth by his plight, of the revolt be nearest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant, ho, like a good and hardy soldier, fought against my captivity. —Hail, brave friend!
ty to the king thy knowledge of the broil,
thou didst leave it.

Sold. Doubtful it stood;
two spent swimmers, that do eling together shook their art. The merciless Macdonwald worthy to be a rebel, for to that be multiplying villains of nature swarm upon him) from the western isles

Of Kernes and Gallowglasses is supplied;
And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's where: but all's too weak;
For brave Macbeth (well he deserves that name)
Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smock'd with bloody execution,
Like valor's minion, carv'd out his passage,
Till he fac'd the slave;
Which ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And flied his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!

Sold. As wholesome the sun 'gins his reflexion
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break; So from that spring, whence comfort seemed to come,
Discomfot swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark:
No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping Kernes to trust their heels,
But the Norwegian lord, surveying vantage,
With furnish'd arms, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?

Yes, As sparrow's eagles, or the hare the lion.
If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannon's overcharg'd with double cracks;
So they doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in recking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell. —
But I am 'saint, my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds:

1 A name intimating the sound of that it signifieth, as hawly hawly, for an uprose and tumultuous surge.—Peacham's Garden of Eloquence, 1577. 2 a sword. 3 Wide second. Part of Henry VI., Act iv., Sc. Ix. 4 quarry: in folio. Johnson made the change. 5 Not in a folio. Pope changed "breaking" of second, to "break."
ACT 1

MACBETH.

They smack of honour both.—Go, get him surgeons. [Exit Soldier, attended.

Enter ROSE AND ANGUS.

Who comes here?—
Mal. The worthy thane of Ross.
Len. What haste looks through his eyes! So should he look, that comes to speak things strange.
Ross. God save the king!
Dun. Whence cam’st thou, worthy thane? Ross. From Fife, great king; Where the Norweyan banners float the sky And fan our people cold. Norway himself, with terrible numbers, Assisted by that most disloyal traitor, The thane of Cawdor, began a dismal conflict; Till that Belona’s bridegroom, lap’d in’t proof, Confronted him with self-comparisons, Point against point, rebellious arm against arm, Curbing his lavish spirit: and, to conclude, The victory fell on us.—
Dun. Great happiness!
Ross. That now Sweno, the Norweyan’s king, craves composition; Nor would we deign him burial of his men, Till he disbursed at Saint Colme’s Inch Ten thousand dollars to our general use. Dun. No more that thane of Cawdor shall deseave Our bosom interest.—Go, pronounce his present death, And with his former title greet Macbeth.
Ross. I’ ll see it done.
Dun. What he hath lost noble Macbeth hath won.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Heath.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister? 2 Witch. Killing swine. 3 Witch. Sister, where thou?
1 Witch. A sailor’s wife had chestnuts in her lap, And mouch’d, and mouch’d, and mouch’d: “Give me,” quoth I:—
“Art thou the witch? the rump-fed ronyon cries. Her husband’s to Aleppo gone, master o’ the Tiger: But in a sieve I’ll thither sail, And, like a rat without a tail, I’ll do, I’ll do, and I’ll do. 2 Witch. I’ll give thee a weapon.
1 Witch. Thou art kind. 3 Witch. And I another. 1 Witch. I myself have all the other; And the very ports they blow, All the quarters that they knew I’ the shipman’s card to show. 1’ I’ll drain him dry as hay: Sleep shall, neither night nor day, Hang upon his pent-houses lid; He shall live a man forbid. Weary even—nights, nine times nine, Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine: Though his bark cannot be lost, Yet it shall be tempest-toss’d.— Look what I have.
2 Witch. Show me, show me. 1 Witch. Here I have a pilot’s thumb. Wreck’d d’thward he did come. [Drum within. 3 Witch. A drum! a drum! Macbeth doth come. All. The weird sisters, hand in hand, Posters of the sea and land, Thus do go about, about: Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, And thrice again, to make up nine. Peace!—the charm’s wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen. Ban. How fair it is called to Forres!—What are these So wither’d, and so wild in their attire! That look not like th’ inhabitants o’ the earth, And yet are on’t? Live you? or are you aunt? That man may question? You seem to understand me, By each at once her chappy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. You should be women, And yet your beards forbid me to interpret That you are so.
Macb. Speak, if you can.—What are you? 1 Witch. All hail! Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis! 2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor! 3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.
Ban. Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair?—I’ the name of truth Are ye fantastical, or that indeed Which not only ye abhor?—My noble partner You greet with present graces, and great prediction Of noble having, and of royal hope, That he seems rapt withal: to me you speak not If you can look into the seeds of time, And say which grain will grow, and which will not, Speak them to me, who neither beg, nor fear, Your favours, nor your hate.
2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier. 3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be some So, all hail, Macbeth, and Banquo! 1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail! Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more. By Sinel’s death, I know, I am thane of Glamis; But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives, A prosperous gentleman; and to his king Stands not within the prospect of belief, No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence You owe this strange intelligence? or why Upon this blasted heath you stop our way With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you. [Witches vanish.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has. And these are of them.—Whither have they vanished? Macb. Into the air; and what seem’d corporal me: As breath into the wind.—“Would they had stay’d” Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak about, Or have we eaten on the insane root, That takes the reason prisoner? Macb. Your children shall be kings.
Ban. You shall be king Macb. And thane of Cawdor too: went it not so? Ban. To the same self-same, and words. Who’s here Enter Ross and Angus.
Ross. The king hath happily receiv’d, Macbeth. The news of thy success; and when he reads Thy personal venture in the rebel’s fight, His wonders and his praises do contend, SCENE IV.

MACBETH.

With things forgotten.—Kind gentleman, your pains
Are register’d where every day I turn
The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king.—
[To Banquo.] Think upon what hath chanc’d: and at more time,
The interim having weigh’d it, let us speak*
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Mach. Till then, enough.—Come, friends. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALD BAIN,
LENOX, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not
Those in commission yet return’d?

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back; but I have spoke
With one that saw him die, who did report,
That very frankly he confess’d his treasons,
Implo’d your highness’ pardon, and set forth
A deep repentance. Nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it: he died
As one that had been studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow’d,
As ’t were a careless trifle.

Dun. There’s no art to find the mind’s construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSE, and ANGUS.
O worthiest cousin!

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me. Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wind of recompense is slow
To overtake thee: would thou hast deserv’d,
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been more! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Mach. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it pays itself. Your highness’ part
Is to receive our duties: and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants:
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honour.

Dun. Welcome hither:
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserv’d, nor must be known
No less to have done so; let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Bon. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm: whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland: which honour must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all descended.—From hence to Inverness,
And bind us farther to you.

Mach. The rest is labour, which is not us’d for you:
I’ll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach;
So, humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!

Mach. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a step

On which I must fall down, or else o'er-leaf, [Aside.
For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires
Let not light see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand; yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see. [Exit.
Dun. True, worthy Banquo: he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Inverness. A Room in Macbeth's Castle.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a letter.

Lady M. [Reads.] "They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them farther, they made themselves air, into which they vanished. While I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came misseises from the king, who all-hailed me, 'Thane of Cawdor:' by which title I knew, before these weird sisters astized me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, 'Hail, king that shalt be!' This have I thought good to deliver thee. My dearest partner of greatness, that thou might-est not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell."
Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be
What thou art promis'd—Yet I do fear thy nature:
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
To catch the nearest way. Thou wouldst be great;
Art not without ambition; but without
The illness should attend it: what thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongfully win: thou dost have, great Glamis,
That which cries, "Thus thou must do, if thou have it;
And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
Than wishest should be undone." His thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal.—

Enter an Attendant.

Att. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it.
Is not thy master with him? who, were 't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Att. So please you, it is true: our thane is coming.
One of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending:
He brings great news. [Exit Attendant.] The raven himself is hoarse:
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty: make thick my blood
Stop up th' access and passage to remorse;
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep pace between
Th' effect and it. Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances

You wait on nature's mischief. Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes,
Nor heaven peep through the blankness of the dark
To cry, "Hold, hold!"—

Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor
Greater than both, by the all-hall hereafter!

[They embrace.]

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?

Macb. To-morrow, as he purpose.

Lady M. O! never
Shall sun that mower see.
Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters: to beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent snow
But be the serpent under it. He that's coming Must be provided for; and you shall put
This night's great business into my deep stash,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign away and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak farther.

Lady M. Only look up clear:
To alter favour ever is to fear,
Leave all the rest to me. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The Same. Before the Castle.

Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo, Lenox, Macduff, Ross, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat: the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet: does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells woefully here: no juty, frieze,
Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed, and procreant cradle:
Where they much: breed and haunt, I have observ'd.
The air is delicate.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see! our honour'd hostess.
The love that follows us sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love: herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God yield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house. For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest our hermitage:—

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cou'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor; but he rides well,
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in event
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand; Conduct me to mine host: we love him highly, And shall continue our graces towards him. By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same. A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter, and pass over the stage, a Senor; and divers Servants with dishes and service. Then, enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 't were well
It were done quickly: if the assassination
Could trampl up the consequence, and catch
With his Successor's success; that but his blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here.
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,
We 'd jump the life to come.—But in these cases,
We still have judgment here; that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor: thus, a even-handed justice
Commends th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He 's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinman and his subject;
Strong both against the deed: then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan
Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead, like angels trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off;
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, horse'd
Upon the swift couriers of the air,
Their drench'd deeds in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself,
And falls on the other.—

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. How now! what news?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not, he has?

Macb. We will proceed no farther in this business:
He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glose,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since,
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale

At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afeard
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou art in desire? Wouldst thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life
And live a coward in thine own esteem?
Leaving me to fear to wait upon you,
Like the poor cat i' the adage?

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace.
I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.

Lady M. What boast was 't, then,
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place,
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both:
They have made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me:
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn as you
Have done to this.

If we should fail?

Lady M. We fail?
But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we 'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep, (Whereeto the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him) his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warden of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only: when in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? what not put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only!
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd?
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepless two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have done it?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled; and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. Court within the Castle.

Enter BANquo, and FLAMENCO, with a torch before him.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?

Fla. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fla. I take 't, 't is later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword. — There 's a husbandry in heaven;

Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep: merciful powers! Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose! —Give me my sword.—

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a torch.

Who's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed:

"An officer who placed and removed dishes. "schools": in folio.
Theobald made the change. "this": in f. e. 4. "The cat loves fish, but dares not wet her fast." 5 mo: in folio.  6. "beast": in f. e. 7 Some eds. place an exclamation, or comma, in place of the interrogation point; such, Drye informs us, was Mrs. Siddons' delivery of the passage—as if "we fail," was the conclusion of MACBETH's remark. 8 Overpower. 9 Puppet.
MACBETH.

ACT IV.

He hath been in unusual pleasure, and
Sent forth great largess to your offices.
This diamond he gives your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess, and shut up
In senseless peace. [Aside.]

Mack. Being unprepared,
Our will became the servant to defect,
Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well.
I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:
To you they show'd some truth. [Aside.
Mack. I think not of them:
Yet, when we can entertain an hour to serve,
We would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st pleasure.

Mack. If you shall deign to my consent, when 'tis,
It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none
In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsel'd.

Mack. Good repose, the while.

Ban. Thanks, sir: the like to you. [Exit Banquo and Fleance.

Mack. Go; bid thy mistresses, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.—

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:—
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going;
And such an instrument I was to use.—
Mince eyes are made the fools of the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon,1 of gouts of blood,
Which was not so before.—There's no such thing:
It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the one half world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain'd sleeper: 2 witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecate's offerings; and wither'd murder,
Alarum'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl!1 his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, 2 towards his design
Moves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
The very stones of my state of WHERE-ABOUT,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it.—Whilest I threaten, he lives:
Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[Exit.]

I go, and it is done: the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell,
That summons thee to heaven or to hell. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk hath Made me bold:
What hath henchmen? them hath given me fire.—Hark—

1 Rest of lines not well preserved. 2 sleep: in sense. 2 sides: in folio. Pope made the change. 3 Deuce was.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Who gives the stern's good-night. He is about it.
The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with nooke: I have drugg'd their pomse,
That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live, or die.

Macb. [Within.] Who's there?—what, ho! Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awaked,
And 'tis not done:—the attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us.—Hark! I laid their daggers ready,
You could not miss them.—Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done 't.—My husband?

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. I have done the deed.—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.

Did you not speak?

Macb. When?

Lady M. Now.

Macb. As I descended.

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark!—

Who lies in the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight. [Shouting his hand.
Lady M. A foolish thought to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in 's sleep, and on cried, "murder!" That they did wake each other: I stood and heard them:
But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.
Macb. One cried "God bless us!" and "Amen," the other,
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.
Listening their fear, I could not say amen,
When they did say God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But whereabouts could I pronounce amen? I had most need of blessing, and amen.
Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After tilth ways: so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, "Sleep no more!"

Macbeth does murder sleep,—the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravelled1 sleeves of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's balls,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Lady M. What do you mean?

Macb. Still it cried, "Sleep no more!" to all us:—

"Glamis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor Shall sleep no more: Macbeth shall sleep no more!"

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane?

You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brainickly of things. Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
Why did you bring these daggers from the place? They must lie there: go, carry them, and smear The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more:
I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on 't again, I dare not.

[Exit Macbeth.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
SCENE III.

MACBETH.

Give me the daggers. The sleeping, and the dead, Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed, 'Twill gild the faces of the grooms withal, For it must seem their guilt. [Exit.—Kneeling within.]

Macb. Whence is that knocking?—
How is't with me, when every noise appals me?
What hands are here! Ha! they pluck out mine eyes, Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green one red. 1

Re-enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a knocking at the south entry: —retire we to our chamber. A little water clears us of this deed: how easy is it, then? Your constancy faith left you unattended.—[Knock.] Hark! more knocks.

Macb. Let on your nightgown, lest occasion call us, and show us to be watchful.—Be not lost, poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed, 'tis best not to know myself.

[Knock.]

VAKE DUNCAN with thy knocking: I would thou coulist! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter a Porter. [Knocking within.

Porter. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man wereenter of hell-gate, he should have old 2 turning the key.

Knocking. [Knock, knock, knock. Who's there, the name of Beelzebub?—Here's a farmer, that aired himself on the expectation of plenty: come in me; have napkins enough about you; here you'll wait for 't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock. Who's there, the other devil's name?—'Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either Male: who committed treason enough for God's sake, it could not equivocate to heaven: O! come in, equivo- cator! [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock. Who's here?—'Faith, here's an English tailor come hither for stealing out of a French hose: come in, tailor: are you may roast your goose, [Knocking.] Knock, knock, never at quiet! What are you?—But this lice is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no farther: I had thought to have let in some of all pros- sions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting amire. [Knocking.] Anon, anon: I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.

Enter MACDUFF and LENOX.

Macb. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, that you do lie so late?

Port. 'Faith, sir, we were courting till the second clock: and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macb. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Merry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. schery, sir, it provokes, and unproverbs: it provokes desire, but it takes away the performance. There's, much drink may be said to be an equivocator, th lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets m'on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and sheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand: in conclusion, equivocates him m-sleep, and, giving m the lie, leaves him.

Macb. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.

Port. That did it, sir; 'tis the very throat on me: but I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macb. Is thy master stirring?—

Enter MACDUFF, 3 in his night-gown.

Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir.

Macb. Good-morrow, both.

Macb. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. He did command me to call timely on him: I have almost slip'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macb. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you;

But yet, 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in physics pain.

This is the door.

Macb. I'll make so bold to call, For 'tis my limited service. [Exit MACDUFF. Len. Goes the king hence to-day?

Macb. He does:—he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly: where we lay, Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say, Lamentings heard 't the air; strange screams of death, And prophesying with accents terrible
Of dire combustion, and confus'd events, New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure bird Flamion'd the livelong night: some say, the earth Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'T was a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macb. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor heart, Cannot conceive, nor name thee.

Macb. Len. What's the matter?

Macb. Confusion now hath made his master-piece. Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building.

Macb. What is 't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macb. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon.—Do not bid me speak:
See, and then speak yourselves.—Awake! awake!—

[Exeunt MACBETH and LENOX.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. What's the business, That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley The sleepers of the house? speak, speak?

Macb. O, gentle lady! 'T is not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear,

Enter BANQUO unready.

Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo! Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas! What! in our house?

Ban. Too cruel, any where. Dear Duff, I prythee, contradict thyself, MACBETH.

ACT II.

And say, it is not so.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance, I had liv’d a blessed time, for from this instant There’s nothing serious in mortality; All is but toys: renown and grace are dead; The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss?

Mal. You are, and do not know’t: The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood Is stopp’d; the very source of it is stopp’d.

Mal. Your royal father’s murder’d.

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem’d, had done’t. Their hands and faces were all bsdg’d with blood; So were their daggers, which, unwip’d, we found Upon their pillows: they star’d, and were distracted. No man’s life was to be trusted with them. Macb. O! yet I do repent me of my fury, That I did kill them.

Mal. Wherefore did you so?

Mal. Who can be wise, amaz’d, temperate and furious, Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man: The expedition of my violent love Out-ran the pauser reason.—Here lay Duncan, His silver skin las’d with his golden blood; And his gash’d stabs look’d like a breach in nature For ruin’s wasteful entrance: there, the murderers, Sleep’d in the colours of their trade, their daggers Unmannerly breech’d with gore. Who could refrain, That had a heart to love, and in that heart Courage to make ‘s love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho! Macd. Look to the lady. [Lady Macbeth swoons.]

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues, That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken Here, where our fate, hid in an auger-hole, May rush, and seize us? Let’s away: our tears Are not yet brec’d.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow Upon the foot of motion. Ban. Look to the lady.—[Lady Macb. is borne out. And when we have our naked frailties hid, That suffer in exposure, let us meet. And question this most bloody piece of work, To know it farther. Fears and scruples shake us: In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence, Against the undivul’d pretence* I fight Of treasonous malice.

Macc. And so do I. All. So all. Macc. Let’s briefly put on manly readiness, And meet i’ the hall together.

Al. Well contented. [Exeunt all but Mal. and Don.]

Mal. What will you do? Let’s not consort with them: To show an unfelt sorrow is an office. Which the false man does easy. I’ll to England. Don. To Ireland, I: our separated fortune Shall keep us both the safer, where we are, There’s daggers in men’s smiles: the near in blood, The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that’s shot Hath not yet lighted, and our safest way Is to avoid the aim: therefore, to horse; And let us not be dainty of leave-taking, But shift away. There’s warrant in that theft Which steals itself, when there’s no mercy left.

[Exeunt

SCENE IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter Rosse and an Old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well; Within the volume of which time I have seen Hours dreadful, and things strange, but this sore night Hath trified former knowings.

Rosse. Ah! good father, Thou seest, the heavens, as troubled with man’s act, Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock ’tis day, And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp. Is ’t night’s predomiance, or the day’s shame, That darkness does the face of earth entomb, When living light should kiss it?

Old M. ’Tis unnatural, Even like the deed that’s done. On Tuesday last, A falcon, towering in her pride of place, Was by a mousing owl hawk’d at, and kill’d.

Rosse. And Duncan’s horses (a thing most strange and certain) Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race, Turr’d wild in nature, broke their stails, flung out, Contending against obedience, as they would Make war with mankind.

Old M. ’Tis said, they ate each other.

Rosse. They did so; to th’ amazement of mine eyes. That look’d upon ’t. Here comes the good Macduff.—

Enter Macduff.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Mal. Why, see you not Rosse. Is’t now who did this more than bloody deed? Mal. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Rosse. Alas, the dr.’

Mal. What good could they pretend?

Mal. They were suborn’d, Malcolm, and Donalbain, the king’s two sons, Are stoln away and fled; which puts upon them Suspicion of the deed.

Rosse. Gainst nature still: Thriftless ambition, that will ravin up Thine own life’s means!—Then, ’t is most like, The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth. Mal. He is already nam’d, and gone to Scone To be invested. Rosse. Where is Duncan’s body? Mal. Carried to Colme-kill; The sacred store-house of his predecessors, And guardian of their bones.

Rosse. Will you to Scone?

Mal. No, cousin; I’ll to Fife.

Rosse. Well, I will thither.

Mal. Well, may you see things well done there thence— Lest our old robes sit easier than our new! Rosse. Farewell, father.

Old M. God’s benison go with you; and with those That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. [Exeunt
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Forests. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hast it now, king. Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weird women promised: and, I fear,
Thou play'st most foully for 't: yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them,
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches show)
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But, hush! no more.

Seeret. Enter Macbeth, as King; Lady Macbeth, as Queen; Lennox, Ross, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Lay your highness' Command upon me, to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice
(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous)
In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.
Is't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become the borrower of the night
For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel partake, filling their hearers
With strange invention. But of that to-morrow;
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Pleance with you?

Ban. Ay, my good lord, our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift, and sure of foot;
And so do commend you to their banks.

Farwell.——[Exit Banquo.

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night. To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Exeunt Lady Macbeth, Lords, Ladies, &c.

Scurrab, a word with you. Attend those men
Our pleasure?

Atten. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.—[Exit Atten.] To be thus is nothing,
But to be safely thus.—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep, and in his royalty of nature
Reigns that which would be fear'd: 't is much he dares;
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To set in safety. There is none but he Whose being I do fear, and under him

1 Let your highness: in L. 2 Del. 3 Fr. & Poutrane, extremity.

My genius is rebuk'd, as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings.
Upon my head they play'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my hand;
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlinear hand,
No son of mine succeeding. 'Tis't be so,
For Banquo's issue have I fill'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them: and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man.
To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance.—Who's there?—Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now, go to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

1 Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now, Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know,
That it was he, in the times past, which held you
So under fortune; which, you thought, had been
Our innocent sw. This I made good to you
In our last conference; pass'd in probation with you.

How you were borne in hand; how cross'd; the instruments;
Who wrought with them; and all things else, that might,
To half a soul, and to a notion craz'd,
Say, "Thus did Banquo."

1 Mur. You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so; and went farther, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go? Are you so gospell'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?

1 Mur. We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men,
As hounds, and grey-hounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs.
Thoughts, water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cloped
All by the name of dogs: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The house-keeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him clois'd, whereby he does receive
Particular addition, from the quill
That writes them all alike; and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file
Not i' the worst rank of manhood, say it,
And I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off,
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

2 Mur. I am one, my hege,
Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world
Have so incom'd, that I am reckless what
I do to spite the world.

1 Mur. And I another,
So wearied with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Mach.

Know Banquo was your enemy.

Mach. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life. And though I could
With bare-faced power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, but wait his fall
Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love,
Miming the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.

2 Mur. We shall, my lord, perform what you command us.

Mach. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour, at most,
I will advise you where to plant yourselves,
Acquaint you, with a perfect spy, o' the time,
The moment on 't; for 't must be done to-night,
And something from the palace; always thought,
That I require a clearness: and with him.
(To leave no rubs, nor botches, in the work)
Fleance his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart:
I'll come to you anon.

2 Mur. We are resolv'd, my lord.

Mach. I'll call upon you straight: abide within.

[Exeunt Murderers.]

It is concluded: Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it find heaven, must find it out to-night.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Room.

Enter Lady MACTHE and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?
Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure
For a few words.

Serv. Madam, I will.

[Exit.

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'T is safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my lord! why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Things without remedy,
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotched the snake, not kill'd it:
She'll close, and be herself, whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.

But I't the eternal frame of things disjointed,
Both worlds suffer, ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams,
That shake us nightly. Better be with the dead,
Whom we to gain our peace have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him farther!

1 Scaly-winged. 2 Blinding 3 near: in f. e.
SCENE IV.—A Room of State in the Palace.
A Banquet prepared. Enter MACBETH, Lady MACBETH,
Rosse, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

MACB. You know your own degrees; sit down: at first and last the hearty welcome.

LORDS. Thanks to your majesty.

MACB. Ourselves will mingle with society;
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state; but in best time
We will require her welcome.

LADY M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

MACB. See, they encounter thee with their hearts'
thanks.
Both sides are even: here I'll sit i' the midst.
Be large in mirth: anon, we'll drink a measure
Enter first Murderer, to the door.
The table round.—There's blood upon thy face.

MACB. 'Tis Banquo's then.
MACB. 'Tis better thee without, than him within.
as he despatch'd?

MUR. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.
MACB. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats;
Yet he is good, that did the like for Fleance:
If thou didst it, thou art the unpard'le.

MUR. Most royal sir, Fleance is 'scap'd.

MACB. Then comes my fit again: I had else been Whole as the marble, founded as the rock, [perfect;
As broad and general as the cooling air;
But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears.—But Banquo's safe?

MUR. Ay, my good lord, safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trench'd gashes on his head,
The least a death to nature.

MACB. Thanks for that.—
There the grown serpent lies: the worm, 'tis fled,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone: to-morrow
We'll hear ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.

LADY M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch'd the while 'tis making;
'Tis given with welcome. To feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

MACB. Sweet remembrance!—
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

LEN. May it please your highness sit?
[The Ghost of Banquo enters, and sits in Macbeth's place.

MACB. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the grace'd person of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance?

ROSS. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness
To grace us with your royal company?

MACB. The table's full.

LEN. Here is a place reserv'd, sir.
[Pointing to the Ghost.

MACB. Where?

LEN. Here, my good lord.
What is't that moves your highness?

MACB. Which of you have done this?

LORDS. What, my good lord?

MACB. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake
Thy gory looks at me.

ROSS. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.

LADY M. Sit, worthy friends. My lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep seat.
The fit is momentary; upon a thought
He will again be well. If much you note him
You shall offend him, and extend his passion;
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

[Coming to Macbeth: aside to him.

MACB. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on
That which might appal the devil.

LADY M. O, proper stuff!
This is the very painting of your fear.
This is the air-drawn daggar, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O! these flaws, and starts, (Impostors to true fear) would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all's done,
You look but on a stool.

MACB. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look! lo! how Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.—
If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Exit Ghost.

LADY M. What! quite unman'd in folly?
MACB. If I stand here, I saw him.

LADY M. Fie! for shame!
MACB. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden times.
Ere human statute purg'd the gentle weal;
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die,
And there an end; but now, they rise again
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools. This is more strange
Than such a murder is.

LADY M. My worthy lord, [Going back to her state.
Your noble friends do lack you.

MACB. I do forget.—
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then, I'll sit down.—Give me some wine: fill full.—
I drink to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss:
Re-enter Ghost.

LEN. Would he were here to all, and him, we thirst
And all to all.

LORDS. Our duties, and the pledge.
MACB. Avant! and quit my sight. Let the earth hide thee!
Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with.

LADY M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time
MACB. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I exhibit, then protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!

[Exit Ghost.

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone.
MACBETH.

ACT III.

I am a man again.—pray you, sit still.
Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.
Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange,
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.
Rosse. What sights, my lord?
Lady M. I pray you, speak not: he grows worse and worse;
Question enragés him. At once, good night:
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.
Len. Good night; and better health
Attend his majesty.
Lady M. A kind good night to all! [Exeunt Lords and Attendants.
Macb. It will have blood, they say; blood will have blood:
Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;
Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth
The secret'st man of blood.—What is the night?
Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.
Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person,
At our great bidding?
Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?
Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send.
There's not a one of them, but in his house
I'll keep a servant fe'd. I will to-morrow,
(And betimes I will) to the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,
By the worst means, the worst. For mine own good,
All causes shall give way: I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand,
Which must be acted ere they may be scannd.'
Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.
Macb. Come, we'll to sleep. My strange and self-abuse
Is the invincible fear, that wants hard use:
We are yet but young in deed. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Heath.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting Hecate.
1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate! you look angerly.
Hec. Have I not reason, beldame as you are,
Saucy, and over-bold? How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles, and affairs of death;
And I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part,
Or show the glory of our art?
And, which is worse, all you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spiteful, and wrathful: who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' the morning: thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels, and your spells, provide,
Your charms, and every thing beside.
I am for the air; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal and a fatal end:
Great business must be wrought ere noon.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
Age that, distil'd by magic sleights,
Shall raise such artificial spirits
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion.
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear;
And, you all know, security
Is mortals' chiefest enemy.
Song. [Within.] Come away, come away, &c.
Hark! I am call'd: my little spirit, see,
Sit in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit Hecate.
1 Witch. Come, let's make haste, 'till soon be back again. [Exeunt Witches.

SCENE VI.—Forests. A Room in the Palace.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret farther: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne. The gracious Duncan
Was pitted of Macbeth:—marry, he was dead;
And the right valiant Banquo too late;
Whom, you may say, if 't please you, Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled. Men must not walk too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain,
To kill their gracious father? damned fact!
How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight,
In pious rage the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely, too;
For 't would have anger'd any heart alive,
To hear the men deny 't. So that I say,
He has borne all things well: and I do think,
That had he Duncan's sons under his key,
(As, an' t please heaven, he shall not) they should find
What 't were to kill a father; so should Fleance.
But, peace!—for from broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace. Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court; and is receiv'd
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect. Thither Macduff
Is gone, to pray the holy king upon his aid
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Seward;
That by the help of these, (with Him above
To ratify the work) we may again
Given to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithfull homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. And this report
Hath so exasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff.

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, "Sir, not I!"
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums, as he who should say, "You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer."
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd.
3 Witch. Harper's cries,—"T is time, 't is time.
1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.—
Toad, that under cold stone,
Day and nights has thirty-one
Swelter'd venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i' th' charmed pot.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.
2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing;
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.
All. Double, double toil and trouble,
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.
3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
Witches' mummy; jaw, and gulf
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat, and slips of yew
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick andsla:
Add thereto a tiger's chaudron;
For the ingredients of our cauldron,
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.
2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood;
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecate, and other Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains,
And every one shall share i' th' gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes.—

[Knocking. Open, open, whoever knocks.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags!
What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,

[How'er you come to know it] answer me:
Though you unite the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though becalm'd corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down;
Though castles topple o'er their warders' heads;
Though palaces and pyramids do stoop,
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germens'tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.

2 Witch. Demand.

3 Witch. We'll answer.

1 Witch. Say, if thou'dst rather hear it from our mouths,
Or from our masters?

Macb. Call 'em: let me see 'em.

1 Witch. Pour in sov's blood, that hath eaten
Her nine farrow; grease, that's sweated
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

All. Come high, or low;
Thyself, and office, dully show.

Thunder. 1 Apparition, an armed Head.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

2 Witch. He knows thy thought:
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

1 App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;
Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me:—enough.

[Descends.

Macb. What's'er thou art, for thy good caution thanks:
Thou hast harp'd my fear aright.—But one word more.

1 Witch. He will not be commanded. Here's another,
More potent than the first.

Thunder. 2 Apparition, a bloody Child.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!—

Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.

App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute: laugh to scorn
The power of man, for none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth.

[Descens.

Macb. Then live, Macduff: what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.—What is this,

Thunder. 3 Apparition, a Child crowned, with a Tree
in his Hand:

That rises like the issue of a king;
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speak not to 't.

App. Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him. [Descends.

Macb. That will never be:
Who can impress the forest; bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? sweet bodements! good!
Rebellion! head, rise never, till the wood
Of Birnam rise; and our high-plea'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom.—Yet my heart
Thro' to know one thing: tell me, (if your art
Can tell so much) shall Banquo’s issue ever
Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied; deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know,—
Why sinks that cauldron? and what noise is this?

[The cauldron descends. Hautboys sound.

1 Witch. Show! 2 Witch. Show! 3 Witch. Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart.
A show of eight Kings and Banquo first and last, with a Glass in his Hand.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo: down!
Thy crown does near mine eyes—ballets;—and thy hair.
Thou other gold-bondow brow art like the first—
A third is like the former.—Filthy hags!
Why do you show me this?—A fourth?—Start, eyes!
What! will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?
Another yet?—A seventh? I’ll see no more:
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shows me many more; and some I see,
That two-fold balls and treble sceptres carry.
Horrible sight!—Now, I see, ’tis true;
For the blood-bolter’d Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his.—What! is this so?

1 Witch. Ay, air, all this is so: but why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?—
Come, sisters, cheer up he sprites,
And show the best of our delights.
I’ll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antic round;
That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay.

Music. The witches dance, and vanish.

Macb. Where are they? Gonsa.—Let this pernicious hour
Stand eye accursed in the calendar!—
Come in! without there! Enter LENOX.

Len. What’s your grace’s will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?
Len. No, my lord.

Macb. Came they not by you?

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infecked be the air whereon they ride.
And damn’d all those that trust them!—I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was’t came by?

Len. ’Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word,
Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England?

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat’st my dread exploits:
The bloody purpose never is o’ертook,
Unless the deed go with it. From this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And even now,
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done:
The castle of Macduff I will surprise;
Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o’ the sword
His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
That trace him in his line. No boasting like a fool;
This deed I’ll do, before this purpose cool:
But no more flights.—Where are these gentlemen?
Come; bring me where they are. [Exit.

SCENE II. —Fife. A Room in MACDUFF’S Castle.

Enter Lady MACDUFF, her Son, and Ross.

L. Macd. What had he done to make him fly the Ross. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had some
His flight was madness. When our actions do not,
Our fears do make us traitors.

Ross. You know not,
Whether it was his wisdom, or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave
His mansion, and his titles, in a place [babes.
From whence himself does fly? He loves us not;
He wants the natural touch; for the poor wret
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
All is the fear, and nothing is the love:
As little is the wisdom, where the flight
So runs against all reason.

Ross. My dearest cot,
I pray you, school yourself: but, for your husband,
He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o’ the season. I dare not speak much farther
But crue besse the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know it ourselves: when we hold rumour
From what we fear, yet know not what we fear,
But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way and move.—I take my leave of you:
’T shall not be long but I’ll be here again.
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before.—My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father’s he is, and yet he’s fatherless.

Ross. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort.
I take my leave at once. [Exit Ross.

L. Macd. Sirrah, your father’s dead:
And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou’dst never fear the met nor time,
The pit-fall, nor the gin.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead: how will thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any mark.

Then you’ll buy’em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thou speakest with all thy wit,
And yet I faith, with wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be hanged.
Scene III.

MACBETH.

Son. And must they all be hanged that swear and lie?
L. Macd. Every one.
Son. Who must hang them?
L. Macd. Why, the honest men.
Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.
L. Macd. Now God help thee, poor monkey! But how wilt thou do for a father?
Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.
L. Macd. Poor pratster, how thou talk'st!
Enter a Messenger.
Mes. Bless you, fair dame. I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.
I doubt some danger does approach you nearly:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage,
To do worse to you were fell cruelty,
Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you!
I dare abide no longer.
[Exit Messenger.
L. Macd. Whither should I fly?
I have done no harm; but I remember now
I am in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly! why then, alas!
Do I put up that womanly defence.
To say, I have done no harm?—What are these faces?
Enter Murderers.
Mvr. Where is your husband?
L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou mayst find him.
Mvr. He's a traitor.
Son. Thou liest, thou shag-ear'd villain.
Mvr. What, you egg! [Stabbing him.
Young fry of treachery.
Son. He has kill'd me, mother:
Run away, I pray you.
[Dies.
[Exit Lady Macduff, crying murder, and pursued by the Murderers.

Scene III.—England. A Room in the King's Palace.
Enter Malcolm and Macduff.
Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty.
Macc. Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword, and like good men
Bestride our down-fall'n birthdastm. Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllable of colour.
Mal. What I believe, I'll wait;
What know, believe; and what I can redress,
As I shall find the time to friend, I will:
What you have spoken, it may be so, perchance.
This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,
Was once thought honest: you have lov'd him well;
He hath not touch'd you yet; you are young; but some thing
You may deserve of him through me, and wisdom
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb
To appease an angry god.
Macc. I am not treacherous.
Mal. But Macbeth is.
A good and virtuous nature may recall
In an imperial charge. But I shall crave your pardons:
That which you are my thoughts cannot transverse;
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
Though all things (ouf would wear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must still look so.
Macc. I have lost my hopes.
Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.
Why in that rawness left you wife and child,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave-taking—I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties; you may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think.
Macc. Blood, blood, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee! wear thou thy wrongs;
Thy title is offe'd!—Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp.
And the rich East to boot.
Mal. Be not offended:
I speak not as in absolute fear of you.
I think our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds: I think, withal,
There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here, from gracious England, have I offer'd [Showing a Pope.
Of goodly thousands; but, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before,
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.
Macc. What should he be?
Mal. It is myself I mean; in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be ripen'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd
With my confinless harms.
Macc. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth.
Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name; but there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'er-bear,
That did oppose my will. Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.
Macc. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny: it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may Enjoy your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink
We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd.
Mal. With this, there grows
In my most ill-composed affection such
A stainless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels, and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

MacD. This avarice
Sticks deeper, grows with more pernicious root,
Than summer-seeming lust; and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear;
Scotland hath poison² to fill up your will,
Of your more own. All these are portable
With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none. The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no reliash of them; but I abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. But, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

MacD. O Scotland, Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

MacD. Fit to govern!
No, not to live.—O, nation miserable!
With an unaided tyrant, bloody-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again,
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accur'd,
And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen, that bore thee,
Oft'ner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived. Fare thee well.
These evils thru repeat'st upon thyself
Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast!
Thy hope end here.

MacD. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hast from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power, and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste; but God above
Deal between thee and me, for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own destrac'tion; here abjure
The taints and blame's I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarce have covet'd what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow, and delight
No less in truth, than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself. What I am truly
Is thine, and my poor country's, to command:
Whether, indeed, before thy hero-approach,
Old Sionard, with ten thousand warlike men,
Already at a point, was setting forth.
Now, we'll together; and the chance of goodness
Be like our warrant'd quarrel. Why are you silent?

MacD. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'T is hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth, I pray you?

Doc. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched souls,
That stay his cure: their malady convinces²
The great assay of heart; but at his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

[Exit Doctor.

MacD. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'T is call'd the evil.

A most miraculous work in this good king,
Which often, since my here remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows; but strangely-visited people,
All swoon and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 't is spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy,
And sunry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Ross.

Rosc. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

MacD. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now. Good God, betimes remove
The means that make us strangers!

Rosc. Sir, amen.

MacD. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosc. Alas, poor country!

Mal. Almost afraid to know itself. It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave; where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile:
Where sights, and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy: the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives
Expiry before the flowers in their caps,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

MacD. O, relation,
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What is the newest grief?

Rosc. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker.

Each minute tears a new one.

Mal. How does my wife?

Rosc. Why, well.

Mal. And all my children?

Rosc. Well, too.

Mal. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Rosc. No; they were well, at peace, when I last left them.

Mal. Be not a niggard of your speech: how goes it?

Rosc. When I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot.
Now is the time of help. Your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be it their comfort,
We are coming thither. Gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward, and ten thousand men:
An older, and a better soldier, none
That Christendom gives out.
SCENE I.

MACBETH. 785

Rosse. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like!  But I have words,
That would be howl'd out in the desert air
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concern they?

Rosse. The general cause, or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast?

Macd. No mind that's honest
But it in shares some woe, though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Rosse. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me; quickly let me have it.

Macd. Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife, and babes,
Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!—
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows:
Give sorrow words; the grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

Rosse. My children too?

Mal. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Rosse. And I must be from thence!

Mal. I have said.

Rosse. My wife kill'd too?

Mal. Be comforted:
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?

Rosse. Did you say, all?—O, hell-kite!—All?

Mal. What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop?

Macd. Dispute it like a man.

Mal. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it like a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me.—Did heaven look on,
And would not take their part?  Sinful Macduff!  They Were all struck for thee.  Naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls.  Heaven rest them now!

Mal. This tune* goes manly.

Rosse. Come, go we to the king: our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave.  Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
[may; put on their instruments.  Receive what cheer you
The night is long that never finds the day.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Dunsinane.  A Room in the Castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic, and a waiting Gentlewoman.

Doc. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report.  When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return unto bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doc. A great perturbation in nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.  In this slumberous agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what at any time have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doc. You may, to me; and 't is most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one, having no wit-
ess to confirm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a Taper.

Doc. Lo you!  here she comes.  This is her very guise, and upon my life fast asleep.  Observe her: stand close.

Doc. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 't is her command.

Doc. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Doc. What is it she does now?  Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

[SCENE I.]

* Cast4  * Hap of dead game.  * time: is foils.  Rowe made the change.  * * Not in f. e
Doc. Even so?
Lady M. To bed, to bed: there's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand. What's done, cannot be undone: to bed, to bed, to bed.
[Exit Lady MACBETH.

Doc. Will she go now to bed?
Gent. Directly.

Doc. Foul whisperings are abroad. Unnatural deeds Do breed unnatural troubles: infected minds To their dear pillows will discharge their secrets. More needs she the divine, than the physician.--- God, God, forgive us all! Look after her; Remove from her the means of all annoyance, And still keep eyes upon her.---So, good night: My mind she has mated, and amaz'd my sight. I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Country near Dunsinane.
Enter, with Drum and Colours, MENTH, CATHNESS, ANGUS, LENOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm, His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff. Revenues burn in them; for their dear causes Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood Shall we well meet them: that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knows, if Donalbain be with his brother?
Len. For certain, air, he is not. I have a file Of all the gentry: there is Siward's son, And many tough youth, that even now Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?
Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies. Some say, he's mad: others, that lesser hate him, Do call it valiant fury; but, for certain, He cannot buckler his distemper'd course Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel His secret murders sticking on his hands; Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach: Those he commands move only in command, Nothing in love: now does he feel his title Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who, then, shall blame His waster'd senses to recoil and start. When all that is within him does condemn Itself, for being there?

Cath. Well; march we on, To give obedience where 'tis truly owed: Meet we the medicine of the sickly weak; And with him pour we, in our country's purge, Each drop of us.

Men. Or so much as it needs To dow the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.
Enter MACBETH, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all: Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane, I cannot taint with fear. What's the boy Malcolm? Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know All mortal consequences have pronounce me thus:—

"Fear not, Macbeth; no man that's born of woman Shall e'er have power upon thee."—Then fly, faines And mingle with the English epicures: [thanes. The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear, Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd loon! Where go'st thou that thou goest look? Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear. Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch? Death of thy soul! those linen cheekers of thine Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. [Exit Serv.] Seyton!— I am sick at heart. When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push Will chair me over, or dissat me now.

I have liv'd long enough: my May of life Is fall'n into the seen, the yellow leaf; And that which should accompany old age, As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends, I must not look to have; but, in their stead, Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, breath, Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare not. Seyton!—

Enter Seyton.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What news more? Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported. Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd. Give me my armour.

Sey. 'T is not needed yet.

Macb. I'll put it on. Send out more horses, skip to the country round; Hang those that talk of fear. Give me mine armour. How does your patient, doctor?

Doc. Not so sick, my lord, As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies, That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that. Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd, Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow, Raze out the written troubles of the brain, And with some sweet oblivious antidote Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous grief, Which weighs upon the heart?

Doc. Therein the patient Must minister unto himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs; I'll none of it.— Come, put mine armour on: give me my staff.— Seyton, send out.—Doctor, the thames fly from me.— Come, sir, despatch.—If thou couldst, doctor, cast The water of my land, find her disease, And purge it to a sound and pristine health, I would applaud thee to the very echo, That should applaud again.—Pull 't off, I say, What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug. Would scour these English hence?—Hear'st thou of them?

Doc. Ay, my good lord: your royal preparation Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it about me.— I will not be afraid of death and bane, Till Birnam wood come to Dunsinane. [Exit Doc. Were I from Dunsinane a way and clear, Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.

---

SCENE IV.—Country near Dunsinane: a Wood in view.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Malcolm, old Siward, and his Son, Macduff, Menteith, Cathness, Angus, Ligon, Rossie, and Soldiers marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope, the days are near at hand, that chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siw. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough, and bear it before him: thereby shall we shadow the numbers of our host, and make discovery Er in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Siw. We learn no other but the confident tyrant keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure our setting down before 't.

Ment. 'Tis his main hope; for where there is advantage to be gotten, both more and less have given him the revolt, and none serve with him but constrained things, whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures attend the true event, and put we on industrious soldiership.

Siw. The time approaches, that will with due decision make us know what we shall say we have, and what we owe. Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate, but certain issue strokes must arbitrate; towards which, advance the war. [Exeunt, marching.

SCENE V.—Dunsinane. Within the Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colours, Macbeth, Seyton, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls; the cry is still, "They come!" Our castle's strength will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, till famine and the eagle eat them up.

Were they not far'd with those that should be ours, we might have met them dareful, beard to beard, head to head, heart to heart, foot to foot, [A cry within, of Women. and beat them backward home. What is that noise?

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord. [Exit.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fear. The time has been, my senses would have quail'd to hear a night-shriek; and my fell breath would at a dismalsome noise, and stir, as life were in't. I have supp'd full with horrors; dreerness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts, cannot once start me.

Re-enter Seyton.

Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter: there would have been a time for such a word. To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, creeping in this petty pace from day to day, to the last syllable of recorded time; and all our yesterdays have lighted fools the way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle! life's but a walking shadow; a poor player, that struts and frets his hour upon the stage, and then is heard no more: it is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing.

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story, quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord, I should report that which I say I saw, but know not how to do't.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill, I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought, the wood began to move.

Macb. Liar, and slave! Let me endure thy wrath, if it be not so. Within this three mile may you see it coming; I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false, upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive, till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth, I care not if thou dost for me much.—I pull in resolution; and begin to doubt th' equivocation of the fiend, that lies like truth: "Fear not, till Birnam wood come to Dunsinane!"—and now a wood comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out!—If this, which it avouches, does appear, there is no flying hence, nor tarrying here. I'm gin to be weary of the sun, and with th' estate o' the world we are now undone—Ring the alarum bell! Blow, wind! come, wrack! At least we'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Macduff, &c., and their Army with Boughs.

Mal. Now near enough: your leafy screens throw down, and show like those you are.—You, worthy uncle, shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son, Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we, Shall take upon's what else remains to do, according to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.—Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night, let us be beaten, if we cannot fight. Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath, those clamorous harbinger's of blood and death. [Exeunt. Alarums continued.

SCENE VII.—The Same. Another Part of the Plain.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake: I cannot fly, but, bear-like, I must fight the course: What's he, that was not born of woman? Such a one Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young Siward.

Yo. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou 'lt be afraid to hear it.
Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name, Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.
Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, no more fearful.
Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant: with my sword I'll prove the lie thou speakest. [They fight, and young Siward is slain.

Macb. Thou wast born of woman: But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn, Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macd. That way the noise is.—Tyrant, show thy face;
MACBETH.

I throw my warlike shield:—lay on, Macduff,
And damn'd be he that first cries, "Hold, enough!"
[Exeunt, fighting.

Mal. I would, the friends we miss were safe arriv'd
Sit. Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.
Ross. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt.
He only liv'd but till he was a man,
The which no sooner had his prowess confir'm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Sit. Then he is dead?
Ross. Ay, and brought off the field. Your cause of sorrow
Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sit. Had he his hurts before?
Ross. Ay, on the front.

Sit. Why then, God's soldier be he Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so, his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow
And that I'll spend for him.

Sit. They say, he parted well, and paid his score,
And God be with him!—Here comes newer content Re-enter Macduff, with Macbeth's Head on a Palfrey.

Mac. Hail, king! for so thou art. Behold, where stands [Sticking the Pike in the ground]
The usurper's cursed head: the time is free.
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—
Hail, king of Scotland!

All. Hail, king of Scotland! [Flourish.

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of time,
Before we reckon with our several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen, Henceforth be ears; the first that ever Scotland In such an honour nam'd. What 's more to do, Which would be piastled newly with the time,— As calling home our exil'd friends abroad, That fill the snares of watchful tyranny; Producing forth the cruel ministers Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen, Who, as 't is thought, by self and violent hands Took off her life;—this, and what needful else That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace, We will perform in measure, time, and place.
So, thanks to all at once, and to each one, Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Elsinore. A Platform before the Castle. Francisco on his Post. Enter to himBernardo.

Ber. Who's there?

Fran. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold Yourself.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. 'Tis new struck twelve: get thee to bed, Francis.

Fran. For this relief much thanks. 'Tis bitter cold, And I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, The rivals of my watch, bid them haste.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Fran. I think I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who is there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegenmen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O! farewell, honest soldier:

Who hath reliev'd you?

Fran. Bernardo has my place.

Give you good night. [Exit Francisco.

What! is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio: welcome, good Marcellus.

Hor. What, has this thing appear'd again to-night?

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says, 'tis but our fantasy,

And will not let belief take hold of him,

Touching this dreadful sight twice seen of us:

Therefore, I have entreated him along

With us, to watch the minutes of this night;

That, if again this apparition come,

He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Tush, tush! 't will not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile and let us once again assail your ears,

That are so fortified against our story,

What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down, and let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all, when yond' same star, that's westward from the pole,

Had made his course 't illume that part of heaven

Where now it burns, Marcellus, and myself,

The bell then beating one,—

Mar. Peace! break thee off: look, where it comes again!

Enter Ghost, armed.

Ber. In the same figure, like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar; speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio.

Hor. Most like:—it harrows me with fear, and wonder.

Ber. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Question it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,

Together with that fair and warlike form,

In which the majesty of buried Denmark

Did sometimes march? by heaven I charge thee, speak!

Mar. It is offended.

Ber. See! it stalks away.

Hor. Stay! speak, speak! I charge thee, speak!

[Exit Ghost.

ACT L

Mar. 'T is gone, and will not answer.
Ber. How now, Horatio! you tremble, and look pale. Is not this something more than fantasy? What think you on't?
Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe, Were it not certain and truly avouch Of mine own eyes.
Mar. Is it not like the king?
Hor. As thou art to thyself. Such was the very armour he had on, When he th' ambitious Norway combated: So frown'd he once, when, in an angry parle, He smote the sleeked Polack's on the ice. 'T is strange.
Mar. Thus, twice before, and jump'd at this dead hour, With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.
Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not; But in the gross and scope of mine opinion, This bodes some strange estrangement to our state.
Mar. Good now, sit down; and tell me, he that knows, Why this same strict and most observant watch So nightly toil the subject of the land? And why such daily cast of bozen cannon, And foreign karts for implements of war? Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task Does not divide the Sunday from the week? What might be toward, that this sweaty haste Doth make the night joint labourer with the day? Who is 't, that can inform me?
Hor. That can I; At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king, Whose image even but now appear'd to us, Was, as you know, by Forinbras of Norway, Thereto pr Eckardst of most ensnare pride. For such a sight, which our valiant Hamlet (For so this side of our known world esteem'd him) Did slay this Forinbras; who, by a seal'd compact, Well ratified by law and heraldry, Did forfeit with his life all those his lands, Which he stood seiz'd of, to the conqueror: Against the which, a moiety competent Was gaged by our king; which had return'd To the inheritance of Forinbras, Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same co-mart, And carriage of the article design'd, His fall to Hamlet. Now, sir, young Forinbras, Of unimproved mettle hot and full, Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there, Shark'd up a list of lawless resolutes, For food and diet. to some enterprise That hath a stomach in it: which is no other (As it doth well appear unto our state) But to recover of us, by strong hand And terms compulsive, those foresaid lands So by his father lost. And this, I take it, Is the main motive of our preparations, The source of this our watch, and the chief head Of this post-haste and romage in the land.
Ber. I think, it be no other, but 'en so: Well may it sort, that this portentous figure Comes arm'd through our watch; so like the king That was, and is, the question of these wars. Hor. A note it is to trouble the mind's eye. In the most high and palmy state of Rome, A little ere the mightiest Julia fell, The graves stood tenantless, and the sheathed dead Did squawk and gibber in the Roman streets: As, stars with trains of fire and dews of blood, Disasters in the sun; and the moist star, Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands, Was sick almost to deomo's with eclipse: And even the like precise of fierce events As harbinger preceding still the fates, And prologue to the omen coming on— Have heaven and earth, together demonstrated Unto our climates and countrymen.—
Re-enter Ghost.
But, soft! behold! lo, where it comes again! I'll cross it, though it blast me.—Stay, illusion! If thou hast any sound, or use of voice, Speak to me: If there be any good thing to be done, That may to thee do ease, and grace to me, Speak to me: If thou art privy to thy country's fate, Which happily foreknowing may avoid, O, speak! Or, if thou hast uphoarded in thy life Extorted treasure in the womb of earth, For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death.
Cock crow.
Speak of it: stay, and speak!—Stop it, Marcellus.
Shall I strike at it with my partisan?
Do, if it will not stand.
Hor. 'T is here!
Ber. 'T is here.
Mar. 'T is gone.
Cock crow.
We do it wrong, being so majaestical, To offer it the show of violence; For it is, as the air, invulnerable, And our vain blows malicious mockery.
Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crowed.
Hor. And then it started, like a guilty thing Upon a fearful summons. I have heard, The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn, Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat Awake the god of day; and at his warning, Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air, The extravagant and erring spirit flies To his confine: and of the truth herein This present object made probation.
Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.
Some say, that every 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated, This bird of dawning singeth all night long: And then they say, no spirit dares stir abroad: The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike, No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm, So hallow'd and so gracious is that time.
Hor. So have I heard, and do in part believe it. But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad, Walks o'er the dew of yond' high eastern hill. Break we our watch up; and, by my advice, Let us impart what we have seen to-night Unto young Hamlet; for, upon my life, This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him. Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it, As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?
Mar. Let's do't; I pray; and this morning know Where we shall find him most conveniently.

SCENE II.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

I do beseech you, give him leave to go. King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine, And thy best graces: spend it at thy will.— But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,— Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind. [Aside.]

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you? Ham. Not so, my lord; I am too much i’ the sun. Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy night-like colour off, And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark. Do not, for ever, with thy vailed lids Seek for thy noble father in the dust: Thou know’st, ’tis common; all that live must die, Passing through nature to eternity. Ham Ay, madam, it is common. Queen. If it be, Why seems it so particular with thee? Ham. Seem, madam! nay, it is; I know not seems. ’Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother, Nor customary suits of solemn black, Nor windy suspiration of forc’d breath, No, nor the fruitful rip in the eye, Nor the dejected haviour of the viscage, Together with all forms, moods, shows of grief, That can denote me truly: these, indeed, seem, For they are actions that a man might play; But I have that within, which passeth show, These but the trappings and the suits of woe. King. ’Tis sweet and commendable in your nature Hamlet, To give these mourning duties to your father: But, you must know, your father lost a father; That father lost, lost his; and the survivor bound In filial obligation, for some term, To do obsequies’ sorrow: but to persuade In obstinate condolement is a course Of impious stubbornness; ’t is unmannly grief: It shows a will most incorrect to heaven; A heart unfortified, a mind impatient, An understanding simple and unschool’d: For what, we know, must be, and is as common As any the most vulgar thing to sense, Why should we, in our peevish opposition, To hear? I’ the fault to heaven, Pol. I’ the fault to heaven, A fault against the dead, a fault to nature, To reason most absurd, whose common theme Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried, From the first corse till he that died to-day, “This must be so.” We pray you, throw to earth This unprevailing woe, and think of us As of a father; for, let the world take note, You are the most immediate to our throne; And, with no less nobility of love Than that which dearest father bears his son, Do I impart toward you. For your intent In going back to school in Wittenberg It is most retrograde to our desire; And, we beseech you, bend you to remain Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye, Our chiefest courtier, counsellor, and our son. Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers, Hamlet: I pray thee, stay with us; go not to Wittenberg. Ham. I shall in all my best save you, madam. King. Why, ’t is a loving and a fair reply: Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come; This gentle and unforc’d accord of Hamlet Sits smiling to my heart; in grace whereof, No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rouse the heaven shall bruise again,
Re-speaking earthly thunder. Come away.

[Flourish. Exeunt King; Queen, Lords, &c.

FOLIO, AND LAERTES.

Ham. O! it was too, too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew;
Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
His cannon 'gainst self-slaughter. O God! O God!
How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world.

Fie on't! I fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and grose in nature,
Possess it merely. That it should come to this!

But two months dead!—say, not so much, not two:
So excellent a king; that was, to this,
Hyperion to a satyr: so loving to my mother,
That he might not beteem the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on: and yet, within a month,—
Let me not think on't.—Frailty, thy name is woman!—
A little month; or ere those shoes were old,
With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
Like Niobe, all tears;—why she, even she,
(O God! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,
Would have mouri'd longer)—married with my uncle,
My father's brother; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules: within a month;
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married.—O, most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to, good;
But break, my heart, for I must hold my tongue!

Enter HORATIO, BERNARDO, and MARCELLUS.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you:

Horatio,—or I do forget myself.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you.

And what can you make you from Wittenberg, Horatio?—

Marcellus?

Mar. My good lord.

Ham. I am very glad to see you; good even, sir.—

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so;
Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,
To make it truster of your own report
Against yourself: I know, you are not truant.

But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep, ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student:
I think, it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio: the funeral bak'd meats
Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

1 Would not bestow more in my heaven
Ere ever I had seen that day, Horatio!—

My father,—methinks, I see my father.

Hor. O! where, my lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once: he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw whom?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father!—Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an atten ear, till I may deliver,
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,
Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
In the dead vast and middle of the night,
Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,
Armed at point, exactly, cap-a-pit,
Appears before them, and with solemn march
Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd,
By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes,
Within his truncheon's length; whilst they, bechill'd
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy impart they did,
And I with them the third night kept the watch;
Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,
Form of the thing, every word made true and good,
The apparition comes. I knew your father;
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd
Iam. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did,
But answer made it none; yet once, methought,
It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak:
But, even then, the morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;
And we did think it writ down in our duty,
To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sir, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch to-night?

All. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

All. Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then, saw you not his face?

Hor. O! yea, my lord; he wore his beaver up.

Ham. What! look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more
In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. Ay, and fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had been there!

Hor. It would have much amazed you.

Ham. Very like. Very like. Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzled? mo?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,
A noble silver'd.
Ham.  I will watch to-night:
Perchance, 'twill walk again.

Hor.  I warrant 't will.
Ham.  If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace.  I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceiv'd this sight,
Let it be tenable in your silence still;
And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue:
I will requite your loves.  So, fare you well:
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All.  Our duty to your honour.
Ham.  Your loves, as mine to you. Farewell.

[Exit Horatio, Marcellus, and Bernardo.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
I doubt some foul play: would the night were come!
Till then, sit still, my soul. Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Polonius's House.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laert.  My necessaries are embark'd; farewell:
And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph.  Do you doubt that?
Laert.  For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood;
A violet in the youth of prime nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and

Oph.  No more but so?
Laert.  Think it no more!

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone
In thaws, and bulk: but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now;
And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmirch
The virtue of his will; but you must fear,
His greatness weight'd, his will is not his own,
For he himself is subject to his birth:
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety

Oph.  And you yourself shall keep the key of it.
Laert.  Farewell.

Oph.  What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?
Laert.  So please you, something touching the lord Hamlet.

Pol.  Marry, well bethought:
'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late
Given private time to you; and you yourself
Have of your audience been most free and bounteous.
If it be so, (as so 'tis put on me,
And that in way of caution) I must tell you,
You do not understand yourself so clearly,
As it behoves my daughter, and your honour.
What is between you? give me up the truth.

Oph.  He hath, my lord, of late made many tenders
Of his affection to me.

Pol.  Affection? pooh! you speak like a green girl,
Unshaped in such perilous circumstance.
Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

* These two words, not in folio.
* sanetty: in folio.
* peculiar met and sense: in folio.
* Counsel.
* chief: in f. o.
* invent.
Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.
Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby;
That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay,
Which are not sterling. Turn yourself more dearly;
Or, to crack the word of the poor phrase,
Running it thus, you'll tender me a fool.
Oph. My lord, he hath importun'd me with love,
In honourable fashion.
Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to.
Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord,
With almost all the holy vows* of heaven.
Pol. Ay, springes to catch woodcocks. I do know,
When the blood burns, he's prodigal the soul.
Lends the tongue vows: these bigger, daughter,
Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both,
Even in their promise, as it is a making.—
You must not take for fire. From this time,
Be somewhat scanter of your maiden presence:
Set your entreatments at a higher rate,
Than a command to perley. For lord Hamlet,
Believe so much in him, that he is young;
And with a larger tether may he walk,
Than may be given you. In few, Ophelia,
Do not believe his vows, for they are brokers
Not of that die* which their investments show,
But mere importators of unholy suits,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bawds;*
The better to beguile. This is for all,—
I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,
Have you so squander any moment’s leisure,
As to give words or talk with the lord Hamlet.
Look to 't, I charge you; so now,* come your ways.
Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Platform.
Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.
Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
Hor. It is a nipping, and an eager air.
Ham. What hour now?
Hor. Mar. No, it is struck.
Hor. Indeed? I heard it not: it then draws near the season,
Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.
[Exeunt.

A Flourish of Trumpets, and Ordnance shot off, within.
What does this mean, my lord?
Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse,
Keeps wassel, and the swaggering up-spring reels;
And as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.
Hor. Is it a custom?
Ham. Ay, marry, is’t: But to my mind,—though I am native here,
And to the manner born,—it is a custom
More honour’d in the breach, than the observance.
This heavy-headed revel, east and west, makes us traduc’d and tax’d of other nations:
They sleep* us drunkards, and with swinish phrase
Soil our tradition; and, indeed, it takes
From our achievements, though perform’d at height,
The pith and marrow of our attribute.
So oft it chances in particular men,
That for some vicious mole of nature in them,
As, in their birth. (wherein they are not guilty,
Since nature cannot choose his origin)
By their o’ergrowth of some complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason;
Or by some habit, that too much o’er-leavens
The form of plausible manners,—that these men,—
Carrying. I say, the stamp of one defect
Being nature’s lively, or fortune’s star,—
Their* virtues else, be they as pure as grace,
As infinite as man may undergo,
Shall in the general censure take corruption
From that particular fault: the dram of ill, Doth all the noble substances oft dount; To his own sharp and undisguised
Enter Ghost, armed as before.
Hor. Look, my lord: it comes.
Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend us! [Pause.
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn’d,
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell,
Be thy intents* wicked, or charitable,
Thou com’st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee. I'll call thee, Hamlet,
King, Father, Royal Dane: O! answer me:—
Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell,
Why thy canoniz’d* bones, heard in death,
Have burst their cerements? why the sepulchre,
Wherein we saw thee quietly in-urn’d, hath
Op’d his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again? What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisit’st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making most hideous; and we fools of nature,
So horridly to shackle our dispositions,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?
[The Ghost beckons HAMLET.
Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.
Mar. Look, with what courteous action
It waves* you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it.
Hor. No, by no means.
Ham. It will not speak; then, will I follow it.
Hor. Do not, my lord.
Ham. Why, what should be the fear?
I do not set my life at a pin’s fee;
And, for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself?—
It waves me forth again:—I’ll follow it.
Hor. What, if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord,
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o’er his base into the sea,
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,
And draw you into madness? think of it:
The very place puts toys of desperation, Without more motive, into every brain
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.
Ham. I’ll follow thee.
Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rud’d: you shall not go. [They struggle.
SCENE V. — A more remote Part of the Platform.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Whither, 1 wilt thou lead me? speak, I’ll go no farther.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. What? 2

Ghost. My hour is almost come.

When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not: but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak; I am bound to hear, when thou shalt hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What? 2

Ghost. I am thy father’s spirit;
Demands a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day confin’d to lasting fires 3:
Till the foul crimes, done in my days of nature,
Are burnt and pur’d away. But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison-house,
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes like stars start from their spheres,
Thy knotted 4 and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine: 5
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.—List, list, O list! 6
If thou didst ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O God! 7

Ghost. Revenge his soul and most unnatural murder.

Ham. Murder? 8

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;

But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know it, that I, with wings as swift
As meditation, or the thoughts of love,
May sweep my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;
And duller shouldst thou be, than the fat weed
That roots 9 itself in ease on Lethe wharf,
Wouldst thou not stir in this: now, Hamlet, hear.
’Tis given out, that sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me: so the whole ear of Denmark
Is by a forged process of my death
Rashly abus’d; but know, thou noble youth,
The secret that did sting thy father’s life
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetic soul! my uncle?

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,
With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,
O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power

So to seduce! won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming virtuous queen.
O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!
From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage; and to decline
Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be mov’d,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven,
So lust, though to a radiant angel link’d,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbe.

But, soft! methinks, I scent the morning air:
Brief let me be.—Sleeping within mine orchard,
My custom always in the afternoon,
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a phial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leprous distillment; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And with a sudden vigour it doth posset,
And curd, like eager 10 droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine:
And a most instant tetter bak’d 11 about,
Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother’s hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despoil’d:
Cut off even in the blossom of my sin,
Unhouse’d, 12 disowned, unmaned: 13
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head:
O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!
If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.
But, howsoever thou pursuest this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
Against thy mother’s brother: leave her to her heaven,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once.
The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And ‘gins to pale his uneffectual fire:

Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, 14 remember me.

Ham. O, all you host of heaven! O earth! What else?

And shall I couple hell?—O fie!—Hold, heart;
And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly 15 up.—Remember thee?
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe. Remember thee?
Yes, from the table of my memory
I’ll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copied there,
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix’d with baser matter: yes, by heaven!
O, most pernicious and pernicious woman!
O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!
My tables, 16—meet it is, I set it down,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;
At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark:—

[Writing.]
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

ACT II.

My lord, not I.

Mar.  Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar.  We have sworn, my lord, already

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ha, ha, boy! say’st thou so? art thou there, true-penny?

Come on,—you hear this fellow in the cellarage,—

Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen, swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Hic et ubique? then, we’ll shift our ground.—

Come hither, gentlemen,

And lay your hands again upon my sword:

Never to speak of this that you have heard,

Swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Well said, old mole! canst work i’ the earth so fast?

A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome

There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,

Than are dreamt of in your philosophy. But come:

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy,

How strange or odd so’er I bear myself,—

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on,—

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumber’d thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

As, ’t Well, well, we know j’—or, ’We could, as if we would j’—

Or, ’If we list to speak;’—or, ’There be, an if they might j’—

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note

That you know aught of me,—this not to do,

So grace and mercy at your most need help you,

Swear.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit!—So, gentlemen,

With all my love I do commend me to you:

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is

May do, t’ express his love and friendship to you,

God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.—

The time is out of joint; O cursed spite!

That ever I was born to set it right.—

Nay, come; let’s go together.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE I.—A Room in POLONIUS’S HOUSE.

Enter POLONIUS and REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry

Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

Pol. Marry, well said: very well said. Look you, sir,

Inquire me first what Daneskers are in Paris;

And how, and who, what means, and where they keep,
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK. 747

What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank As may disannoint him: take heed of that; But, sit, such wanton, wild, and usual slips, As are companions noted and most known To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling, Drabbling,—you may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. 'Faith, no: as you may season it in the charge. You must not put another scandal on him, That he is open to incontinency: That's not my meaning; but breathe his faults so quaintly, That they may seem the taints of liberty; The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind; A savageness in unrequited blood, Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,—

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

Rey. Ay, my lord, I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift; And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant.1 You laying these slight sullies on my son, As 'twere a thing a little soild'1 the working, Mark you, Your party in converse, him you would sound, Having ever seen in the premonitory crimes The youth you breathe of guilty, be assured, He closes with you in this consequence: "Good sir," or so; or "friend," or "gentleman,"— According to the phrase, or the addition Of man, and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he this,—he does— What was I about to say?—By the mass, I was About to say something:—where did I leave?

Rey. At close in the consequence, As "friend or so;" and "gentleman."—

Pol. At, close in the consequence,—ay, marry; He closes thus:—1 "I know the gentleman; I saw him yesterday, or 't other day, Or then, or then; with such, or such; and, as you say, There was he gaming; there o'took in 's house; There falling out at tennis; or perchance, I saw him enter such a house of sale, Videlicet, a brothel" or so forth.—

See you now; Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth: And thus do we of wisdom and of reach, With windlasses, and with assays of bias, By instructions find directions out: So, by my former lecture and advice, Shall you my son. You have me, have you not? Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi' you; fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord.

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.

Rey. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his music.

Rey. Well, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell!—How now, Ophelia? what's the matter?

Oph. Alas,2 my lord! I have been so affrighted! What, in the name of God? Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my chamber, Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbreas'd; No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd, Ungarter'd, and down-gryed to his ancle; Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other And with a look so piteous in purport, As if he had been loosed out of hell, To speak of horrors,—he comes before me. Pol. Mad for thy love? Oph. My lord, I do not know; But, truly, I do fear it. What said he?

Pol. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard; Then goes he to the length of all his arm, And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow, He falls to such perusal of my face, As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so: At last,—a little shaking of mine arm, And thrice his head thus waving up and down,— He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound, That it did seem to shatter all his bulk, And end his being. That done, he lets me go, And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd, He seem'd to find his way without his eyes; For out o' doors he went without their help, And to the last bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me: I will go seek the king This is the very ecstasy of love; Whose violent property forsooth itself, And leads the will to desperate undertakings, As oft as any passion under heaven, That does afflict our natures. I am sorry,— What! have you given him any hard words of late? Oph. No, my good lord; but, as you did command I did repel his letters, and denied His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad. I am sorry that with better heed and judgment I had not quoted3 him: I fear'd, he did but trifle, And meant to wreck thee; but, bestraw my jealousy. By heaven,4 it is as proper to our age To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions, As it is common for the younger sort To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king: This must be known; which, being kept close, might move More grief to hide, than hate to utter love. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern: Moreover, that we did much long to see you, The need we have to use you, did provoke Our hasty sending. Something have you heard Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it, Sith nor th' exterior nor the inward man Resembles that it was. What it should be, More than his father's death, that thus hath put him So much from the understanding of himself, I cannot dream of: I entreat you both, That, being of so young days brought up with him, And since so neighbour'd to his youth and humour,5 That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court Some little time; so by your company To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather, So much as from occasion you may glean, Whether aught, to us unknown, affects him thus, That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

1 wit: in quarto, 1604.
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

ACT II.

Q. Sol. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;
And, sure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To show us so much gentry, and good will,
As to expend your time with us a while,
For the supply and profit of our hope,
Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dud pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. But 'twere we both obey;
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosen-

And I beseech you instantly to visit [arants:
My too much changed son.—Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence, and our practices,
Pleasant and helpful to him !

Queen. [Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and some Attendants.] Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Th'e ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God, one to my gracious king:
And I do think (or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As it hath us'd to do) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O! speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to th' ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in.

[Exit POLONIUS.

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The heart and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt, it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTMAND and CORNELIUS.

King. Well, we shall sift him.—Welcome, my good friends.

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Volt. Most fair return of greetings, and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies; which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack,
But, better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your highness: whereat griev'd,—
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand,—sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which he in brief obeys,
Receives rebuke from Norway, and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle, never more
To give th' assay of arms against your majesty.
When old Hamlet was, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee,
And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack:
With an entreaty, herein farther shown,

[Giving a Paper.]

That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise,
On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well;
And, as our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business:
Mean time, we thank you for your well-look'd labour.
Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:
Most welcome home.

[Exeunt VOLTMAND and CORNELIUS.

Pol. This business is well ended.

My liege, and madam; to expostulate
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste day, night, and time.
Therefore, since's brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it; for, to define true madness,
What 'tis, but to be nothing else but mad:
But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear, I use no art at all.

That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pitty,
And pity 'tis it is true: a foolish figure;
But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let us grant him, then; and now remains,
That we find out the cause of this effect;
Or rather say, the cause of this defect,
For this effect defective comes by cause:
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perpend.
I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
Hath given me this. Now gather, and surmise.

[Reeds—"To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautiful Ophelia,—"

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; "beautiful" is a vile phrase; but you shall hear.—Thus:

"In her excellent white bosom, these," &c.]

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful—

"Doubt thou the stars are fire?"—[Reed.

Doubt, that the sun doth move;
Doubt truth to be a liar,
But never doubt I love.

"O dear Ophelia! I am ill at these numbers: I have not art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best.
O! most best, believe it. Adieu.
Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamles's
"This in obedience hath my daughter shown me;
And more above, hath his solicitation,
As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. — But how hath she

Receiv'd his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful, and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think.
When I had seen this hot love on the wing,
(As I perceive'd it, I must tell you that.)
Before my daughter told me) what might you,
Or my dear majesty, your queen here, think,
If I had play'd the desk, or table-book;
Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb

SCENE III.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Ham. Between whom whom?

Pol. I mean, the matter that you read, my lord.

Ham. Slanders, sir: for the satirical rogue says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams; all of which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for you yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if like a crab you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madness, yet there is method in 't. [Aside.] Will you walk out of the air, my lord? Ham. Into my grave?

Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air. [Aside.] How pregnant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter. — [To him.] My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you. Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me anything that I will more willingly part withal; except my life, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools! Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? O! most true; she is a trumpeter. What news? Ros. None, my lord, but that the world's grown honest. Ham. Then is dooms-day near; but your news is not true. Let me question more in particular: what have you, my good friends, deserv'd at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither? Guil. Prison, my lord! Ham. Denmark's a prison. Ros. Then, is the world one. Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confines, wards, and dungeons, Denmark being one of the worst. Ros. We think not so, my lord. Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why then, your ambition makes it one: 'tis too narrow for your mind. Ham. O God! I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams. Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars bodies, and our monarchs, andoustretched heroes, the beggars' shadows. Shall we to the court? for, by my fay, I cannot reason.

Ros. Guil. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you: and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, come; deal justly with me: come, come; nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Why any thing, but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the consecrations of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. What say you?

[To Guil. Den.]

Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you. [Aside.]—If you love me, hold not off.

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why: so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen mount no feather. I have of late (but wherefore I know not) lost all my mirth, foregone all custom of exercises: and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air, you look, you this brave o'ersetting firmament, this majestic roof fretted with golden fires, why, it appeareth nothing to me, but a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason! How infinite in faculties! In form, and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me; [Ros. smiles.]

Ros. no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, then, when I said, man delights not me?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lente* entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coveted them on the way, and hither are they coming to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king, shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil, and target: the lover shall not sigh gratis: the humorous man shall end his part

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Hark you, Guil. Den., and you too:—each ear a hearer: that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swathing-clouts.

Ros. Haply, he's the second time come to them; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy, he comes to tell me of the
"When he lay couched in the ominous horse,
'Hath now this dread and black complexion amear'd
'With heraldry more dismal: head to foot
'Now is he total gules; horribly trick'd
'With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons;
'Bak'd and impast with the parching streets,
'That lend a tympanous and a damned light
'To their lord's murder: roasted in wrath, and fire,
'And thus o'er-sized with coagulate gore,
'With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus
'Old grandaure Priam seeks;"

So proceed you.

Pol. 'Fore God, my lord, well spoken; with good accent, and good discretion.

1 Play. "Anon he finds him
'Striking too short at Greeks: his antique sword,
'Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
'Repugnant to command. Unequal match'd,*
'Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage strikes wide;
'But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
'The unmerciful father falls. Then senseless Ilium,
'Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
'Stoops to his base; and with a hideous crash
'Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear: for, lo! his sword
'Which was declining on the milky head
'Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick:
'So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood;
'And, like a neutral to his will and matter,
'Did nothing.
'But, as we often see, against some storm,
'A silence in the heavens, the rack stand still.
'The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
'As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder
'Doth rend the region; so, after Pyrrhus' pause,
'Aroused vengeance sets him new a-work,
'And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
'On Mars' armour, for'd for proof etern,
'With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
'Now falls on Priam.
'Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune! All you gods,
'In general synod, take away her power;
'Break all the spokes and fellowes from her wheel,
'And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven,
'As low as to the fiends?"

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard.
'Frythee, say on: he's for a jig;* or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps.
'I'll say on: come to Hebeaus.

1 Play. "But who, O! who had seen the mobled* queen?"

Ham. The mobled queen.

Pol. That's good; mobled queen is good.

1 Play. "Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
'With bison* rheum; a clout upon that head,
'Where late the diadem stood; and, for a robe
'About her lank and all o'ertooned loines,
'A blanket, in th' alarm of fear caught up;
'Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,
'Gainst fortune's state would treason have pronounce'd:
'But if the gods themselves did see her then,
'When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
'In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
'The instant burst of clamour that she made,
'(Unlesse things mortal move them not at al.)
'Would have made milch the burning eyes of heaven,
'And passionate* the gods?"

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used; for they are the abstracts, and brief chronicles, of the time; after your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live. Po. My lord, I will use them according to their desert. Ham. God's bodkin, man, much better: use every man after his desert, and who should 'scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity: the less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in. Po. Come, sirs. [Exit Polonius, with some of the Players. Ham. Follow him, friends; we'll have a play to-morrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend? can you play the murder of Gonzago? 1 Play. Ay, my lord. Ham. We'll have it to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down and insert in 't, could you not? 1 Play. Ay, my lord. Ham. Very well.—Follow that lord; and look you mock him not. [Exit Player.] My good friends, [To Ros. and Guild.] I'll leave you till night: you are welcome to Elsinore. Ros. Good my lord! [Exit.]

Em. [Exeunt Rosenkranz and Guildenstern.]

Ham. Ay, so, good bye you!—Now I am alone.—O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I! Is it not monstrous, that this player here, But in a fiction, in a dream of passion, Could force his soul so to his own° conceit, That from her working all his visage wann'd°; Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect, A broken voice, and his whole function suitting With forms to his conceit? and all for nothing: For Hecuba! What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba, That he should weep for her? What would he do, Had he the motive and the cue for passion, That I have? He would drown the stage with tears, And cleave the general ear with horrid speech; Make mad the guilty, and appal the free, Confound the ignorant; and amaze, indeed, The very faculties of eyes and ears. Yet I, A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak, Like John a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause, And can say nothing; no, not for a king, Upon whose property, and most dear life, A dam'd defeat was made. Am I a coward? Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across? Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face? Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie it the throat As deep as to the lungs? Who does this me this? Ha! 'S wounds! I should take it; for it cannot be, But I am pigeon-lier'd, and lack gall To make transgression° bitter, or ere this I should have fatted all the region kites With this slave's offal. Bloody, bawdy villain! Removeless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain! O, vengeance!° Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave; That I, the son of a dear father° murder'd, Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell, Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words, And fall a cursing, like a very drab, A scullion! Pie upon 't! foh! About my brain!—I have heard, That guilty creatures, sitting at a play, Have by the very cunning of the scene Been struck so to the soul, that presently They have proclaimed their malefactions; For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players Play something like the murder of my father, Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks; I'll tent° him to the quick: if he but blench°, I know my course. The spirit, that I have seen, May be the devil; and the devil hath power To assume a pleasing shape; yes, and, perhaps, Out of my weakness, and my melancholy, As he is very potent with such spirits, Abuses me to damn me. I'll have grounds More relative than this: the play 't the thing, Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king. [Exit

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosenkranz, and Guildenstern.

King. And can you, by no drift of conference, Get from him why he puts on this confusion, Granting so harishly all his days of quiet With turbulent and dangerous lunacy? Ros. He does confess, he feels himself distracted; But from what cause he will by no means speak. Guit. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded, But with a crafty madness keeps aloof, When we would bring him on to some confession Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guit. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question; but to our demands

Most free in his reply.

Queen. Did you assay him To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players We o'er-rafted° on the way: of these we told him; And there did seem in him a kind of joy To hear of it. They are about the court; And, as I think, they have already order This night to play before him.

Pol. 'Tis most true.

And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties, To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me To hear him so inclin'd.

Good gentlemen, give him a farther edge, And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord. [Exeunt Rosenkranz and Guildenstern]
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

KING. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too;
For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;
That he, as 't were by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia: her father, and myself (lawful espials)
Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,
We may of their encounter frankly judge;
And gather by him, as he is behav'd,
If 't be that affection of his love, or no,
That thus he suffers for.

QUEEN. I shall obey you.—
And, for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope, your virtues
Will bring him to his wonted way again,
To both your honours.

OPHELIA. Madam, I wish it may. [Exit Queen.
POL. Ophelia, walk you here.—Gracious, so please you, We will bestow ourselves.—Read on this book,
To Ophelia.
That show of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness.—We are oft to blame in this,—
'T is too much prov'd,—that, with devotion's visage,
And pious action, we do sugar o'er
The devil himself.

KING. O! 't is too true.—[Aside.] How smart
A lash that speech doth give my conscience!
The harlot's cheek, beautied with plastering art,
is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to my most painted word.

I hear behind me.—
POL. I bear him coming: let's withdraw, my lord.
[Exeunt King and Polonius. Monet Ophelia behind, reading.

Enter Hamlet.

HAMLET. To be, or not to be; that is the question—
Whether 't is nobler in the mind, to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune;
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them?—To die,—to sleep,—
No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end
The heart-ache and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to;—is it a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep:—
To sleep! perchance to dream:—ay, there's the rub;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. There's the respect
That makes calamity of so long life:
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despised love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself his quietus make
With a bare bodkin? who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,—
The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns,—puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now!
Th' expectancy and rose of the fair state.
The glass of fashion, and the mould of form,
Th' observ'd of all observers, quite, quite down!
And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh;
That unmatch'd form and feature1 of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstacy. O, woe is me!
To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter King and Polonius.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend;
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood:
And, do I doubt, the hatch, and the disclose,
Will be some danger: which for to prevent,
I have, in quick determination,
Thus set it down. He shall with speed to England,
For the demand of our neglected tribute:
Haply the seas, and circumstances different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This something settled matter in his heart,
Wherein his brain still beat ing puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well: but yet do I believe,
The origin and commencement of his2 grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia!
You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit, after the play
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his griefs: let her be round3 with him;
And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference. If she find him not,
To England send him; or confine him where
Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so:
Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Same.

Enter Hamlet, and certain Players, unready.4

Ham. Speak the speech. I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but use all gently: for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirrwind of passion, you must acquit and beget a tempearance, that may give it smoothness. O! it offence me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings; who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb shows, and noise: I would have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing Ternagant1; it out-heroes Herod5: pray you avoid it.

1 Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature; for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing. whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 't were, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now, this overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve;

the censure of which one must, in your allowance, o'ervagu of a whole theatre of others. O! there be players, that I have seen play,—and heard others praise, and that highly,—not to speak it profanely, that neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, pagan, or nor man, have so strutted, and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

1 Play. I hope, we have reformed that indifferently with us.

Ham. O! reform it altogether. And let those, that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though in the mean time some necessary question of the play be then to be considered: that's villainous, and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.—[Exit Players.

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

Ham. How now, my lord! will the king hear this piece of Pol. And the queen too, and that presently. [work'

Ham. Bid the players make haste.—[Exit Polonius

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. We will, my lord.

[Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Ham. What! ho! Horatio!

Enter Horatio!

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art enow as just a man
As e'er my conversation coped withal.

Hor. O! my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter
For what advancement may I hope from thee,
That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits,
To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No; let the candid tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Doest thou hear?
Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
And could of men distinguish, her election
Hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been
As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;
A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks: and blosom'd are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well mingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee.—Something too much of this,—
There is a play to-night before the king:
One scene of it comes near the circumstance,
Which I have told thee, of my father's death:
I pr'ythee, when thou seest that act a-foot,
Even with the very comment of thy5 soul
Observe mine uncle: if his occulted guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen,
And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulin's stithy. Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face,
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming.

Hor.

Well, my lord;

If he steal aught the whilst this play is playing,
And 'scape detecting, I will pay the theft.
Ham. They are coming to the play: I must be idle;
Get you a place.

Senet. Danish March. Enter King, Queen, Polonius,
Ophelia, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith; of the camelion's dish: I eat the air, promise-crammed. You cannot feed capone so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet:
these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now.—My lord, you played once in the university, you say? [To Polonius.

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Caesar: I was killed i' the Capitol: Brutus killed me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him to kill so capital a calf there,—Be the players ready?

Ros. Ay, my lord; they stay upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet; sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.

Pol. O ho! do you mark that? [To the King.

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap? [Lying down at Ophelia's Feet.

Oph. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think I mean country matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O God! your only jig-maker. What should man do, but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two ours.

Oph. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then, let the devil wear black, vr I'll have a suit of sables. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's ope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half year; but, by'r lady, he must build churches then;
else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse; whose epitaph is, "For, O! for, O! the hobby-horse is forgot."

Trumpets sound. The dumb Show enters.

'ter a King and Queen, very lovingly; the Queen embracing him. She kneels, and makes show of pro-testation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck; lays him down upon a bank of flowers: she, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and poisons poison in the King's ears, and exits. The Queen returns, finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. The poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The poisoner wooes the Queen with gifts: she seems loth and unwilling awhile, but in the end accepts his love. [Exeunt.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham: Marry, this is mouch mallechoe; it means scheif.

Oph. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you will show him: be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught. I'll mark the play.

Pro. 'For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your elemency,
We beg your hearing patiently.'

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the poesy of a ring?
Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter the Player King and Player Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times has Thebes' car gone round
Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground;
And thirty dozen moons, with borrow'd sheen,
About the world have times twelve thirties been;
Since love our hearts did, and Hymen did our hands,
Unite commutal in most sacred bands.

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon
Make us again count o'er, ere love be done.
But, woe is me! you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer, and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust,
Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must;
For women's fear and love hold quantity,
In neither ought, or in extremity.
Now, what my love is proof hath made you know,
And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so.
Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;
Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

P. King. 'Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;
My operant powers their functions leave to do:
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, belov'd: and, haply, one as kind
For husband shalt thou—

Oph. Queen. O, confound the rest!
Such love must needs be treason in my breast:
In second husband let me be accurat;
None wed the second, who but kill'd the first.

Ham. [Aside.] Wormwood, wormwood.

P. Queen. The instances, that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love:
A second time I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in bed.

P. King. I do believe you think what now you speak,
But what we do determine oft we break.
Purpose is but the slave to memory,
Of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.
Most necessary 't is, that we forget
To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:
What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own executors with themselves destroy:
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament,
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
This world is not for aye; nor 't is not strange,
That even our loves should with our fortunes change;
For 'tis a question left us yet to prove,
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.
The great man dreams, the meaner man his favours flies;
The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies;
And hitherto doth love on fortune tend,
For who not needs shall never lack a friend;
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy.
But, orderly to end where I begun,
Our wills and fates do so contrary run,
That our devices still are overthrown;
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own:
So think thou wilt no second husband wed,
But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light!
Sport and repose lock from me, day and night!
To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope!
Esch opposite, that blankets the face of joy,
Meet what I should have well, and it destroy!
Both here, and hence, you can have lastling strife,
If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break her vow,—

P. King. "I" is deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while:
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep.

[Sleeps.]

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain;
And never come mischance between us twain! [Exit.]

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?
Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

Ham. O! but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in 't?

Ham. No, no; they do but jest, poison in jest: no offence 't the world.

King. What do you call the play?

This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna:
Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista. You shall see anon: it is a knavish piece of work; but what of that? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: let the gilded jade wine, our withers are unwrung.

Enter Lucianus.
This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Oph. You are as good as a chorus, my lord.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off my edge.

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you must take your husbands.—Begin, murderer: leave thy damnable faces, and begin.
Come.—The croaking raven doth bellow for revenge.

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing:
Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,
With Hevace's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy natural magic and digre property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.

[Performs the Poison into the Sleeper's Ears.

Ham. He poisons him i' the garden for his estate.

His name's Gonzago: 'tis extant, and written in very 4 choice Italian. You shall see anon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Oph. The king rises.

Ham. What! frightened with false fire?
Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

Ham. Give me some light—away!

All. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exit all but Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play;
For some must watch, while some must sleep:
Thus runs the world away.

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers, (if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me) with two Provi-ces on my raised^ shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry^ of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share.

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear!
This realm dismantled was
Of his own hands; and now reigns here no
A very, very—peacock.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O good Horatio! I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning,—

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha!—Come! some music! come; the recoilers!

For if the king like not the comedy,
Why, then, belike.—he likes it not, perdy.

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Come; some music!

Guil. Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham. Sir. a whole history.

Guil. The king, sir,—

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Guil. Is in his retirement marvellous distempered.

Ham. With drink, sir?

Guil. No, my lord; with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more riper to signify this to his doctor; for, for me to put him a his purgation would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler.

Guil. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from the affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir: pronounce.

Guil. The queen your mother, in most great afflu-

Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of our right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commis-

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guil. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer; my wife diseased: but, sir, such answer as I can make. we shall command; or, rather, as you say, my mother:
therefore no more, but to the matter. My mother, you say,—

Ros. Then, thus she says. Your behaviour has

Scene III. Hamlet, Prince of Denmark.

Ham. O wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother’s admiration? import spirit.
Rosal. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.
Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any farther trade with us?
Rosal. My lord, you once did love me.
Ham. And do still, by these pickers and stealers.
Rosal. Good my lord, what is your cause of distemper? you do, surely, but bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.
Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.
Rosal. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?
Ham. Ay, sir, but while the grass grows, the proverb is something musty.
Enter one with a Recorder.
Rosal. O! the recorder—let me see one.—To withdraw with you:—why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?
Guilder. O, my lord! if my duty be too bold, my love is too un mannery.
Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?
Guilder. My lord, I cannot.
Ham. I pray you.
Guilder. Believe me, I cannot.
Ham. I do beseech you.
Guilder. I know no touch of it, my lord.
Ham. It is as easy as laying: govern these vantages with your finger and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music.
Look you, these are the stops.
Guilder. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony: I have not the skill.
Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass; and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ, yet cannot you make it speak. ’Sblood! do you think I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play on me.
Enter Polonius.
Guilder. God bless you, sir!
Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and present.
Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that’s almost in shape of a camel?
Pol. By the mass, and ’t is like a camel, indeed.
Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.
Pol. It is backed like a weasel.
Ham. Or, like a whale?
Pol. Very like a whale.
Ham. Then, will I come to my mother by and by.—They fool me to the top of my bent.—I will come by and by.
Pol. I will say so. [Exit Polonius.]
Ham. By and by is easily said.—Leave me, friends. [Exit Ros., Guilder, Hons., &c.]

Tis now the very witching time of night, When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out Contagion to this world: now could I drink hot blood, And do such business as the day.

Would quake to look on. Soft! now to my mother.—
O, heart! lose not thy nature; let not ever The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom: Let me be cruel, not unnatural.
I will speak daggers to her, but use none; My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites: How in my words soever she be shent, To give them seals never, my soul, consent!

[Exit.

Scene III.—A Room in the Same.

Enter King, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. I like him not; nor stands it safe with us, To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare you; I your commission will forthwith despatch, And, he to England shall along with you. The terms of our estate may not endure Hazard so dangerous, as doth hourly grow Out of his lunacies.

Guilder. We will ourselves provide. Most holy and religious fear it is, To keep those very many bodies safe, That live, and feed, upon your majesty.
Pol. The single and peculiar life is bound, With all the strength and armour of the mind, To keep itself from ‘noyance; but much more That spirit, upon whose weal depend and rest The lives of many. The cease of majesty Dies not alone; but like a gulf doth draw What’s near it with it: it is a massy wheel, Fix’d on the summit of the highest mount, To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things Are mortis’d and adjoin’d; which, when it falls, Each small annexment, petty consequence, Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage; For we will feter up upon this fear, Which now goes too free-footed.
Rosal. and Guilder. We will haste us. [Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My lord, he’s going to his mother’s closet. Behind the arras I’ll convey myself, To hear the process: I’ll warrant, she’ll tax him home; And, as you said, and wisely was it said, ’Tis meet that some more audience than a mother, Since nature makes them partial, should overhear The speech of vantage. Fare you well, my liege: I’ll call upon you ere you go to bed, And tell you what I know.

[Exit Polonius.]

O! my offence is rank, it smells to heaven; It hath the primal eldest curse upon’t, A brother’s murder—Pray can I not, Though inclination be as sharp as will: My stronger guilt doth deter my strong intent; And, like a man to double business bound, I stand in pause where I shall first begin, And both neglect. What if this cursed hand Were thicker than itself with brother’s blood, Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens, To wash it white as snow? Whereeto serves mercy, But to confront the visage of offence? And what’s in prayer, but this two-fold force,— To be forestalled, ere we come to fall, Or pardon’d, being down? Then, I’ll look up.
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

ACT III.

My fault is past. But, O! what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!...
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd, and retain th' offences?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice,
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked purse't itself
Buys out the law; but 'tis not so above;
There is no shuffle, there the action lies
In his true nature: and we ourselves compelld',
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: what can it not?
Yet what can it, when one can not repent?
O wretched state! O bosom, black as death!
O limed soul, that struggling to be free,
Art more engaged! Help, angels! make assay;
Bow, stubborn knees: and, heart, with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe.

All may be well. [Kneels.]

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do't:—and so he goes to heaven,
And so am I reveng'd? That would be scan'd:
A villain kills my father: and for that,
I, his sole son, do thus a villain send
To heaven.

Why, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush'd as May,
And how his audit stands, who knows, save heaven?
But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
'T is heavy with him; and am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?

No.

Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid hent.
When he is drunk asleep, or in his rage;
Or in th' incestuous pleasures of his bed;
At gaming, swearing: or about some act,
That has no relish of salvation in't;
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven,
And that his soul may be as damn'd, and black,
As hell, whereto it goes. My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days. [Exit.

Queen. My words fly up, my thoughts remain below;
Words without thoughts never to heaven go. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Same.

Enter Queen and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight. Look, you lay home to him;
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with,
And that your grace hath seen'd and stood between Much heat and him. I'll sooner' me even here.
Pray you, be round with him.

Ham. [Within.] Mother, mother, mother!

Queen. I'll warrant you;
Fear me not:—withdraw, I hear him coming.
[Exit Polonius behind the Arras.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now, mother: what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come; you answer with an idle tongue
Ham. Go, go; you question with a wicked tongue
Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet!
Ham. What's the matter now?
Queen. Have you forgot me?
Ham. No, by the rood, not so.
You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife;
And,—would it were not so!—you are my mother.
Queen. Nay then, I'll send those to you that can speak.
Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall see
You go not, till I set you up a glass [budge]
Where you may see the inmost part of you.
Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me.
Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind.] What, ho! help! help! help!
Ham. How now! a rat? [Drums.] Dead for a ducat, dead. [Hamlet makes a pass through the Arras.
Pol. [Behind.] O! I am slain.

Ham. [Coming forward.]

Queen. O me! what hast thou done?
Ham. [Coming forward.]

Nay, I know not.
Is it the king?

[Checks the Arras, and draws forth Polonius.]

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!
Ham. A bloody deed; almost as bad, good mother,
As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word—

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell.

[See ing the body of Polonius.

I took thee for thy better; take thy fortune; thy find'st no to be busy is some danger.—
Leave wringing of your hands. Peace! sit you down.
And let me wring your heart: for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff;
If damned custom have not braz'd it so,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue
In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act,
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;
Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blaster there; makes marriage vows
As false as dicers' oaths: O! such a deed,
As from the body of contraction plucks
The very soul; and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words: Heaven's face doth glow,
Yet this solidity and compound mass,
With trefull' visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen. Ah me! what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this;
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See, what a grace was seated on this brow;
Hyperion's curls: the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination, and a form, indeed.

Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man.

This was your husband: look you now, what follows.
Here is your husband: like a mildeated ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother

Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
Scene IV.

Hamlet, Prince of Denmark.

And batten on this moor? Ha! have you eyes? You cannot call it love; for, at your age, The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble, And waits upon the judgment; and what judgment Would stoop from this to this? Sense, sure you have, Else, could you not have motion; but, sure, that sense Is appalled; for madness would not err, Nor sense to ecstasy was never so thrall'd, But it reserved some quantity of choice, To serve in such a difference. What devil was't That thus hath ooz'n'd you at hoodman-blind?

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight, Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all, Or but a sickly part of one true sense. Could not so noope.

O shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell, If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones, To flaming youth let virtue be as wax, And melt in her own fire: proclaim no shame, When the compulsive ardour gives the charge, Since frost itself as actively doth burn, And reason panders will.

Queen.

O Hamlet! speak no more.

Ham.

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;
And there I see such black and grained spots, As will not leave their tint.

Queen.

Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an unseamed bed;
Stew'd in corruption; honeying, and making love
Over the nasty sty;

Queen.

O, speak to me no more!

These words, like daggers enter in mine ears:
No more, sweet Hamlet.

Ham.

A murderer, and a villain;
A slave, that is not twentieth part the tithe  Of your precedent lord—a vice of kings!
A cup'ruce of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

No more!

Enter Ghost, unarmed.

Ham.

A king of shreds and patches.
Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings, You heavenly guards!—What would you, gracious Queen Alas! he's mad.

Ham.

Do you not come your tardy son to chase, That lap'd in fume and passion, lets go by
The important acting of your dread command?
O, say!

Ghost.

Do not forget. This visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look! amazement on thy mother sit:
O! step between her and her fighting soul;
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works.
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham.

How is it with you, lady?
Queen.

Alas! how is't with you,
That do you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporeal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in th' alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrescences,
Starts up, and stands on end. O gentle son!
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?
Ham.

On him, on him!—Look you, how pale he

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones, Would make them capable.—Do not look upon me;
Lest with this piteous action you convert
My stern effects: then, what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears, perchance, for blood.

Queen.

To whom do you speak this?
Ham.

Do you see nothing there?
Queen.

Nothing at all; yet think that is I see.
Ham.

Nor did you nothing hear?
Queen.

No, nothing but ourselves.
Ham.

Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!
My father, in his habit as he liv'd!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!

[Exit Ghost.

Queen.

This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Ham.

Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music. It is not madness,
That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word, which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flatteringunction to your soul,
That not your trespaze, but my madness speaks:
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what's past: avoid what is to come,
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker.

Forgive me this my virtue;
For in the fatness of these purdy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea, curb and woo, for leave to do him good.
Queen.

O Hamlet! thou hast cleft my heart in twain.
Ham.

O throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night: but go not to mine uncle's bed:
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habits, devil, is angel yet in this;
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frowk, or lively,
That aply is put on: refrain to-night;
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next appearance, the next more easy;
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And master the devil, or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night:
And when you are desirous to be bless'd,
I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord,

Pointing to Polonius,

I do repent; but heaven hath pleas'd it so,
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So, again, good night.
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.
One word more, good lady.

Queen.

What shall I do?
Ham.

Not this, by no means, that I bid you do;
Let the blast kng tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you his mouse;
And let him, for a pair of reeches,
Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out,
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

ACT IV.

That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft. 'T were good, you let him know;
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a padow, from a bat, a gib,²
Such dear concerns hide? who would do so? No,
In despite of sense and secrecy,
Uphe the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly, and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.
Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.
Ham. I must to England; you know that.
Queen. Alack! I had forgot: 'tis so concluded on. [fellow,]—
Ham. There's letters seal'd, and my two school-
Whom I will trust, as I will adders fang'd,—
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
And marshal me to knavery. Let it work;
For 'tis the sport, to have the engine
Hoist with his own petar, and it shall go hard,
But I will delive one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon. O! 'tis most sweet,
When in one line two crafts directly meet.—
This man shall set me packing:
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room.—
Mother, good night.—Indeed, this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating knave—
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you —
Good night, mother.

[Exeunt severally; Hamlet dragging in Polonius]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.
Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. There's matter in these sighs: these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.
Where is your son?
Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.—
[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.
Ah, my good lord, what have I seen to-night!
King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?
Queen. Mad as the sea and wind, when both contend
Which is the mightier. In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, 'A rat! a rat!'
And in his brainish apprehension kills
The unseen good old man.
King. O heavy deed!
It had been so with us, had we been there.
His liberty is full of threats to all;
To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,
This mad young man; but so much was our love,
We would not understand what most was fit,
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?
Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd;
O'er whom his very madness, like some ore
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure: he weeps for what is done.
King. O, Gertrude! come away,
The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence: and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse.—Ho! Guildenstern!

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Friends both, go join you with some farther aid.
Hamlet in madness hath Pocionius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd him:
Go, seek him out: speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Ros. and Guild.]

1 T ned. 2 Cat. 3 This and the eight preceding lines, are not in folio. 4 This line is not in folio. 5 These three words were added by Frewald; the rest of the passage to 'air' is not in folio. 6 as an ape doth note: in quarto, 1603. 7 A reference to the bear's game of "All hid."
SCENE III.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter King, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body. How dangerous is it, that this man goes loose! Yet must not we put the strong law on him: He's lov'd of the distracted multitude, Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes; And where 'tis so, th' offender's scourge is weigh'd, But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even, This hidden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause: diseases, desperate grown, By desperate appliance are reliev'd,

Enter Rosencrantz.

Or not at all.—How now! what hath befallen? Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord, We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he? Ros. Without, my lord; guarded, to know your pleasure.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius? Ham. At supper.

King. At supper! Where? Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten; a certain convocation of palated worms are set on him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet: we fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king and your lean beggar, is but variable service; two dishes, but to one table: that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king; and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this? Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Who's Polonius? Ham. In heaven: send thinther to see; if thy messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place elsewhere. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into his lobby.

King. Go seek him there. [To some Attendants. Ham. He will stay till you come. [Exit Attendants.

King. Hamlet, this deed, 4 for thine especial safety,—Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve For that which thou hast done,—must send thee hence With fiery quickness: therefore, prepare thyself. The bark is ready, and the wind at help, Whose associates tend, and every thing is bent For England.

Ham. For England?

King. Ay, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou know'rt our purposes. Ham. I see a curbor that sees them. But, come; or England!—Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet. Ham. My mother: father and mother is man and wife, man and wife is one flesh; and so, my mother, come, for England! [Exit.

King. Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed abroad:elay it not, I'll have him hence to-night.

Away, for every thing is seal'd and done, That else leans on th' affair: pray you, make haste.

[Exit Ros. and Guildenstern.

And, England, if my love thou holdest at aught, (As my great power thereof may give thee sense, Since yet thy ciestance looks raw and red After the Danish sword, and thy free awe Pays homage to us) thou may'st not coldly see Our sovereign process, which imports at full, By letters conjuring 5 to that effect, The present death of Hamlet, done in it, England; For like the beetie in my blood he rages, And thou must cure me. Till I know 'tis done, Howe'er my hopes, my joys were ne'er begun. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Plain in Denmark.

Enter Fortinbras, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain; from me greet the Danish king: Tell him, that by his license Fortinbras Claims the conveyance of a promis'd march Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous. If that his majesty would aught with us, We shall express our duty in his eye; And let him know so.

Cap. I will do't, my lord. For. Go safely 6 on.

Enter* Hamlet, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, &c.

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these? Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purpos'd, sir, I pray you?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who Commands them, sir? Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras. Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir, or for some frontier?

Cap. Truly to speak, and with no addition, We go to gain a little patch of ground, That hath in it no profit but the name. To pay five dukats, five, I would not farm it; Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole, A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee. Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend it. Cap. Yes, 'tis already Garrison'd. Ham. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousand dukats, Will not dispute the question of this straw: This is th' imposthume of much wealth and peace, That inward breaks, and shows no cause without Why the man dies.—I humbly thank you, sir. Cap. God be wi' you, sir.

[Exit Captain Ros.

Ham. Will 't please you go, my lord? Cap. I'll be with you straight. Go a little before.

[Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

How all occasions do inform against me, And spur my dull revenge! What is a man, If his chief good, and market of his time, Be but to sleep, and feed? a beast, no more. Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse, Looking before and after, gave us not That capability and godlike reason, To lust in us unused. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple Of thinking too precisely on th' event,— A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom, And ever three parts coward,—I do not know

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

Why yet I live to say, "This thing 's to do?"
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means,
To do ' t. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:
Witness this army, of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,
Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event;
Exposing what is mortal, and unarmed,
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
Is not to stir without great argument,
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,
When honour 's at the stake. How stand I, then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? while, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That for a fantasy, and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds; fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause
Which is not tomb enough, and continent,
To hide the slain?—O! from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth! [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Elsinore. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Queen, Horatio, and a Gentleman.

Queen. I will not speak with her.

Gent. She is importunate; indeed, distress'd;
Her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen. What would she have? Gent. She speaks much of her father; says, she hears,
There 's tricks i' the world; and hems, and beats her heart;
Spurns evanishly at straws; speaks things in doubt,
That carry but half sense. Her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim'd at it,
And both the words up fit to their own thoughts;
Which, as her whims, and nods, and gestures yield them,
Indeed would make one think, there might be thought,
Though nothing sure. yet much unhappily.

Hor. ' T were good she were spoken with, for she may strue
Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds.

Queen. Let her come in. [Exeunt Horatio.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss:
So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
It spills itself in fearing to be spilt.

Re-enter Horatio, with Ophelia, distracted.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?

Queen. How now, Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true love know [Singing.

From another one?
By his cockle hat and stuff,
And his sandal shoon.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady! what imports this song?

He is dead and gone, lady,
At his head a green grass turf;
At his heels a stone.

O. ho! Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,—

Oph. Pray you, mark.

White his shroud as the mountain snow, [Singing.

Enter King.

Queen. Alas! look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded with sweet flowers;
Which beseem to the grave 'd did go,
With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?

Oph. Well, God 'ild you! They say, the owl was a baker's daughter. * Lord! we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conoseit upon her father.

Oph. Pray you, let 's have no words of this; but when they ask you what it means, say you this:

To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your windows,
To be your Valentine:

Then, up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dupp'd the chamber door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia!

Oph. Indeed, la! without an oath, I'll make an one on 't:

By Gis and by Saint Charity,
Alack, and fie for shame!
Young men will do't, if they come to it;

By cock, they are to blame.

Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
You promised me to wed:

He answered

So should I ha' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient;
but I cannot choose but weep, to think, they would lay him i' the cold ground. My brother shall know of it, and so I thank you for your good counsel.—Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies; good night, good night.

[Exit.

King. Follow her close; give her good watch. I pray you.

[Exit Horatio.

O! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death. 11 And now, behold,
O Gertrude, Gertrude!
When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions. First, her father slain;
Next, your son gone; and he most violent author
Of his own just remove: the people muddied,
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers.
For good Polonius' death, and we have done but green.
In hugging-mugger to inter him: poor Ophelia,
Divided from herself, and her fair judgment,
Without whose weight we are picture, or mere beasts:
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her brother is in secret come from France,
Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds,
And wants not buzzers to infect his ear
With pestilent speeches of his father's death;
Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our persons to arrange
In ear and ear. O! my dear Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering piece in many places.

[noise within.

Queen. Aack! what noise is this?
King. Attend! Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door. What is the matter?

Enter a Gentleman, in haste.

Gent. Save yourself, my lord; the ocean, overpeeping of his list,

The ocean, overpeeping of his list,

The ocean, overpeeping of his list,

The ocean, overpeeping of his list,

Enter Laertes, with his sword drawn; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king?—Sir, stand you all without.

Dan. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Dan. We will, we will. [They retire without the Door.

Laer. I thank you: keep the door.—O thou vile king!

Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that 's calm proclaims me bastard;

Cries, cuckold, to my father; brands the harlot

Even here, between the chaste unmaried brow

Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,

That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?—

Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person;

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,

That treason can but peep to what it would,

Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,

Why thou art thus incozen'd.—Let him go, Gertrude.

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father?

King.

Queen. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be jugged with.

To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil!

Conscience, and grace, to the profoundest pit!

dare damnation. To this point I stand,

That both the worlds I give to negligence,

Let come what comes, only I'll be reveng'd

Most thoroughly for my father.

Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world's:

And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,

They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

If you desire to know the certainty

Of your dear father's death, 'tis writ in your revenge,

That, swoopstake, you will draw both friend and foe,

Winner and loser.

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them, then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms;

And, like the kind life-rendering pelican,

Reap them with blood.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK. ACT IV.

And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

LAER. Let this be so:
His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones,
No noble rites, nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,
That I must call 't in question.

KING. So you shall;
And, where 'th offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter HORATIO, and a SERVANT.

HOR. What are they, that would speak with me?

SERV. Sailors, sir: they say, they have letters for you.

HOR. Let them come in. [Exit SERVANT.

I know not wherefrom of the world
I should be grieved, if not from lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

1 SAIL. God bless you, sir.

HOR. Let him bless thee too.

1 SAIL. He shall, sir, an' please him. There's a letter for you, sir: it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

HOR. [Reads.] 'Horatio, when thou shalt have overlook'd this, give these fellows some means to the king: they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase. Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compell'd valour; and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealsd with me like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did: I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou wouldst fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bire of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosecrantz and Guildensterne hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell;

He that knowest thine, Hamlet.'

Come, I will give you way for those your letters;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter KING and LAERTES.

KING. Now must your conscience, my acquittance seal,
And you must put in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Purs'd my life.

LAER. It well appears. But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these foes,
So criminal and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stir'd up.

KING. O! for two special reasons,
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unavow'd,
But 'tis yet to me they are strong. The queen, his mother,
Lives almost by his looks; and for myself,
(My wherein, they say, you be 't either which)
She's so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,

Why to a public count I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him;
Who, dipping all his fault in their affection,
Work like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his griefes to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slightely umber'd for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

LAER. And so have I a noble father lost,
A sister driven into desperate terms;
Who was, if praises may go back again,
Sole challenger on mount of all the age
For her perfections. But my revenge will come.

KING. Break not your sleeps for that: you must not think,
That we are made of stuff so flat and dull,
That we can let our beard be shook with danger,
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more:
I loved your father, and we love ourself;
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine—
How now! what news?

Enter a Messenger.

MESSER. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet.

KING. This to your majesty: this to the queen.

MESSER. The letters, my lord, they say; I saw them not:
They were given me by Claudius, he receiv'd them
Of him that brought them.

LAER. Laertes, you shall hear them—

KING. [Reads.] "High and mighty, you shall know, I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes; when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasions of my sudden and more strange return.

HAMLET. What should this mean? Are all the rest come back
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

LAER. Know you the hand?

KING. 'Tis Hamlet's character. "Naked."—
And, in a postscript here, he says, "alone."

Can you advise me?

LAER. I'm lost in it, my lord. But let him come:
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
"Thus diddest thou."

KING. If it be so. Laertes,
(As how should it be so? how otherwise?)
Will you be ruled by me?

LAER. Ay, my lord;—
So you will not o'er-rule me to a peace.

KING. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—
As liking not his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it.—I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
Under which he shall not choose but fall;
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe,
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident.

LAER. My lord, I will be rul'd;
The rather, if you could devise it so,
That I might be the organ.

KING. It falls right.
You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Of my wherein, they say, you be 't either which:
Your sum of parts
Did not together plac'sluch envy from him,
As did that one; and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.

1 serval: in folio 2 crimineal: in folio 3 Not in folio 4 And: in folio. 5 This line is not in folio. 6 These three words are not in folio. 7 So the undated quarto; checking at: in folio. 8 This speech and all that follows, to "graveuses," is not in folio. 9

Leer. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very riband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than the old age of his sables, and his weeds,
Importing health and gravity.—Two months since,
Here was a gentleman of Normandy:
I have seen myself, and serv'd against the French,
And they can* well on horseback; but this gallant
Had witchcraft in't; he grew unto his seat;
And to such wonderous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorp'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast. So far he top'd my thought,
That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,
Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman, was't?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamord.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well: he is the brooch, indeed,
And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you;
And gave you such a masterly report,
For fact and exercise in your defense,
And for your rapier most especially.
That he cried out, 't would be a sight indeed,
If one could match you: the serimers* of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them. This report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,
That he could nothing do, but wish and beg
Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.

Now, out of this,—

Laer. What* out of this, my lord?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Laer. Why ask you this?

King. Not that I think you did not love your father,
But that I know love is begun by time;
And that I see, in passages of proof,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.
There lives within the very flame of love
A kind of with, or an snuff, that will abate it,
And nothing is at a like goodness still;
For goodness, growing to a pleurisy,*
Dies in his own too-much. That we would do,
We should do when we would; for this "would"
And hath abatements and delays as many [changes,
As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;
And then this "should" is like a spendthrift's sigh,
That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o' the ulcer.
Hamlet comes back: what would you undertake,
To show yourself your father's son in deed,
More than in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize;
Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,
Will you do this, keep close within your chamber.
Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home:
We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame.
The Frenchman fear you; bring you in fine together,
And wager on your heads: be, being remiss,
Most generous, and free from all contriving,
Will not perverse the foilia; so that with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choose
A sword unblunted, and in a pass of practice
 Require him for your father.

Laer. I will do't;
And, for that purpose, I'll knoait my sword.
I bought an union of a mountebank,
So mortal, that but dip it* a knife in it,
Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that have virtue
Under the moon, can save the thing from death,
That is but scratch'd withal: I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that if I gill him slightly,
It may be death.

King. Let's farther think of this;
Weigh, what convenience, both of time and means,
May fit us to our shape. If this should fail,
And that our drift look through our bad performance,
'T were better not essay'd: therefore, this project
Should have a back, or second, that might hold,
If this should blast in proof. Soft!—let me see:
We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings, i
I ha't;
When in your motion you are hot and dry,
(As make your bouts more violent to that end)
And that he calls for drink, I'll have pret'rd* him
A chalice for the nonce, whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,
Our purpose may hold there. But stay! what noise?

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen!

Queen. One woo doth tread upon another's heel,
So fast they follow.—Your sister's drown'd, Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd! O, where?

Queen. There is a willow grows aliant the brook,
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream;
Therewith* fantasic garlands did she make
Of cow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them.
There, on the pendent boughs her coronet woods
Clambering to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies, and herself,
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide
And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up;
Which time she chanting snatches of old laud,
As one inacapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and reduc'd
Unto that element: but long it could not be.
Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Laer. Also! then, is she drown'd?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears: but yet
It is our trick; nature her custom holds,
Let shame say what it will: when these are gone,
The woman will be out.—Adieu, my lord:
I have a speech of fire, that fain would blaze,
But that this folly drowns* it.

Erit

King. Let's follow, Gertrude.

How much I had to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I, this will give it start again;
Therefore, let's follow.

[Exeunt.
ACT V.

1 Clown digs, and sings.

In youth, when I did love, did love,
Methought it was very sweet,
To contract, O! the time, for, ah! my behove
O! methought, there was nothing meet

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business, that he sings at grave-making?

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'Tis even so: the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

1 Clown. But age, with his stealing steps,
Hath claw'd me in his clutch,
And hath shipped me intill the land,
As if I had never been such.

[Throws up a skull.

Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! Thus might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'er-reaches, one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier, which could say, "Good-morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord?" This might be my lord such-a-one, that prized my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it, might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, 'en so, and now my lady Worm's chapsless, and knuckled about the mazzard with a sexton's spade. Here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them? mine ake to think on't.

1 Clown. A pick-axe, and a spade, a spade, [Sings. For—and a shrouding sheet: O! a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up another skull.

Ham. There's another: why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quidnits now, his quibbles, his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the scence with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Humpf! This fellow might in't time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pit of ground? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box, and must the inheritor himself have no more? ha?

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calf-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow.—Whose grave's this, sir?

1 Clown. Mine, sir.—

O! a pit of clay for to be made [Sings. For such a guest is meet.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

1 Clo. You lie out on 't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in 't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in 't, to be in 't, and say it is thine: 't is for the dead, not for the quick; therefore, that hell.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 't will away again, from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?
1 Clo. For no man, sir.
Ham. What woman, then?
1 Clo. For none, neither.
Ham. Who is to be buried in 't?
1 Clo. One, that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knaves is: we must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us. By the lord! Horatio, these three years I have taken note of it: the age is grown so picked, that the toe of the peasanst comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe. —How long hast thou been a grave-maker?
1 Clo. Of all the days in the year, I came to 't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since?
1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that.
It is the very day that young Hamlet was born; he that is born to die, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry; why was he sent into England?
1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?
1 Clo. 'T will not be seen in him there; there, the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?
1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?
1 Clo. 'Tis a faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?
1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark. I have been sexton here, man, and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie in the earth ere he rot?
1 Clo. 'Tis a faith, if he be not rotten before he die, (as we have a many pokey corse now-a-days), that will scarce hold the laying in; he will last you some eight year, or nine year: a Tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?
1 Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while, and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a skull now; this skull hath lain i' the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?
1 Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was: whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.
1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! a' poured a fagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same skull, sir, this same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the king's jester.

Ham. This?
1 Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Let me see. — Alas, poor Yorick! — I knew him, Horatio: a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times: and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips, that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite chappell'd? Now, get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come; make her laugh at that. — Prythee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?
Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander looked o' this fashion 't the earth?

Hor. E'en so.
Ham. And smelt so? pah! [Puts down the Skull.
Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio. Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander. till he find it stopping a bung-hole?
Hor. 'T were to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likehood to lead it: as thus: Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returned into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam, and why of that loam, whereinto he was converted, may they not stop a bung-barrel?

"Imperial" Cæsar dead, and turn'd to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away: O! that earth, which kept the world apace, Should patch a wall 't expel the winter's flaw! But soft! but soft! aside: —here comes the king.

Enter Priests, &c. in procession; the corpse of Ophelia, Laertes and Mourners following; King, Queen, and their Trains.

The queen, the courtiers. Who is that they follow, And with such maimed rites? This doth betoken, The corpse they follow did with desperate hand Forso's own life: 't was of some estate.

Couch we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring on one side with Horatio.

Laer. What ceremony else? That is Laertes, A very noble youth: mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?
1 Priest. Her obsequies have been so enlarget'd As we have warranty: her death was doubtful; And but that great command c'erswayed the order, She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd, Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers, Shards, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her, Yet here she is allow'd her virgin grante's, Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home Of balm and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?
1 Priest. No more be done. We should profane the service of the dead, To sing sad requiem, and such rest to her As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth; And from her fair and unpolluted flesh, May violets spring! — I tell thee, churlish priest, A ministering angel shall my sister be, When thouliest howling.

Ham. What! the fair Ophelia? Queen. Sweetest to the sweet: farewell.

[Strewing flowers.

I hop'd thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife:
An hour of quiet thereby! we shall see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Castle.
Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other.
You do remember all the circumstance.
Hor. Remember me, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep: methought, I lay
Worse than the mutine11 in the bible.12 Rashly—
And prais'd be rashness for it,—let us own,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep12 plots do fail:13 and that should teach13 us,
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scar'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them; had my desire;
Finger'd their packet; and, in fine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unfold17
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,
O royal knavery! an exact command,—
Larded with many several sorts of reasons,
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho! such bags and goblets in my life,—
That on the superstructure, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible!

Ham. Here's the commission: read it at more leisure. [Giving it.]

But wilt thou hear me? how did I proceed?
Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benighted round with villains,—
Ere I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play,—I got me down,
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair.
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning: but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service. Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,—
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them like the palm might flourish,
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
And stand a comma'tween their amities,
And many such like as's of great charge,
That on the view and know18 of these contents,
Without debeatment farther, more or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death.
Not shriving time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordain'd.19
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal;
Folded the writ up in form of the other;
Subscrib'd it: gave 't th' impression; plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known. Now, the next day
Was our sea-fight, and what to this was sequent

1 terrible weare: in folio.  2 Flr: in folio.  3 splenetic: in f. o.  4 wisdom: in folio.  5 Away: in folio.  6 Not in f. o.  7 Probably the river Ystil.  8 The words, "I'll do't," are not repeated in f. o.  9 This and the following line, are given to the QUEEN, in f. o.  10 short.  11 in folio.  12 Mutters.  13 Bars of iron with fetters, as called from Bibbes, where they were made.  14 dear: in f. o.  15 mill: in f. o.  16 learn: in quartos.  17 unused: in folio.  18 Not in f. o.  19 now: in quartos.  20 knowing: in quartos.  21 ordinants in folio.
Then know'st already.
Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to 't.
Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment:
They are not near my conscience; their defect
Does by their own insinuation grow.
'Tis dangerous, when a baser nature comes
Between the pass and fall incensed points
Of mighty opposites.
Hor. Why, what a king is this!
Ham. Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon—
He that hath kill'd my king, and for my mother;
Pop'd in between the election and my hopes;
His angle for my proper life thrown out,
And with such cozenage—'tis not perfect conscience,
To quit him with his own? and 'tis not to be damned,
To let this canker of our nature come
In farther evil?
Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England,
What is the issue of the business there.
But 'tis not yet, the interim is mine;
And a man's life no more than to say, one.
But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That Laertes I forgot myself,
For by the image of my cause I see
The portraiture of his: 'twill court his favours:
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.
Hor. Peace! who comes here?
Enters Osric.
Osr. Your lordship is right welcome to Denmark.
Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost know this
Hor. No, my good lord. [water-fly?]
Ham. Thy state is the more gracious, for 'tis a vice
I know him. He hath much land, and fertile: let a wart be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mews: 'tis a coarse horse; but, as I say, spacious in his possession of dirt.
Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should impart a thing to you from my majesty.
Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of print. Your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.
Osr. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.
Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold: the wind is erotherly.
Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.
Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry, and hot in my complexion.
Osr. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry, as were,—I cannot tell how.—But, my lord, his majesty ade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager a your head. Sir, this is the matter,—
Ham. I beseech you, remember—
[Hamlet moves him to put on his Hat.
Osr. Nay, in good faith; for mine ease, in good sith. Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes; be me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent affections, of very soft society, and great showing:
heed, to speak feelingly' of him, he is the card or blender of gentry, for you shall find him in the conti-ment of what part a gentleman would see.
Ham. Sir, his determination suffers no perdition in you;
though, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzie
the arithmetic of memory; and yet but raw neither,
I respect of his quick sail. But in the verity of ex-iment, I take him to be a soul of great article; and is infusion of such dearth and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror; and who else would trace him, his ubrase, nothing more.
Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.
Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?
Osr. Sir?
Hor. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.
Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?
Osr. Of Laertes?
Hor. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.
Ham. Of him, sir.
Osr. I know, you are not ignorant—
Ham. I would, you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me.—Well, sir.
Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence
Laertes is.
Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but to know a man well were to know himself.
Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputtation laid on him by them, in his deeds he's unfol-lowed.
Ham. What's his weapon?
Osr. Rapier and dagger.
Ham. That's two of his weapons: but, well.
Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses: against the which he has imponed, as, if I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangars, and so. Three of the carrriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.
Ham. What call you the carriages?
Hor. I know, you must be edified by the margin, e
you had done. 1
Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangars.
Ham. The phrase would be more germane to the matter, if we could carry a cannon by our sides: I would, it might be hangars till then. But, on: six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-concocted carriages: that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this imponed, as you call it?
Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, sir, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits: he hath laid on twelve, for nine, and that would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.
Ham. How, if I answer, no?
Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.
Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: if it please his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me.
Let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odd hits.
Osr. Shall I deliver you so?
Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.
Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship. [Exit.
Ham. Yours, yours.—He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for't turn.
Hor. This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.
Ham. He did comply1 with his dug before he sucked it. Thus has he (and many2 more of the same breed3 that, I know, the dressy age doth on) only got the tune of the time, and outward habit of encounter, a kind of yeasty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond4 and winnowed opinions; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: he sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes; they follow the king's pleasure: if his nose speaks, mine is ready; now, or whenever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so: since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. Thou wouldst not think, how ill all is here about my heart; but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord.—

Hor. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving,5 as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repair hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury: there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all. Since no man, of'stough he leaves, knows, what is't to leave betimes? Let be.6

Enter King, Queen, Laertes, Lords, Osric, and Attendants with Fools, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet; come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts the hand of Laertes into that of Hamlet.

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I've done you wrong;

But pardon't, as you are a gentleman.

This presence knows,
And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd
With sore distraction. What I have done, That might your nature, honour, and exception, Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.
Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never, Hamlet: If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, And when he's not himself does wrong Laertes, Then Hamlet does it not; Hamlet denies it. Who does it then? His madness. If't be so, Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd; His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience, Let me disclaiming from a purpose'd evil
Free me so far in your most generous thoughts, That I have shot mine arrow o'er the house, And hurt my brother.

Laer. I am satisfied in nature, Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most To my revenge: but in my terms of honour, I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation, Till by some elder masters, of known honour, I have a voice and precedent of peace, To keep my name ungord. But till that time, I do receive your offer'd love like love, And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely; And will this brother's wager frankly play.—

Give us the foils; come on.7 [Fools brouch.]

Laer. Come; one for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes: in mine ignorance Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer. You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric.—Come, Hamlet, You know the wager?

Ham. Very well, my lord;
You grace hath laid the odds o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it: I have seen, and both;

But since he is better, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy; let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well. These foils have all length, [They prepare to pin Osr. Ay, my good lord.

King. Set me the stoops of wine upon that table. If Hamlet give the first or second hit, Or quit in answer of the third exchange, Let all the battlements their ordinance fire; The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath: And in the cup an union8 shall he throw, Richer than that which four successive kings In Denmark's crown have worn. Give me the cup, and let the kettle to the trumpet speak, The trumpet to the cannon without, The cannons to the heavens, the heavens to earth, "Now the king drinks to Hamlet!"—Come, begin.—

And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, sir.

Laer. Come, my lord. [They play.

Ham. Come, One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Judges.

Osr. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well.—again.

King. Stay; give me drink. Hamlet, this pearl's a thine; Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound; and Cannon shot off within.

Ham. I'll play this bout first; set it by awhile.—

Come.—Another hit; what say you? [They play.

Laer. A touch; a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scents of breath—Here is a napkin, rub thy brows, my son.9 The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,—

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord: I pray you, pardon me. [She drinks.

King. It is the poison'd cup! it is too late. [Ask. Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; and by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think it.

Laer. And yet it is almost against my conscience. [Ask.

Scene II.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK. 771

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes. You but dally: I pray you, pass with your best violence. I am afraid, you make me wanton of me.

Laer. Say you so? come on. [They play.

Osr. Nothing, neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

[Laertes wounds Hamlet; then, in scuffling they change Rapiers, and Hamlet wounds Laertes.

King. Part them! they are incensed.

Ham. Nay, come again. [The Queen falls.

Osr. Look to the queen there, ho? Hor. They bleed on both sides.—How is it, my lord? Osr. How is’t, Laertes?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe, Oerick;
I am justly kill’d with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the Queen?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink.—O my dear Hamlet.
The drink, the drink: I am poison’d. [Dies.

Ham. O villainy!—How? let the door be lock’d:
Treachery! seek it out. [Laertes falls.

Laer. It is here, Hamlet. Hamlet, thou art slain;
No medicine in the world can do thee good:
In thee there is not half an hour of life;
The treacherous instrument is in thy hand, Unbated, and envenom’d. The foul practice Hath turn’d itself on me: lo! here I lie.

Never to rise again. Thy mother’s poison’d;
I can no more. The king, the king’s to blame.

Ham. The point

Envenom’d too!—Then venom, to thy work.

[Stabs the King.

All. Treason! treason!

King. O! yet defend me, friends: I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murder’d, damned Dane,
Drink off this potion:—is thy union here?

Follow my mother. [King dies.

Laer. He is justly serv’d; It is a poison temper’d by himself;
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:
Mine and my father’s death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me! [Dies.

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee.—I am dead, Horatio.—Wretched queen, adieu!—You that look pale and tremble at this chance, That are but mute or audience to this act, Had I but time, (as this fell sergeant, death, Is strict in his arrest) O! I could tell you,—But let it be.—Horatio, I am dead; Thou liv’st: report me and my cause aright* To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it: [Taking the Cup.* I am more an antique Roman than a Dane:

Ham. As thou’rt a man, Give me the cup: let go; by heaven I’ll have it. [Struggling: Hamlet gets the Cup.

O God!—Horatio, what a wounded name, Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me! If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart, Abstain thee from felicity awhile, And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain, To tell my story.—[Mrch afar off, and Shot within.

What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,
To the ambassadors of England gives
This warlike volley.

Ham. O! I die, Horatio;
The potent poison quite o’er-crows* my spirit: I cannot live to hear the news from England; But I do prophesy the election lights On Fortinbras: he has my dying voice; So tell him, with the occurrences, more and less, Which have solicited—The rest is silence. [Dies.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart.—Good night, sweet prince;
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest! Why does the drum come hither? [March within.

Enter Fortinbras, the English Ambassadors, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it ye would see?

If aught of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry cries on havoc.—O proud death! What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,
That thou so many princes at a shot
So bloodily hast struck?

Amb. The sight is dismal,
And our affairs from England come too late: The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfill’d,
That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead.
Where shall we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it th’ ability of life to thank you:
He never gave commandment for their death.
But since, so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv’d, give order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view;
And let me speak to the yet unknowing world,
How these things came about; so shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts,
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters,
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc’d cause,
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall’n on the inventors’ heads. All this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,
And call the noblest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune:
I have some rights of memory in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage doth invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more:
But let this scene be presently perform’d,
Even while men’s minds are wild, lest more mischief,
On plots and errors, happen.

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had he been put on,
To have prov’d most royally: and for his passage,
The soldiers’ music, and the rites of war,
Speak loudly for him.—Take up the body.—Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.
Go, bid the soldiers shoot. [A dead March.

[Exeunt, marching: after which, a peel of Ordinance is shot off.}

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Room of State in King Lear's Palace.

Enter KENT, GLOSTER, and EDMUND.

KENT. I thought, the king had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

GLO. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

KENT. Is not this thy son, my lord?

GLO. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

KENT. I cannot conceive you.

GLO. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: whereupon she grew round-wombed, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

KENT. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

GLO. But I have a son, sir, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knave came somewhat saucily into the world, before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair, there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

EDM. No, my lord.

GLO. My lord of Kent: remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

EDM. My services to your lordship.

KENT. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

EDM. Sir, I shall study deserving.

GLO. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again.—The king is coming. [Senet within.

Enter LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and Attendants.

LEAR. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

GLO. I shall, my liege. [Exit GLOSTER and EDMUND.

LEAR. Mean-time, we shall express our darker purpose.

Give me the map there.—Know, that we have divided in three, our kingdom: and 't is our fast intent To shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths, while we Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall, And you, our no less loving son of Albany, We have this hour a constant will to publish Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy, Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn. And here are to be answer'd.—Tell me, my daughters, (Since now we will divest us, both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state) Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most? That we our largest bounty may extend Where nature doth with merit challenge.—Goneril, Our eldest-born, speak first.

GON. I love you more than words can wield the matter; Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty; Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare; No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour: As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found; A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable; Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

COR. What shall Cordelia speak?—Love, and be silent. [Aside

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this, With shadowy forests, and with champains rich'd, With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads, We make thee lady: to thine and Albany's issue Be this perpetual.—What says our second daughter, Our dearest Regan, wife of Cornwall? Speak. 3

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister, And prize me at her worth. In my true heart I find, she names my very deed of love; Only she comes too short, that I profess Myself an enemy to all other joys, While there 6 of sense possess, 6 And find, I am alone felicitate In your dear highness' love.

Cor. Then, poor Cordelia! [Aside.
And yet not so: since, I am sure, my love's More plenteous 6 than my tongue. Lear. To thee, and thine, hereditary ever, Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom; No less in space, validity, and pleasure, Than that conferred on General.—Now, my joy, Although our last, not least: to whose young love The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy, Strive to be interest'd; what can you say, to draw A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

Lear. Nothing will come of nothing: speak again. Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty According to my bond; nor more, nor less.

Lear. How? how, Cordelia? mend your speech a little, Least you may mar your fortunes.

Cor. Good my lord, You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I Return those duties back as are right fit, Obev you, love you, and most honour you. Why have my sisters husbands, if they say, They love you all? Happy, when I shall wed, That lord, whose hand must take my.plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care, and duty: Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters, To love my father all.

Lear. But goes this with thy heart?

Cor. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so: thy truth, then, be thy dower; For, by the sacred radiance of the sun, The mysteries of Hecate, and the night, By all the operation of the orbs, From whom we do exist, and cease to be, Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me, Hold thee from this for ever. The barbarous Scythian, Or he that makes his generation messes To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom Be as well neighbour'd, pitted, and reliev'd, As thou, my sometime daughter.

Kent. Good my liege,—Lear. Peace, Kent! Come not between the dragon and his wrath. I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest

On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight!—

[To Cordelia.
So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her. —Call France. —Who stirs? Call Burgundy.—Cornwall, and Albany, With my two daughters' dowers digest the third: Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her. I do invest you jointly with my power, Pre-eminence, and all the large effects That troop with majesty.—Ourself, by monthly course With reservation of an hundred knights, By you to be sumptuously shall our abode Make with you by due turns. Only, we still retain The name, and all th'additions to a king; The sway, revenue, execution of the rest, Beloved sons, be yours: which to confirm, This coronet part between you. [Giving the Crown Kent. Royal Lear, Whom I have ever honour'd as my king. Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd, And as my patron thought on in my prayers,— Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade The region of my heart: be Kent unmanfully, When Lear is mad.—What wouldst thou do, old man? Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to speak, When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour's bound, When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy doom! 10, 16 And in thy best consideration check This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment, Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least; Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sound Reverbs no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more. Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn To wage against thine enemies; nor 11 fear to lose, Thy safety being the motive.

Lear. Out of my sight! Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still remain The true blank of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo,—Kent. Now, by Apollo, king, Thou swear' st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal! recreant! 12 [Laying his hand upon his Sword.

Alb. Corn. Dear sir, forbear. 13 Kent. Do; Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift! 15; Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat, I'll tell thee, thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant! On thine allegiance hear me. Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow, (Which we durst never yet) and, with strain'd 18 pride, To come betwixt our sentence and our power, (Which nor our nature nor our place can bear) Our potency made good, take thy reward. Five days we do allot thee for provision To shield thee from diseases of the world, And on the sixth to turn thy hateb' back Upon our kingdom: if the seventieth day following, Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions, The moment is thy death. Away! By Jupiter, This shall not be revok'd.

KING LEAR.

Prologue.

KENT. Fare thee well, king: since thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.—
The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,
[To Cordelia.
That justly think'est, and hast most rightly said!—
And your large speeches move your deed approve,
[To Regan and Goneril.
That good effects may spring from words of love.—
Thus Kent, C prince! bids you all adieu:
He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit.

GLO. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

LEAR. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address toward you, who with this king
Hath rivall'd for our daughter: what, in the least,
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

BUR. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.

LEAR. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n. Sir, there she stands:
If aught within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure, yield,
And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

BUR. I know no answer.

LEAR. Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriend'd, new-adopted to our hate,
Dowered with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?

BUR. Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up on such conditions.

LEAR. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king,
[To France.
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate: therefore, beseech you
'T avert your liking a more worthier way,
Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost 't acknowledge hers.

FRANCE. This is most strange.
That she, that even but now was your blest object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it, or your fore-vouch'd affection
Fall'n into taint: which to believe of her,
Must be a faith that reason, without miracle,
Could never plant in me.

COR. I yet beseech your majesty,
(If for I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak) that you make known
It is no vicious blot, nor other foulness,
No unchaste* action, or dishonour'd stoop,†
That hath deprived me of your grace and favour;
But even for want of that for which I am richer,
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

LEAR. Better thou
Hadst not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better
France. Is it* but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspeak'd,
That it intends to do?—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respect; that stand
Afar from the entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.10

BUR. Royal Lear,11
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

LEAR. Nothing: I have sworn; I am firm.
BUR. I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father,
That you must lose a husband.

Peace be with Burgundy:
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

FRANCE. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor,
Most choice, forsaken, and most lov'd, despis'd,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect
My love should kindle to inflame'd respect.—
Thy dowrless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:
Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind:
Thou leastest here, a better where12 to find.

LEAR. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again:—Therefore, be gone
Without our grace, our love, our benison.—
Come, noble Burgundy.

[Flourish. Exeunt Lear, Burgundy, Cornwall, Albany, Glositer, and attendants.

FRANCE. Bid farewell to your sisters.

COR. Ye jewels of our father, with wais't eyes
Cordelia leaves you: I know you what you are;
And, like a sister, am most loth to call
Your faults as they are nam'd. Love13 well our
To your professed bosom I committed him;
[tubes:] But yet, alas! stood I within his grace,
I would prefer him to a better place.
So, farewell to you both.

GON. Prescribe not us our duty.

REG. Let your study
Be to content your lord, who hath receiv'd you
As fortune's slave: you have obedience scant;
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

COR. Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides;
Who cover faults, at last shame them14 derides.
Well may you prosper!—

FRANCE. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt France and Cordelia.

GON. Sister, it is not little I have to say of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think, our father will hence to-night.

REG. That's most certain, and with you: next month with us.

GON. You'vee see how full of changes his age is; the observation we have made of it hath not15 been little:
he always loved our sister most, and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off appears too grossly.
SCENE II.

KING LEAR.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age; yet he hath ever been slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then, must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition, but, therewithal, the unruly waywardness that infect and choleric years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is farther compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit 1 together, if our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall farther think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i' the heat.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Hall in the Earl of Gloucester's Castle.

Enter Edmund, the Bastard, with a Letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law My servants are bound. Wherefore should I Stand on the plague of custom, and permit The curiosity 2 of nations to deprive me, For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base, When my dimensions are as well compact, My mind as generous, and my shape as true, As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us With base? with baseless? bastardy? base? base? Why in the lusty stealth of nature take More composition and fierce quality, Than doth within a dull, stale, tired bed, Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops, Got 'twixt asleep and wake?—Well then, Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land: Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund, As to the legitimate. Fine word,—legitimate! 3Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed, And my invention thrive, Edmund the base Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper:—Now, gods, stand up for bastards! [Reads the Letter. 4

Enter Gloucester.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! And France in choler parted!

And the king gone to-night! subscribe'd 5 his power! Confined to exhibition! 6 All this done Upon the gad!—Edmund? How now! what news? Edm. So please your lordship, none. [Hiding the Letter. 7

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading?

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No! What needed, then, that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: come; if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; and for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your o'looking.

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, Are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads.] "This policy, and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us, till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny, who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar. 7—Humph!—Conspiracy—" Sleep till I waked him,—you should enjoy half his revenue."—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? 8 Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it: I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's? Edm. He was my master were good, my lord, I durst swear it; and, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but, I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord; but I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that sons at perfect age, and fathers declined, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish!—Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him. Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other 8 pretence 9 of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any farther delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

Edm. Nor is it, sure. 10

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him,—Heaven and earth!—Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him, I pray you: frame the business after your own wisdom. I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently, convey the business as I shall find 11 means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects. Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason, and the bond cracked between son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the beast of our time: machine, hollowness, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us discreetly to our graves. — Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully. — And the noble and true-hearted Kent banished! his offence, honesty. — 'T is strange.

Edm. This is the excellent fornicity of the world, that, when we are sick in fortune, (often the surfeit of our own behaviour) we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity; fools, by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and treachers, by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence, and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on. An admirable evasion of wheare-master, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of stars! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail, and my nativity was under ura major; so that, it follows, I am rough and lecherous. — Tut! I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing.

Enter Edgar.

and pat he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy: my eye is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam. — O! these eclipses do portend these divisions. Fa, sol, la, mi.

Edig. How now, brother Edmund! What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you buoy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed unhappily, as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolution of ancient amities; divisions in state; menaces and maladies against king and nobles; needless disaffiances, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come; when saw you my father last?

Edg. The night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word, or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself, wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would sorely alay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have acontinent forbearance, till the speed of his rage go slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fittingly bring you to hear my lord speak. Pray you, go: there's my key. If you do stir abroad, God save you.

Edm. Armed, brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you: I have told you what I have seen and heard: but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it. Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business. — (Exit Edgar.)

A credulous father, and a brother noble, Whose nature is so far from doing harms, That he suspects none, on whose foolish honesty My practice ride easy. — I see the business. — Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit: All with me's most, that I can fashion fit. — (Exit)

SCENE III. — A Room in the Duke of Albayn's Palace.

Enter Goneril, and Oswald her Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for choking of his fool?

Osw. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me: every hour He flashes into one gross crime or other. That sets us all at odds; I'll not endure it. His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us On every trifle. — When he returns from hunting, I will not speak with him; say, I am sick: If you come slack of former services, You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer. —

Osw. He's coming, madam; I hear him.

[Horncalls.]

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please. You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question: If he distaste it, let him to my sister, Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one, Not to be over-rul'd. Idle old man, That still would manage those authorities. That he hath given away! — Now, by my life, Old fools are babes again; and must be us'd With checks as flatteries; when they are seen absurd. Remember what I have said. —

Osw. Well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you. What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so: I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall. That I may speak. — I'll write straight to my sister. To hold my course. — Prepare for dinner. — (Exeunt.)

SCENE IV. — A Hall in the Same.

Enter Kent, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accounts borrow, That can my speech diffuse, my good intent May carry through itself to that full issue For which I raze'd my likeness. — Now, banish'd Kent. If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemned, (So may it come !!!!) thy master, whom thou lov'st, Shall find thee full of labours.

[Horncalls.]

Lear. What doth thou profess? What wouldst thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem: to serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise, and to learn little by many judgment; to fight when I cannot choose, and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?
Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou? Kent. Service.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow? Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that? Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do? Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou? Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing: nor so old, to date on her for any thing: I have your grace by my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner! ho! dinner!—Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither.

Enter Oswald.

You, you sirrah, where's my daughter? One. So please you,—[Exit. Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clodpole back. [Exit Knight.]—Where's my fool, ho?—I think the world's asleep.—[Re-enter Knight.] How now, where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I called him?

Knight. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not! Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is: out, to my judgment, your highness is not entertained with that ceremonious affectation as you were wont: here's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well as the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! sayest thou so? Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent, when I think our highness wronged.

Lear. Thou but rememberest me of mine own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness: I will look farther into 't.—But where's my fool?

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, r. the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.—Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—o you, call hither my fool.—

[Re-enter Oswald.]

Lear. My lady's father? my lord's knave: you hosen dog! you slave! you cur! Osw. I am none of these, my lord: I beseech your pardon.

Lear. Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal? [Striking him.]

One. I'll not be stricken, my lord.

Kent. Not tripped neither, you base foot-ball player. [Tripping up his heels.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise; away! I'll teach you differences: away, away! If you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry; but away! Go to: have you wisdom? so.

[Pushes Oswald out.

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest in thy service. [Giving Kent money.

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too:—here's my coxcomb. [Giving Kent his Cap.

Lear. How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou? Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

Lear. Why, my boy? Fool. Why? For taking one's part that's out of favour.—Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: there, take my coxcomb. Why, this fellow has banished two on 's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow I him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb.—How now, nunce! Would I had two coxcombs, and two daughters! Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my coxcomb myself. There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth 's a dog must to kennel: he must be whipped out, when the lady brach' may stand by the fire and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me.

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nunce.—Have more than thou showest, Speak less than thou knowest, Lend less than thou owest, Ride more than thou goest, Learn more than thou懂得st, Set less than thou throwest, Leave thy drink and thy whore, And keep in-a-door, And thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score.

Lear. This is nothing, fool.

Fool. Then, 't is like the breath of an unfeod'd lawyer: you gave me nothing for 't. Can you make no use of nothing, nunce?

Lear. Why, no boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. Prythee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to: he will not believe a fool.

Lear. A bitter fool!

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet one?

Lear. No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord, that counsell'd thee To give away thy land, Come place him here by me; Do thou for him stand: The sweet and bitter fool Will presently appear; The one in motley here, The other found out there.

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

KING LEAR.

ACT I.

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away, that thou want born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, 'tis truth; lords and great men will not let me, if I had a monopoly out, they would have part v'n, and loads too: they will not let me have all fool to myself, they'll be snatching.—Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou hastore thine ass on thy back o'er the road; then thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipped that first finds it so.

Fools had ne'er less grace i' a year; [Singing. For wise men are grown foppish; And well may fear their wits to wear, Their manners are so apish. Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mouth; for when thou gavest them the rod and putst at them, they turn their breeches;

Then they for sudden joy did weep, [Singing. And I for sorrow sung, That such a king should play bo-peep, And go the fools among.

Pr'ythee, nuncle, keep a school-master that can teach thy fool to lie: I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipped. Fool. An I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are? They'll have me whipped for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipped for lying; and sometimes I am whipped for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast par'd thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing i' the middle. Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter Goneril.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet on? Methinks, you are too much of late i' the frown.

Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure. I am better than thou art now: I am a fool; thou art nothin'.—Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue! so your face [To Goneril.] bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum:

He that keeps nor crust nor crum, [Singing. Weary of all. shall want some.

That's a shealed peacod.

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licens'd fool, But other of your insolent retain

Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth In rank, and not to be endured, riots. Sir, I had thought, by making this well known unto-you, To have found a safe redress. but now grow fearful, By what yourself too late have spoken and done, That you protect this course, and put it on. By your own appetite you stink, and should hear, the fault Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep, Which, in the tender of a wholesome weal, Might in their working do you that offence, Which else were shame, that then necessity Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For you know, nuncle, The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long, That it had its head bit off by its young. So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. I would, you would make use of your god wisdom, Whereof I know you are fraught, and put away These dispositions, which of late transform you From what you rightly are.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse?—Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Does any here know me?—Why this is not Lear: does Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where is his eyes? Either his notion weakens, or his discretion are letherargized.—Sleeping or waking?—Ha! sure:—not so.—Who is it that can tell me who I am?—Lear's shadow? I would learn that; for by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.

Fool. Which they will make an obdient father.

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?— Gon. This admiration, sir, is much o' the favor Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you To understand my purposes aright, As you are old and reverend, should be wise. Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires: Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold, That this our court, infected with their manners, Shows like a riotous inn: epicurism and lust Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel, Than a great'd palace. The shame itself doth speak For instant remedy: be, then, desir'd By her, that else will take the thing she begs, A little to disquintify your train; And the remainder, that shall still depend, To be such men as may besort your age, Which know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils—

Saddle my horses: call my train together.— Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee: Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. Not to strike my people; and your disorder ruffle Make servants of their betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Woe, that too late repenteth,—O, sir! [To Albany.] are you come? Is it your will?—Speak, sir.—Prepare my horses— Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend, More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child, Than the sea-monster!—

Pray, sir, be patient.

Lear. Detected kite! thou liest: [To Goneril.] My train are men of choice and rarest parts, That all particulars of duty know, And in the most exact regard support The worship of their name. O, most small fault! How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show, Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature From the fix'd place, drew from my heart all love, And added to the call O Lear, Lear, Lear! Best at this gate, that let thy folly in. [Striking him.] And thy dear judgment out!—Go, go, my people.

Alb. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant Of what hath mov'd you.

Lear. It may be so, my lord— 1

KING LEAR.

When I have show'd th' unfitness,—how now, Oswald!" Re-enter Oswald.

What, have you writ that letter to my sister?
Osw. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse: Inform her full of my particular fear; And thereto add such reasons of your own, As may compact it more. Get you gone, And hasten your return. [Exit Osw.] No, no, my lord, This milky gentleness, and course of yours, Though I condemn it not, yet, under pardon, You are much more attach'd for want of wisdom, Than praise'd for harmful mildness.

Alb. How far your eyes may pierce, I cannot tell: Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gon. Nay, then—

Alb. Well, well; the event. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Court before the Same.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these letters. Acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know, than comes from her demand out of the letter. If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there before you.

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter. [Exit.

Fool. If a man's brains were in's heels, were't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then, I pr'ythee, be merry; thy wit shall not go alip-shod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see, thy other daughter will use thee kindly; for though she's as like this, as a crab is like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. What canst tell, boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Canst thou tell why one's nose stands i' the middle on's face?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep one's eyes of either side's nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong.—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case. Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!—

Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight?

Fool. Yes, indeed. Thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take it again perforce!—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou shouldst not have been old before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven! Keep me in temper: I would not be mad!——

"Go, go, my people!": in quarto. 2 more of it: in folio. The quarto add: "Thou shalt, I warrant thee."

"in fury": not in the same, nor so more: in quarto. 4 This and the next two speeches to "how now." are not in quarto. 5 The quarto add: Want Of id ha! 6 at last: in folio. 7 I can what: in quarto.
Enter Gentleman.
How now! Are the horses ready?
Gent. Ready, my lord.
Lear. Come, boy.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Court within the Castle of the Earl of GLOSTER.

Enter EDMUND and CURAN, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.
Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?
Cur. Nay, I know not. You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-bussing arguments.

Edm. Not I: pray you, what are they?
Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward,
'twixt the dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.
Cur. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir.

Edm. The duke be here to-night? The better!
Best!

This weaves itself perforce into my business.
My father hath set guard to take my brother;
And I have one thing, of a queasy question,
Which I must act.—Briefness, and fortune, work !—
Brother, a word;—descend.—brother, I say!

Edg. I am sure on 't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming.—Pardon me;
In cunning, I must draw my sword upon you:
Draw: seem to defend yourself. Now 'quoth you well.
Yield:—come before my father.—Light, ho! here!—
Fly, brother;—Torches! torches!—So, farewell.—

[Exit EDGAR.

Edm. Wise blood drawn on me would beget opinion

Wounds his arm.

Of my more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport.—Father! father! Stop, Stop! No help?

Enter GLOSTER, and SERVANTS with TORCHES.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
'To stand auspicious mistress.

Glo. But where is he?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund?

Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—[Exit Serv.]

By no means,—what?

---

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship.
But that I told him, the revenging gods
"Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;
Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father;—sir, in fine
Seeing how loathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,
With his prepared sword he charged home
My unprovided body, lance'd mine arm.
But whether he saw my best alarum'd spirit,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glo. Let him fly far:
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found, dispatch'd.—The noble duke my master,
My worthy arch' and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he, which finds him, shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous coward to the stake;
He, that conceals him, death.

Edm. When I disaudied him from his intent,
And found him right to do it, with curtis speech
I threaten'd to discover him: he replied,
"Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the repulse
Of any trust, virtue, or worth, in thee
Make thy words faithfull'd? No: what I should say,
(As this I would; although thou didst produce
My very character) I 'd turn it all
To thy sugestion, plot, and damned practice:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spur's
To make thee seek it."

Glo. Strong' and fastest'd villain
Would he deny his letter?—I never got him.

[Tucket within.

Hark! the duke's trumpets. I know not why they comes.

All ports I 'll bar: the villain shall not 'scape;
The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and ATTENDANTS.

Cor. How now, my noble friend! since I am hither,
(Which I can call but now) I have heard strange serv.'

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short:
Which can pursue th' offender. How dost, my lord?

Glo. O, madam! my old heart is crack'd, it's creak.
Reg. What! did my father's godson seek your is?
He whom my father nam'd? your heir, your Edgar?

Glo. O, lady, lady! shame would have it hid.

Reg. Was he? companion with the riotous knight
That tend upon my father?
SCENE II.

KING LEAR.

Glo. I know not, madam: 'tis too bad, too bad.—
Edm. Yes, madam, yes;² he was of that consort.
Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill-affected:
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have this expense and waste of his revenues.
I have this present evening from my sister,
 Been well inform'd of 'em; and with such caution,
That if they come to sojourn at my house,
'I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.—
Edmund. I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like office.

Glo. 'T was my duty, sir.

Glo. He did bewray² his practice: and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glo. Ay, my good lord, he is.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,
Low in my strength you please.—As for you, Edmund,
Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours:
Vantages of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you.
Reg. Thus out of season, threading dark-eyed night.
Occasions, noble Gloster, of some poise,³
Wherein we must have use of your advice.
But her father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
If differences, which I best thought fit
To answer from our home: the several messengers
From hence attend despatch. Our good old friend,
Ay, if he forts to our bosom, and bestow
Our needful counsel to our business,²
Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you, madam.
Four graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before Gloster's Castle.

Enter Kent and Oswald, severally.

Osw. Good dawning to thee, friend: art of this house?

Kent. Ay.

Osw. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I' th' mire.

Osw. Pr'ythee, if thou love me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Osw. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Finabury² pinfold, I would Take thee care for me.

Osw. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Osw. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knife, a rascal, an easter of broken meat;
Base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-
Fluffy, worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd, action-taking knave, a whoreson, glass-gazing, supererviceable, finical rogue; one-truuck-inheriting slave;
That wouldst be a bawd, in way of good service,
And art nothing but the composition of a knave, begner, coward, pandar, and the son and heir of a mongrel
one whom I will beat into combersome wisheous,
I thouestienest the least syllable of thy addition.

Osw. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee.

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny
Thou knowest me. Is it two days since I tripped up
Thy heels, and beat thee, before the king? Draw, you
Rogue; for, though it be night, yet the moon shines:
I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you. [Drawing
His Sword. Draw, you whoreson, curiously barber-monger, draw.

Osw. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with letters
Against the king, and take Vanity, the puppet's² part,
Against the royalty of her father. Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks:—draw, you rascal;
come your ways.

Osw. Help, ho! murder! help!

Kent. Strike, you slave: stand, rogue, stand;
You naught slave, strike. [Beating him.

Osw. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, EDMUND, and Servants.

Edm. How now! What's the matter? Part.²

Kent. With you, good man boy, if you please: come,
I'll flesh you; come on, young master.

Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?
Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives.

Kent. He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?
Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.
Corn. What is your difference? speak.

Osw. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestirred your valour.
You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee: a tailor
Made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?
Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir: a stone-cutter, or a painter, could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours² at the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Osw. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have
At suit of his grey beard,—[spar'd
Kent. Thou, whoreson zed? thou, unnecessary letter?
—I'm your lord, if you will give me leave, I will treat
This unboiled villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a
Jakes with him.—Spare my grey beard, you wagsail?
Corn. Peace, sirrah!

Kent. You beastly knave, know you no reverence?
Kent. Yes, sir; but anger hath a privilege.
Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword
Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain
Which are too intrinsical² t'unloose; smooth every passion
That in the natures of their lords rebel;
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods:
Renes⁵ affam, and turn their haleyon² beaks
With every gale, and vary of their masters;
And knowing nought, like dogs, but following.—
A plague upon your episcopal visage!
Smile at my speeches, as I were a fool?
Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive ye eckling home to Camelot.⁶

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave.

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offence?
KING LEAR.

ACT IV.

Kent. His countenance likes me not.
Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, nor his, nor hers.
Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain:
I have seen better faces in my time,
Than stand on any shoulders that I see
Before me at this instant.
Corn. This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature: he cannot flatter, he;
An honest mind and plain,—he must speak truth:
An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely.
Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under th' allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreak of radiant fire,
On sickness Phæbus' front,—
Corn. What mean'st by this?
Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discom-commend so much. I know sir, I am no flatterer: he that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it.
Corn. What was the offence you gave him?
Osw. I never gave him any.
It pleas'd the king, his master, very late,
To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
When he, compact, and flattering his displeasure,
Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subd'd;
And, in the fleemish of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.
Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards,
But Ajax is their foil.
Corn. Fetch forth the stocks!
You* stubborn ancient knife, you reverence bragget,
We'll teach you—
Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn.
Call not your stocks for me; I serve the king,
On whose employment I am sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.
Kent. Fetch forth the stocks!
As I have life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.
Reg. Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night too.
Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,
You should not use me so.
Reg. Sir, being his knife, I will.
[Stocks brought out.
Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
Our sister speaks of. —Come, bring away the stocks.
Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so.
His fault is much, and the good king his master,
Will check him for't: your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as bastet and contemned'st wretches,
For pillerings and most common trespasses,
Are punish'd with. The king must take it ill,
That he, so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrain'd.
Corn. I'll answer that.
Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,
To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted,
For following her affairs.—Put in his legs.—
[Kent is set in the Stocks.
Come, my lord, away.
[Exit Regan and Cornwall.
Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd, nor stopp'd: 'tis I entreat for thee.
Kent. Pray, do not, sir. I have watch'd, and trave-l'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I 'll whistle:
A good man's fortune may grow out at heels.
Give you good morrow!
Glo. The duke's to blame in this: 'twill be ill taken.
[Exit.
Kent. Good king, that must approve the comm's saw!—
Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun.
Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may
Peruse this letter.—Nothing almost sees miracles,1
But misery:—I know, 'tis from Cordelia;
Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
Of my obscured course: and shall find time
From this enormous state,—seeking to give Losses their remedies.—All weary and o'er-watch'd.
Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging. Fortune, good night;
Smile once more; turn thy wheel!
[He sleeps.

SCENE III.—A Part of the Heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place,
That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking While I may 'escape,
I will preserve myself; and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape,
That ever penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to beast: my face I 'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots,
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds, and persecutions of the sky.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars,2 who, with roaring voices.
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary:
And with this horrible object, from low farms,3
Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes and mills,
Sometime with lunatic buns, sometime with prayers.
Enforce their charity.—Poor Turlygood! poor Tom!4
That's something yet.—Edgar I nothing am.

SCENE IV.—Before GLOSTER’S CASTLE.

Enter LEAR, Fool, and a Gentleman.

LEAR. ’T is strange that they should so depart from home, and not send back my messenger.

GENT. As I learn’d, The night before there was no purpose in them Of this remove.

KENT. Hail to thee, noble master! [Waking.

LEAR. Ha! What! thou this shame thy pastime? KENT. No, my lord. FOOL. Ha! ha! look; he wears cruel garters. Horses are tied by the head; dogs, and bears, by the neck; monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs. When a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden netherstocks.

LEAR. What’s he, that hath so much thy place mistook, To set thee here? KENT. It is both he and she; Your son and daughter.

LEAR. No, KENT. Yes. LEAR. No, I say. KENT. I say, yea. LLEAR. No, no; they would not. KENT. Yes, they have. LLEAR. By Jupiter, I swear no. KENT. By Juno, I swear, ay.

LEAR. They durst not do’t; they could not, would not do’t: ’t is worse than murder, To do upon respect such violent outrage. Resolve me with all modest haste which way Thou mightst deserve, or they impose, this usage, coming from us.

KENT. My lord, when at their home I did command your highness’ letters to them; Ere I was risen from the place that show’d My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post, Slew’d in his haste, half-breathless, panting forth From Goneril, his mistress, salutation; Deliver’d letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read: on whose contents, They summon’d up their meiny, straight took horse; Commanded me to follow, and attend The pleasure of their answer; gave me cold looks; And meeting here the other messenger, Whose welcome, I perceive’d, had poison’d mine, Being the very fellow which of late Expell’d so saucily against your highness) Having more man than wit about me, drew: He rais’d the house with loud and coward cries. Our son and daughter found this trespass worth The shame which here it suffers.

FOOL. Winter’s not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way. Fathers, that wear rags, Do make their children blind; But fathers, that bear bags, Shall see their children kind. Fortune, that arrant whore, Ne’er turns the key to the poor.— But, for all this, it follows Thou shalt have as many dolours

For thy daughters dear, As thou canst tell in a year.* Lear, 0, how this mother swells up toward my heart! Hysterica passio! down, thou climbing sorrow, Thy element ’s below.—Where is this daughter? KENT. With the earl, sir; here, within. LLEAR. Follow me not. [Exit GENT. Made you no more offence than what you speak of? KENT. None. How chance the king comes with so small a train? FOOL. An thou hast been set i’ the stocks for that question, thou hast had well devis’d it. KENT. Why, fool? FOOL. We’ll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there ‘s no labouring i’ the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there’s not a nose among twenty but can smell him that’s stinking. Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knives follow it, since a fool gives it.

That sir. which serves and seeks for gain. And follows but for form, Will pack when it begins to rain, And leave thee in the storm. But I will tarry; the fool will stay, And let the wise man fly: The fool turns knave; the knave runs away, The knave no fool, perdy.

KENT. Where learnt you this, fool? FOOL. Not i’ the stocks, fool. Re-enter LEAR with GLOSTER.

LEAR. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? They are weary? They have travell’d hard to-night? More fetches, The images of revolt and flying off. Fetch me a better answer.

GLO. My dear lord, You know the fiery quality of the duke; How unremovable and fix’d is In his own course.

LEAR. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!— Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloster, Gloster, I’d speak with the duke of Cornwall and his wife.

GLO. Well, my good lord, I have inform’d them so.* Lear. Inform’d them! Dost thou understand me, man? GLO. Ay, my good lord. LEAR. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father Would with his daughter speak, commands her service: Are they inform’d of this? My breath and blood!— Fiery?* the fiery duke?—Tell the hot duke, that* No, but not yet:—may be, he is not well: Infamy doth still neglect all offices, Whereunto our health is bound: we are not ourselves, When nature, being oppress’d, commands the mind To suffer with the body. I’ll forbear; And am fallen out with my more headier will, To take the indispos’d and sickly fit For the sound man.—Death on my state! wherefore [Pointing to KENT. Should he sit here? This act persuades me,

ACT II.

That remotion of the duke and her servant
Is practice only. Give me my servant forth.
Go, tell the duke and ’s wife, I’d speak with them,
Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,
Or, if their chamber door I’ll beat the drum,
Till it cry — ’Sleep to death.’

Glo. I would have all well betwixt you. [Exit. Lear. O me! my heart, my rising heart! — but, down.

Fool. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cook-doy did to the eels, when she put them into the paste alive; she knapp’d them o’ the coxcombs with a stick, and cried, “Down, wantons, down!” ’twas her brother, that in pure kindness to his horse butter’d his hay.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and Servants. Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace! [KENT is set at liberty. Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason I have to think so: if thou shouldst not be glad,
I would divorce thee from thy mother’s tomb.
Sepulchring an’rless, — O! are you free? [To Kent.
Some other time for that. — Beloved Regan,
Thy sister ’s naught: O Regan! she hath tied Sharp’d-tooth’d unkindness, like a vulture here.

Points to his heart.

I can scarce speak to thee: thou ’lt not believe,
With how deprav’d a quality — O Regan! —
Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience. I have hope,
You less know how to value her desert,
Than she to scant her duty.

Lear. Say, how is that?
Reg. I cannot think, my sister in the least,
Would fail her obligation: if, sir, perchance,
She have restrain’d the riots of your followers,
T is on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O, sir! you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confines; you should be rul’d, and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself. Therefore, I pray you,
That to our sister you do make return:
Say, you have wrong’d her, sir.

Lear. Ask her forgiveness?

Reg. Do you but mark how this becomes the mouth:*
“Dear daughter, I confess that I am old;
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg."

Kneeling.

That you’ll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.”

Reg. Good sir, no more: these are unsightly tricks.
Return you to your sister.

Lear. Never, Regan. [Rising.

She hath abated me of half my train;
Look’d black upon me; struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart.—
All the stord vengeances of heaven fall
On her ungrateful top! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!

Corn. Fie, sir, fie!

Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her sorrowful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You famish’d fosc, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast* her pride!

Reg. O the blest gods! So will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on.

Lear. No, Regan; thou shalt never have my curse:

Thy tender-hearted* nature shall not give
Thee o’er to harshness: her eyes are farse; but thine
Do comfort, and not burn. “Tis not in thee to Grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To be the best of bow’d, words, to scant my sizes;”
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in: thou better know’st
The offices of nature, bound of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude;
Thy half o’ the kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow’d.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.

Lear. Who put my man i’ the stocks? [Trumpet within. Corn. What trumpet’s that?

Enter Osric.

Reg. I know it; my sister’s: this approves her letter.
That she would soon be here. — Is your lady come?
Lear. This is a slave, whose easy borrow’d pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.—
Out, varlet, from my sight!

Corn. What means your grace?

Lear. Who stock’d my servant? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didst not know on’t. — Who comes here? O heavens!

Enter Gonertil.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
 Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause; send down, and take my part—
Art not ashamed to look upon this beard?—

To Gonertil.

O Regan! wilt thou take her by the hand?
Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?
All’s not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Lear. O sides! you are too tough:
Will you yet hold? How came my man i’ the stocks?
Corn. I set him there, sir; but his own disorders
Deserved much less advancement.

Lear. You! did you?

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.
If, till the expiration of your youth,
You will return and sojourn with my sister.
Dismissing half your train, come then to me:
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss’d?
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o’ the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and howl!*
Necessity’s sharp pinch! — Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took Youngest born, I could as well be brought
To kneel his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg
To keep base life afoot.—Return with her?
Peruse me rather to be slave and sumpter
To this detested groom.

[Looking at Osric.

Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I pray thee, daughter, do not make me mad
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell.
We’ll no more meet, no more see one another:
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter:
Or, rather, a disease that’s* in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine: thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle.
In my corrupted blood. But I’ll not chide thee;

SCENE L

KING LEAR.

Let shame come when it will, I do not call it: I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot, nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Men, when thou canst; be better, at thy leisure: I can be patient; I can stay with Regan, and my hundred knights. Reg. Not altogether so: I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided For your fit welcome. Give ear, sir, to my sister; For those that mingle reason with their passion, Must be content to think you old, and so— But she knows what she does. Lear. Is this well spoken? Reg. I dare avouch it, sir. What! fifty followers? Is it not well? What should you need of more? Yea, or so many, sith that both charge and danger Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house, Should many people, under two commands, Hold amity? 'Tis hard: almost impossible. [since Gos. Why might not you, my lord, receive attend-From those that she calls servants, or from mine? Reg. Why, what say my lord? If then they chanced to ‘acknowledge, We could control them. If you will come to me, For now I spy a danger' I entreat you To bring but five and twenty: to no more Will I give place, or notice. Lear. I gave you all. Reg. And in good time you gave it. Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries, but kept a reservation to be follow'd With such a number. What! must I come to you With five and twenty? Regan, said you so? Reg. And speak 't again, my lord; no more with me. Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well-favoured, When others are more wicked; not being the worst kinds in some rank of praise.—I'll go with thee. [To GONERIL. By fifty yet doth double five and twenty, The thou art twice her love. Gos. Hear me, my lord. What need you five and twenty, ten, or five; o follow in a house, where twice so many have a command to tend you? Reg. What needs one? Lear. O! reason not the need; our basest beggars Are in the poorest state superfluous: illow not nature more than nature needs, Ian's life is cheap as beast's. Thou art a lady; If only to go warm were gorgeous, Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st, Which scarcely keeps thee warm. But, for true need— You heavens, give me but patience, patience I need! You see me here, you gods, a poor old man, As full of grief as age; wretched in both: If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger. O! let not women's weapons, water-drops, Stain my man's cheeks.—No, you unnatural hags, I will have such revenges on you both, That all the world shall—I will do such things:— What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be The terrors of the earth. You think, I'll weep; No, I'll not weep:—

I have full cause of weeping: but this heart Shall break into a hundred thousand flaps, Or ere I'll weep.—O, fool! I shall go mad. [Exit Lear, Gloster, Kent, and Fool. Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm. Reg. This house is little: the old man and's people Cannot be well bestow'd. Gos. 'Tis his own blame hath put himself from reas; He must needs taste his folly. Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly, But not one follower. Gos. So am I purpose'd. Where is my lord of Gloster?

Re-enter GLOSTER. Corn. Follow'd the old man forth.—He is return'd. Glo. The king is in high rage. Corn. Whither is he going? Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither. Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself. Gos. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay. Glo. Alack! the night comes on, and the bleak winds Do sorely ruffle: for many miles about There's scarce a bush. Reg. O sir! to wilful men, The injuries that they themselves procure Must be their schoolmasters. Shut up your doors: He is attended with a desperate train, And what they may incense him to, being apt To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear. Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild night My Regan counsels well.—Come out o' the storm. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Heath.

Storm, with Thunder and Lightning. Enter KENT and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather? Gent. One minded, like the weather, most unequally. Kent. I know you. Where's the king? Gent. Contending with the freiful elements; da the wind blow the earth into the sea, 'swell the curated waters 'bove the main, set things might change or cease': tears his white hair, hich the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage, uch in their fury, and make nothing of:—

Strives in his little world of man to out-sorn The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain. This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couck The lion and the belly-pinched wolf Keep their fur dry, unbombed he runs, And bids what will take all. Kent. But who is with him? Gent. None but the fool, who labours to outjest His heart-struck injuries. Kent. Sir, I do know you, And dare, upon the warrant of my note, Command a dear thing to you. There is division, Although as yet the face of it be cover'd

With mutual cunning; 'twixt Albany and Cornwall; 1
Who have (as who have not, that their great stars Thron'd and set high?) servants, who seem no less,
Which are to France the spies and spectatours, 2
Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,
Either in snuffs 3 and packings of the dukes,
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
Against the old kind king; or something deeper,
Whereof, perchance, these are but flourishing: 4
But, true it is, from France there comes a power
Into this scatter'd kingdom; who already,
Wise in our negligence, have secret feet
In some of our best ports, and are at present
To show their open banner.—Now to you:
If on my credit you dare build so far
To make you, speed to Dover, you shall find
Some that will thank you, making just report
Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow
The king hath cause to plain.
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
And from some knowledge and assurance offer
This hope to you.
Gent. I will talk farther with you.
Kent.
For confirmation that I am much more
Than my out wall, open this purse, and take
What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia,
(as fear not but you shall) show her this ring,
And she will tell you who she is fellow is
That yet you do not know. [Thunder.] Fie on this storm!
I will go seek the king.
Kent. Give me your hand. Have you no more to say? 6
Kent. Few words, but, to effect, more than all yet;
That, when we have found the king, in which your pain
That way, I'll this, he that first lights on him,
Holla the other. —[Exit severally.
SCENE II.—Another Part of the Heath. Storm continues.

Enter Lear and Fool.

Lear. Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks! rage! blow!
You cataracts and hurricanoes spout!
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!
You sulphurous and thoughtless executioners,
Vaunt-couriers to oak-cleaving thunder-bolts,
Singe my white head! and thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity of the world:
Crack nature's moulds, all germs spilt at once,
That make ingrateful man!
Fool. O nuncle, court holy-water 7 in a dry house
Is better than this rain-water out of door. Good nuncle,
In, and ask thy daughter's blessing: here's a night
Pities neither wise men nor fools. —[Thunder.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyfull! Spit, fire! spout, rain!
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,
You owe me no subscription: then, let fall
Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man.
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That will 8 with two pernicious daughters join;
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this! O ! O ! 'tis foul!
Fool. He hath a house to put 'head in has a good head-piece.

The cool-piece that will house,
Before the head has any,
The head and shall house so,
— So beggars marry many.
The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make,
Shall of 9 a corn cry woed,
And turn his sleepe to wake.
—For there was never yet fair woman, but she made
Mouths in a glass. 13

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience; 11
I will say nothing.
Kent. Who's there?
Fool. Marry, here's a grace, and a cool-piece; that's a wise man, and a fool.
Kent. Alas, sir! are you here? Things that love night,
Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies
Gallow 11 the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Since I was man,
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard; man's nature cannot cury
Th' affliction, nor the fear. 13

Lear. Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undisguised crimes,
Whipp'd of justice: hide thee, thou bloody hand;
Thou perjur'd, and thou simuler 16 of virtue
That art incessant; castiff, to pieces shake,
That under covert and convenient seeming
Hast practis'd on man's life: close pent-up guilt,
Rive your concealing continents, 18 and cry
These dreadful summoners grace.—I am a man,
More sinn'd against, than sinning.
Kent.

Lear. Alack! bare-headed,
Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest
Repose you there, while I to this hard house,
(More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd,) 14
Which even but now, demanding after you,
Denied me to come in, return, and force
Their scanty courtesy.

Lear. My wise begin to turn.—
Come on, my boy. How doest, my boy? 2 Art cold?
I am cold myself.—Where is this straw my fellow?
The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Come, your love.
Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. He that has a little way is— 5 [Sleep.

With weaht, ho, the wind and the rain—
Must make content with his fortunes fit;
For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to the hovel.

[Exit Lear and Kent.

Fool. 13 This is a brave night to cool a counsellor.
I'll speak a prophesy ere I go:
When priests are more in word than matter;
When brewers mar their malt with water;
When nobles are their tailors' tutors;
No heretics burn'd, but wenchers suitors:
When every case in law is right;
No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;
When slanders do not live in tongues,

SCENE III.—A Room in GLOSTER’s Castle.

Enter Gloster and Edmund.

Glo. Alack, alack! Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing. When I desired their leave that I might pay them, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing. There is division between the dukes, and a worse matter than that. I have received a letter this night;—it is dangerous to be spoken—I have locked the letter in my closet. These injuries the king now bears will be revenged home; there is part of a power already foisted: we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privately relieve him: go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king, my old master, must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund: pray you, be careful.

[Exit.]

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke instantly know; and of that letter too. This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses; no less than all: The younger rises, when the old doth fall.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Part of the Heath, with a Holm.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, enter: The tyranny of the open night’s too rough For nature to endure.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart?

Kent. I’d rather break mine own. Good my lord, enter.

Lear. Thou think’st ’tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin: so ’tis to thee;

But where the greater malady is fix’d,
The lesser is scarce felt. Thou ’dst shun a bear;

But if thy flight lay toward the roaring sea,
Thou ’dst meet the bear in the mouth. When the mind’s free,
The body is delicate: the tempest in my mind
Both from my senses take all feeling else, Jove what beats there.—Pilial ingratitude! Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand, For lifting food to it?—But I will punish home,—Go, I will weep no more.—In such a night

To shut me out!—Pour on;—I will endure:—

As such a night as this! O Regan! Goneril! Our old kind father, whose frank heart gave us all.—

In that way madness live; let me shun that;

And more of that.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Pr’ythee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease:

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder

On things which hurt me more.—But I’ll go in:

In, boy; go first.—[To the Fool.] You houseless poverty,—

Nay, get thee in. I’ll pray, and then I’ll sleep.—[Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe’er you are,

That hide the pelting of this pitiless storm,

How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,

Your loop’d and window’d raggedness, defend you From seasons such as these? O! I have ta’en Too little care of this. Take physic, pomp; Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,

That thou may’st shake the superflux to them,

And show the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom! [The Fool runs out from the Holm.]

Fool. Come not in here, uncle; here’s a spirit. Help me! help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who’s there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit: he says his name’s poor Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there? I’m the Come forth.

[Strikes.]

Enter Edgar, disguised as a Madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me!—

“Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.”—

Humph! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through swath[14] and whirlpool, over bog and quagmire; and hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inch bridges, to cowse his own shadow for a traitor.—Bless thy five wits! Tom’s a-cold.—O! do de, do de, do de—Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking[15]. Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes.—There could I have him now,—and there, and there,—and there again, and there.

[Strikes.]

Lear. What! have his daughters brought him to this pass?— Couldst thou save nothing? Didst thou give them all?

Fool. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all shamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues, that in the pendulous air Hang fated o’er men’s faults, light on thy daughters!

Kent. ‘He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued nature

To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.— Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers Should have thus little mercy of their flesh? Judicial punishment! ’twas this flesh begot Those pelican daughters.

Edg. Pilliowick sat on Pilliowick-hill:—

Halloo, halloo, too, too! Fodd. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o’ the foul fiend. Obey thy parents; keep thy word; do justice; swear not; commit not with man’s sworn spouse: set not thy sweet heart on proud array. Tom’s a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?
Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that cursed my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it. Wine loved I deeply; dice dearly; and in woman, out-paramour'd the Turk: false of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the cracking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betry thy poor heart to woman: keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend."—Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind;" says suum mun, ha nonny. Dolphin my boy, my boy; sessa!" let him trot by.

[Storm still continues.]

Lear. Why, thou better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no bide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume. — Ha! here's three on's are sophisticated: thou art the thing itself: unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art.—Off, off, you lendings. Come; unbatten here.—[Tearing his clothes.]

Fool. Pr'ythee, nuncle, be contented: 'tis a naughty night to swim in.—Now, a little fire in a wide field were like an old leacher's heart; a small spark, all the rest on's body cold.—Look! here comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet: he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the hare and pinch, sacks the eyes, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Saint Withold's footed thrice the cold; He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold; But her alight, And her troth plight, And, a Round thee, witch, a Round thee! Kent. How fares your grace? Enter GLOSTER, with a Torch.

Lear. What's he? Kent. Who's there? What isn't you seek? Glo. What are you there? Your names? Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt, and the water; that, in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallets; swallows the old rat, and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mangle of the standing pool: who is whipped from tything to tything, and stocked, punished, and imprisoned: who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear,—

But mice, and rats, and such small deer, Have been Tom's food for seven long year. Beware my follower.—Peace, Smulkin! peace, thou fiend!

Glo. What! hath your grace no better company? Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman; Mudo he's call'd, and Mahu. Glo. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so vile, That it doth hate what gets it. Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold. Glo. Go in with me. My duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughters' hard commands:

Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you, Yet I have ventur'd to come seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready. Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher.—What is the cause of thunder? Kent. Good my lord, take his offer: go into the house. Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned Thebain. What is your study? Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Lear. Let me ask you one word in private. [They talk apart.]

Kent. Imporhtune him once more to go, my lord, His wits begin t' unsettle.

Glo. Canst thou blame him? His daughters seek his death. —Ah, that good Kent! He said it would be thus, poor banish'd man!—Thou say'st, the king grows mad: I'll tell thee, friend, I am most mad myself. I had a son, Now outlaw'd from my blood: he sought my life, But lately, very late: I lov'd him, friend, No father his son dearser: true to tell thee, The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night's thes!"—

I do beseech thy grace,—

Lear. O! cry you mercy, sir—

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In fellow there, into the hovel: keep the warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him: I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, soothe him; let him take his fellow.

Glo. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian. No words, no words: Glo. Hush!

Edg. "Child Rowland to the dark tower came, His word was still:—Fie, fie, and fum, I smell the blood of a British man." [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in GLOSTER'S Castle.

Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Cor. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his bower.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think:—Cor. I now perceive, it was not altogether my brother's evil disposition made him seek his death: but a provoking merit, set a work by a reprovable base in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I saw repent to be just! This is the letter which he sent of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that these treasons were not, or not I the detector! Cor. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, we have mighty business in hand.

Cor. True, or false, it hath made thee Earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place!
False justice, why hast thou let her 'scape?
Edg. Bless thy five wits.
Kent. O pity!—Sir, where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain?
Edg. [Aside.] My tears begin to take his part so much,
They'll mar my counterfeiting.

Lear. The little dogs and all,
Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.
Edg. Tom will throw his head at them.—Avaunt, you curs!
Be thy mouth or black or white,
Tooth that poisons if it bite;
Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel, grim,
Hound, or spaniel, brach*, or lynx†;
Or bobtail tike*, or trundle-tail,
Tom will make them* weep and wail:
For with throwing thus my head,
Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled.
Do, de, de, de. See, see! Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns.—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.

Lear. Then, let them anatomize Regan, see what breasts about her head.
Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts?—You, sir, [To Edg.]
I entertain you for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments: you will say, they are Persian attire; but let them be changed.
Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile.
Lear. Make no noise, make no noise: draw the curtains.
So, so, so: we'll go to supper: the morning:
so, so, so.

Foot And I'll go* to bed at noon.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Come hither, friend: where is the king my master?
Kent. Here, sir: but trouble him not; his wits are gone.
Glo. Good friend, I pray thee take him in thy arms;
I have o'er-heard a plot of death upon him.
There is a litter ready; lay him in it,
And drive toward Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet
Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master:
If thou shouldst daily half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Take up, take up;
And follow me, that will to some provision
Give thee quick conduct.
Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:—
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses;*
Which, if convenience will not allow,
Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy master;
Thou must not stay behind. [To the Foot.

Glo. Come, come, away.

Edg. When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes.
Who alone suffers, suffers most i' the mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind;
But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erlook,
When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.
How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow:
He cildled, as I father'd!—Tom, away!
Mark the high noises; and thyself bewray,
When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee,
KING LEAR.

ACT III.

SCENE VII.—A Room in GLOSTER’S Castle.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GONERIL, EDMUND, and SERVANTS.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband; show him this letter:—the army of France is landed.—Seek out the traitor’ Gloster. [Exeunt some of the SERVANTS.
Reg. Hang him instantly.
Gon. Pluck out his eyes.
Corn. Leave him to my dispose.—Edmund, keep you our sister company: the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most instiniate preparation: we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister:—farewell, my lord of Gloster.

Enter O对策ALD.

How now! Where’s the king?

Osw. My lord, the Gloster hath convey’d him hence:
Some five or six and thirty of his knights,
Hot questresses after him, met him at gate;
Who, with some other of the lord’s dependants,
Are gone with him towards Dover, where they boast
To have well-armed friends.
Corn. Get horses for your mistress.
Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.
[Exeunt GONERIL, EDMUND, and O对策ALD.
Corn. Edmund, farewell.—Go, seek the traitor
Gloster,
Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.
[Exeunt other SERVANTS.

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice, yet our power
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men May blame, but not control. Who’s there? The traitor?

Re-enter SERVANTS, with GLOSTER.
Reg. Ungrateful fox! ’tis he.
Corn. Bind fast his coward arms.
Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider
You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.
Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.
Reg. Hard, hard.—O filthy traitor!
Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I am none.8
Corn. To this chair bind him.—Villain, thou shalt find—[They bind him: REGAN plucks his beard.
Glo. By the kind gods, ’t is most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard.
Reg. So white, and such a traitor!
Glo. Naughtly lady.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken, and accuse thee. I am your host:
With robbers’ hands my hospitable favours
You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?
Corn. Come, air, what letters had you late from France?
Reg. Be simple-answer’d, for we know the truth.
Corn. And what confederacy have you with the Late footed in the kingdom? [traitors
Reg. To whose hands
Have you sent the lunatic king? Speak.
Glo. I have a letter guessing set down,

Which came from one that ’s of a neutral heart,
And not from one oppo’d.
Corn. Cunning.
Reg. And false.
Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?
Glo. To Dover.
Reg. Wherefore?
To Dover? Wast thou not charg’d at peril—
Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him answer that.
Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.
Reg. Wherefore to Dover?
Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh rashly boastful fangs.
The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur’d, would have buoy’d up,
And quench’d the stalled fires;
Yet, poor old heart, he holp the heavens to rain.4
If wolves had at thy gate how’d that stern time, Thou shouldst have said, “Good porter, turn the key.”
All cruel else subscrib’d: but I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children.
Corn. See it shall thou never.—Fellows, hold the chair.—
Upon these eyes of thine I’ll set my foot.
Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old,
Give me some help!—O cruel! O ye gods!
[They tear out one eye.9
Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.
Corn. If you see, vengeance.10
Serv. Hold your hand, my lord.
I have serv’d you ever since I was a child,
But better service have I never done you,
Than now to bid you hold.
Reg. How now, you dog!
Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,
I’d shake it on this quarrel! What do you mean?
Corn. My villain! [Drains and runs at his Reg. Nay then, come on, and take the chance of anger. [Drains. CORNWALL is wounded.
Reg. Give me thy sword. A pleasant stand up then Serv. O, I am slain!—My lord, you have one eye left
To see some mischief on!—O! [Dies.
Corn. Let it see more, prevent it.—Out, vile jev’y.
Where is thy lustre now? [Tearing out his other eye.15
Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where’s my son
Edmund?
Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act.
Reg. Out, treacherous villain! Thou call’st on him that hates thee: it was he
That made the overtire of thy treasons to us,
Who is too good to pity thee.
Glo. O my folly’s! Then Edgar was abused—
Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!
Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him seek
His way to Dover.—How is’t, my lord? How look you?
Corn. I have receiv’d a hurt. Follow me, lady.—
Turn out that eyeless villain: throw this slave
Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed apace.
Untie me, corn this his hurt. Give me your arm.
[Exit CORNWALL, led by REGAN;—Servants unbind
GLOSTER, and lead him out.14
Serv. I’ll never care what wickedness I do,
If this man comes to good.

SCENE I.—The Heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yea, better thus, unknown to be contemned, Than still contemned and flatter'd. To be worst, The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune, Stands still in espeurance, lives not in fear: The lamentable change is from the best; The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then, Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace: The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst, Owes nothing to thy blasts.—But who comes here?—

Enter Gloster, led by an old Man.

My father, poorly led?—World, world, O world! But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee, Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O my good lord! I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone: Thy comforts can do me no good at all; Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir! you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes: I stumbled when I saw. Full oft 'tis seen, Our wants secure us; and our mere defects Prove our commodities. —Ah! dear son Edgar, The food of thy abused father's wrath, Might I but live to see thee in my touch, I'd say I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now! Who's there? [Aside.] O gods! Who is't can say, "I am at the worst!"

I am worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet: the worst is not

So long as we can say, "This is the worst."

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glo. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman, and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

I' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw, Which made me think a man a worm: my son Came then into my mind, and yet my mind Was then scarce friends with him: I have heard more As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods; [since. They kill us for their sport.

Edg. [Aside.] How should I be?—

Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow, Angering itself and others. —[To him.] Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glo. Then, pr'ythee, get thee gone. If, for my sake,

Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain, I' the way toward Dover, do it for ancient love; And bring some covering for this naked soul, Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir! he is mad.

Glo. 'Tis the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;

Above the rest, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have, Come on 't what will. [Exit.

Glo. Sirrah; naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold. —[Aside.] I cannot daub it farther.

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must. —[To him.] Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and foot-path. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: bless thee, good man's son, from the foul fiend! Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbidittance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; and Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesseth chamber-maids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier: —Heavens, deal so still! Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man, That braves' your ordinance, that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly; So distribution should undo excess, And each man have enough. —Dee thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head Looks fearfully in the confined deep:

Bring me but to the very brim of it, And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear,

With something rich about me; from that place I shall no leading need.

Edg. Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of Albany's Palace.

Enter Goneril and Edmund; Oswald meeting them.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, our mild husband

Not met us on the way.—Now, where's your master?

Osw. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd

I told him of the army that was landed;

He smil'd at it: I told him, you were coming;

His answer was, "The worse!" of Gloster's treachery, And of the loyal service of his son,

When I inform'd him, then he call'd me not,

And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out.

What most he should dislike seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive.

Gon. Then, shall you go no farther. [To Edmund. It is the cowish terror of his spirit,

That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs,
Which tie him to an answer. Our wishes on the way
May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother;
Haste up his musters, and conduct his powers:
I must change arms* at home, and give the distaff
Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant
Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,
If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;
[Giving a chain.
Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air.—
Conceive, and fare thee well.
Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.
Gon. My most dear Gloster! [Exit EDMUND.
O, the difference of man, and man!*
To thee a woman's services are due:
My fool usurps my body.*
One. Madam, here comes my lord. [Exit Oswald.

Enter ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.

Alb. O Goneril!
You are not worth the dust, which the rude wind
Blows in your face.—I fear your disposition:
That nature, which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd* and certified in itself;
She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her material sap, perfuse must wither,
And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more: the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth savour but themselves. What have you done?
Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd?
A father, and a gracious aged man,
Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick,
Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you maddened.
Could my good brother suffer you to do it?
A man, a prince, by him so benefited?
If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
It will come,
Humanity must performe prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep.

Gon. Milk-livered man!* That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs;
Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
Thine honour from thy suffering;* that not know'st,
Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd.*
Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum?
France spreads her banners in our noiseless land;
With placid helm thy slayer begins threats;
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and criest,
"Alack! why does he so?"

Alb. See thyself, devil!
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid, as in woman.

Gon. O vain fool! Alb.* Thou changed and self-cover'd thing, for shame,
B-monster not thy feature. Were it my fitness to let these hands obey my blood,
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: how'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood now! —
Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O, my good lord! the duke of Cornwall's dead,
Slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloster.

Gon. Gloster's eyes!
Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enraged,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead,
But not without that harmful stroke, which since
Hath punish'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
You justicers, that these our fether crimes
So speedily can venge!—But, O poor Gloster!
Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.
This letter, madam, erases a speedy answer; [Giving it.
'T is from your sister.
Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well:
But being widow, and my Gloster with her,
May all the building in* my fancy pleasure
Upon my hateful life. Another way,
The news is not so tart. [To him.] I'll read, and answer. [Exit.
Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?
Mess. Come with my lady hither.
Alb. He is not here.
Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.
Alb. Knows he the wickedness?
Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him.
And quite the house, on purpose that their punishment
Might have the freer course.

Gon. Gloster, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the king,
And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither, friend:
Tell me what more thou knowest.

SCENE III.—The French Camp near Dover.

Enter Kent, and a Gentleman.

Kent. The French Camp near Dover.

Gent. The Marshal of France, Monseur le Fe.
Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?
Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen
Over her passion, who, rebel-like,
Sought o be king o'er her.
Kent. O! then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strove*
Who e'er express her grief least.
You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
Were like a better May: those happy smiles,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thieves,
As pearls from diamonds drop'd.—In brief, sorrow
Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all
Could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question?

KING LEAR.

Therefore great France
My mourning, and important* tears, hath pitied.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.
Soon may I hear, and see him! [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Room in GLOSTER'S Castle.

Enter REGAN and OSWALD.

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth?
Osw. Ay, madam.
Reg. Himself in person there?
Osw. Madam, with much ado
Your sister is the better soldier.
Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?
Osw. No, madam.
Reg. What might import my sister's letter to him?
Osw. I know not, lady.
Reg. 'Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.
It was great ignorance, Glaster's eyes being out,
To let him live: where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despatch
His nighted life; moreover, to desery
The strength o' the enemy.
Osw. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.
Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow: stay with us;
The ways are dangerous.
Osw. I may not, madam;
My lady charg'd my duty in this business.
Reg. Why should she write to Edmund? Migh's not you
Transport her purposes by word? Belike, Something—I know not what.—I'll love thee much;
Let me unseal the letter.
Osw. Madam, I had rather—
Reg. I know your lady does not love her husband,
I am sure of that; and, at her late being here,
She gave strange colliards, and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund. I know, you are of her bosom.
Osw. I, madam?
Reg. I speak in understanding: y'are, I know it;
Therefore, I do advise you, take this note:
My lord is dead: Edmund and I have talk'd,
And more convenient is he for my hand,
Than for your lady's.—You may gather more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this;
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,
I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her:
So, fare you well.
If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.
Osw. Would I could meet him, madam: I would show
What party do I follow.

Reg. Fare thee well, [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Country near Dover.

Enter GLOSTER, and EDGAR dressed like a Peasant.

Glo. When shall I come to the top of that same hill?
Edg. You do climb it up now: look, how we labour.
Glo. Methinks, the ground is even.
Edg. Horribly steep.
Hark! do you hear the sea?
Glo. No, truly.
Edg. Why, then your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes' anguish.
Glo. So may it 'e, indeed.
Methinks, thy voice is alter'd; and thou speak'st

---

* desirous.  important.
in better phrase, and matter, than thou didst.

Edg. Y'are much deceiv'd: in nothing am I chang'd,
But in my garments.

Glo. Methinks, y'are better spoken.

Edg. Come on, sir; here's the place: stand still.—

How fearful,

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
The crowns, and throned, that wing the midway air,
Show scarce so gross as beetles: half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire: dreadful trade!
Methinks, he seems no bigger than his head.
The skerries, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond' tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring surge,
That on 'th unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high.—I'll look no more;
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand; you are now within a foot
Of th' extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse: in it, a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking: fairies, and gods,
Prosper it with thee! Go thou farther off:
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir.

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. Why do I trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo. O, you mighty gods!
This world I do renounce, and in your sights
Shake patiently my great affliction off:
If I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff, and loathed part of nature, should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!—
Now, fellow, fare thee well. [He leaps, and falls along.

Edg. Gone, sir: farewell.

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft: had he been where he thought,
By this had thought been past.—Alive, or dead?
Ho, you sir! friend!—Hear you, sir?—speak!
Thus might he pass indeed;—yet he revives.
What are you, sir?

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Hadst thou been aught but gosamer, feathers
air,
So many fathoms down precipitating,
Thou 'dst shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe,
Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.
Ten maats at each make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell:
Thy life's a miracle. Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn
Look up a height; the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.

Glo. Alack! I have no eyes.—
Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'T was yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm: [Helping him up.
Up:—so;—how is 't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangeness
Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes
Were too full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns whelk'd, and wav'd like the engraved sea:
It was some fiend; therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them homon
Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.

Glo. I do remember now: henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself
"Enough, enough!" and die. That thing you speak of,
I took it for a man; often 'twould say,
"The fiend, the fiend!" he led me to that place.

Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

Enter Lear, fantastically dressed with Straws and Flowers.

The safer sense will ne'er accommodate
His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining;* I am the king himself.

Edg. O, thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.—There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.—Look, look, a mouse. Peace, peace!—this piece of toasted cheese will do.—There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a grant.—Bring up the brown billy.*—O, well-flow'n, bird;
—'tis the clout, 'tis the clout!—hewgh!—Give the word.

Edg. Sweet marjoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goneril!*—with a white beard!—They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say
"ay," and "no," to every thing I said —"Ay" and
"no" too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter, when the thunder would not peace at my bidding, there
I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing;
't is a lie, I am not agua-proof.

Glo. The trick of that voice I do well remember:
Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king:
When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.
I pardon that man's life: what was thy cause?—

Adultery.—

Thou shalt not die: die for adultery? No:

The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly

Does lecher in my sight.

Lear. Let copulation thrive; for Giestor's bastard son
Was kinder to his father, than my daughters
Got 'twixt the lawful sheets.

To't, luxury, pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—

Behold yond' slippery dame, Whose face between her forks presageth snow;
That mimics virtue, and does shake the head
To hear of pleasure's name;

The fitchew, nor the soiled horse, goes to't
With a more riotous appetite.

Down from the waist they are centaurs,
Though women all above:

But to the girls do the gods inherit,

Beneath is all the fiends: there's hell, there's dark—ness, there is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption;—flé, fle, fle! pah; pah! Give me an ounce of cîvet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand! Lear. Let me wipe it first: it smells of mortality.

Glo. A noble piece of nature! This great world Shall so wear out to nought.—Doest thou know me? Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Doest thou squint at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge: mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters sung, I could not see one.

Edg. I would not take this from report; it is, And my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What! with the case of eyes?

Lear. O, ho! are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine ears; see how yond' justice rails upon yond' simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: change places; and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur? There thou mightst behold the great image of authority: a dog's obey'd in office.—Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand! Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back; Thou 8olly lust' to use her in that kind For which thou whippst at her. The usher hang the cozenor. Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear; Robes, and fur'd gowns, hide all.* Plate sin with gold.

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks: Arm it in rays, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll have 'em: Take that of me, my friend, who have the power To see th' accuser's lips; Go, three glass eyes; And, like a sourvy politician, seem To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now, now, now, now!

Pull off my boots: harder, harder; so.

Edg. O, matter and impertinency mix'd; Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloser: Thou must be patient. We came crying hither: Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air We wawl, and cry. I will preach to thee: mark me.

Glo. Alack! alack the day!

Lear. When we are born, we cry that we are come To this great stage of fools.—'T is a good plot.* It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe A troop of horses with felt. I'll put it in proof; And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law, Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter Gentlemen with Attendants.

Gent. O! here he is: lay hand upon him. Sir, Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue! What! a prisoner? I am even The natural fool of fortune. Use me well,

You shall have ransom. Let me have a surgeon, I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing

Lear. No seconds? All myself?

Why, this would make a man, a man of salt, To use his eyes for garden water-pots, Ay, and for laying autumn's dust.*

Gent. Good air.—

Lear. I will die bravely, Like a snug' bridegroom. What! I will be jovial. Come, come; I am a king, my masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in it. Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.

[Exit: Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch, Past speaking in a king!—Thou hast one daughter, Who redeems nature from the general curse Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: what's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward?

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar: every one hears that, Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour, How near's the other army?

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot; the main decy

Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir: that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here,

Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, sir. [Exit Gent.

Edg. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me:

Let not my worse spirit tempt me again To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows;

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,

I'll lead you to some biding.

Glo. Hearty thanks:

The bounty and the benison of heaven

To boot, and boot!

Enter Oswald.

Osw. A proclaimed' prize! Most happy!

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor, Briefly thyself remember:—the sword is out [Drawing That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand

Put strength enough to it. [Edgar interposes.

Ose. Wherefore, bold peasant, Dar' st thou support a publish'd traitor? Hence:

Lost that th' infection of his fortune take

Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Ch'ill not let go, sir, without varther 'casion.

Osw. Let go, slave, or thou diest.

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor Volk pass. And ch'ud ha' been zwaredd' out of my life. I would not ha' been so long as it is by a wort-night. Nay, come not near the old man; keep out, ch' vor'ye, or Ise try whether your costard or my bal- low* be the harder. Ch'ill be plain with you.

Osw. Out, dunghill!
Edg. Ch'ill pick your tooth, sir. Come; no matter for your soins. [They fight; and Edgar strikes him down.
Osw. Slave, thou hast slain me.—Villain, take my purse.

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body.
And give the letters, which thou find'st about me,
To Edmund earl of Gloucester: seek him out
Upon the British party.—O, untimely death! [Dies.
Edg. I know thee well: a serviceable villain;
As dutious to the vices of thy mistresse,
As badness would desire.

Glo. What! is he dead?

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you.
Let's see his pockets: these letters, that he speaks of,
May be my friends.—He's dead; I am only sorry
He had no other death's-man.—Let us see:

Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not:
To know our enemies' minds we rip their hearts,
Their papers is more lawful.

[Reads.] "Let our reciprocal vows be remembered.
You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.
There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror; then, am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol, from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.

"Your (wife, so I would say)
"affectionate servant,
"Gonerril."

O, unextinguish'd blaze of woman's will!
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange, my brother!—Here, in the sands,
The earl I'll rake up, the post unsanctified
Of murderous lechers; and in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke. For him 'tis well,
That of thy death and business I can tell.

Glo. The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenuous feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imaginings, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

[Drum afar off. Edg.

Give me your hand: Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father; I'll bestow you with a friend.] [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—A Tent in the French Camp. Lear on a Bed, asleep; Doctor, Gentleman, and others, attending: Enter Cordelia and Kent.

Cor. O thou good Kent! how shall I live, and work, To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure fail me.
KENT. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'er-paid.
All my intents go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor more clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited: These weeds are memories of those worser hours.
I pray thee, put them off.

KENT. Pardon me, dear madam:
Yet to be known shortens my main* intent:
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be 't so, my good lord.—How does the king? [To the Physician.

Doctor. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O, you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
Th' untun'd and jarring* senses, O, wind up
Of this child-changed father!

Doctor. So please your majesty
That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.
Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed I the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?

Doctor. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep,
We put fresh garments on him.
Kent. Good madam, be by when we do awake him
I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well. [Music.

Doctor. Please you, draw near.—Louder the noise there.

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration, hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princesses:

Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes
Had challenge'd pity of them. Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring* winds?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke.
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch (poor perdu!)
With this thin helm? Mine enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!
'T is wonder, that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.—He wakes; speak to him.

Doctor. Madam, do you? 't is fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares you majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o' the grave.—
Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know. Where* did you die?
Cor. Still, still, far wide.

Doctor. He's scarecely awake: let him alone awhile.

Lear. Where have I been? Where am I?—Fair day-light.—
I am mightily abus'd.—I should even die with pity
To see another thus.—I know not what to say.—
I will not swear, these are my hands:—let's see;
I feel this pin prick. Would I were assur'd
Of my condition!

Cor. O! look upon me, air,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me.—

No, sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me: I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward,* not an hour more nor less;
And, to deal plainly, I fear, I am not in my perfect mind.

Methinks, I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful, for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments: nor I know not Where* I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me,
For, as a man, I think this lady

KING LEAR.

797

To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am.

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not:
If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know, you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Durf. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,
You see, is cur'd in him; and yet it is danger
To make him even o'er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in: trouble him no more,
Till farther settling.

Cor. Will 't please your highness walk?

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Camp of the British Forces near Dover.

Enter, with Drums and Colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Edm. Know of the duke, if his last purpose hold;
Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course. He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving:—bring his constant pleasure.

[To an Officer, who exit.]

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'T is to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord,
You know the goodness I intend upon you:
Tell me, but truly, but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

Reg. But have you never found my brother's way
To the forefended place?

Edm. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct,
And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her. Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not.—
She, and the duke her husband,—

Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldiers.

Gon. I had rather lose the battle, than that sister
Should lose him and me. [Aside.

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be-meret,—
Sir, this I bear,—the king is come to his daughter,
With others, whom the rigour of our state
For'd to cry out. Where I could not be honest,
I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us, as France invades our land,
Not bolds the king, with others, whom, I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.

Reg. Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestic and particular broils
Are not the question here.

Alb. Let us, then, determine
With the ancient of war on our proceedings.

Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'T is most convenient; pray you, go with us.

Gon. O, ho! I know the riddle. [Aside.]—I will go.

Enter EDGAR, disguised.

Edg. If o'er your grace had speech with man so poor,
Hear me one word.

Alb. I'll overtake you.—Speak.

[Exeunt Edmund, Regan, Goneril, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.
If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seem,
I can produce a champion, that will prove
What is avouch'd there. If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune love you! [Going.

Alb. Stay, till I have read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. [Exit.

Alb. Why, fare thee well: I will o'erlook thy paper.

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view; draw up your pow'rs.
Here's the guess of their true strength and forces
By diligent discovery; [Shewing a Paper.] but your haste
Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time. [Exit.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love;
Each jealous of the other, as the string
Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive: to take the widow
Exasperates, makes mad, her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my side,
Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon; for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate. [Exit.
SCENE II.—A Field between the two Camps.

Alarum within. Enter, with Drum and Colours, Lear,
Cordelia, and their Forces; and exit.

Enter Edgar and Gloster.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree!
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive.
If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

Alarum; afterwards a Retreat. Re-enter Edgar.

Edg. Away, old man! give me thy hand: away!
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en.
Give me thy hand; come on.

Glo. No farther, sir: a man may rot even here.

Edg. What! in ill thoughts again? Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Bipeness is all. Come on.

Glo. And that's true too. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The British Camp near Dover.

Enter, in conquest, with Drum and Colours, Edmund;

Lear and Cordelia, as Prisoners; Captains, Officers,

Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away: good guard,
Until their greater pleasures first be known,
That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who, with best meaning, have incurred the worst.
For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down;
Myself could else out-frown false fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters, and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:
We two alone will sing like birds in the cage:
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down.
And ask of thee forgiveness. So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out;
And take upon's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies: and we'll wear out,
In a well'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught thee?

[Embracing her.

He that parts us shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence like foxes. Wipe thine eyes;

The gonjers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see them starve first.

Come. [Exit Lear and Cordelia, guarded.

Edm. Come hither, captain; hark.

Take thou this note; [Giving a Paper.] go, follow them to prison.

One step I have advanced thee; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes. Know thou this, that men
Are as the time is; to be tender-minded
Does not become a sword. Thy great employment
Will not be bear question: either say, thou 'tis done,
Or thrive by other means.

Capt. I'll do't, my lord. [done

Edm. About it; and write happy, when thou hast Mark.—I say, instantly; and carry it so,
As I have set it down.

Capt. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If it be man's work, I will do it. [Exit Captain.

Flourish. Enter Albane, Goneril, Regan, Officers, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant train,
And fortune led you well. You have the captives,
Who were the opposites of this day's strife:
We do require them of you, so to use them,
As we shall find their merits, and our safety,
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention, and appointed guard;

Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes,
Which do command them. With him I sent the queen:
My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at farther space, t' appear
Where you shall hold your session. At this time,
We sweat, and bleed: the friend hath lost his friend
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cure'd
By those that feel their sharpness.

The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a fitter place.

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him:
Methinks, our pleasure might have been demanded,
Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers,
Bore the commission of my place and person;
To which immediacy 14 may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot:

In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
More than in your addition.

Reg. In my rights,

By me invested, he comptees the best.

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband you

Gon. Holla! holla!

That 'twas that told you so look'd but a-squinch.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer
From a full-flowing stomach.—General,

Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony;
Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine.
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will.

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow.

Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thick

[To Edmund.

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason.—Edmund, I arrest thee
On capital treason; and, in thy 13 arrest,
This gilded serpent. [Pointing to Gon.]—For you claim, fair sister,
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is sub-contracted to this lord,
And I, his husband, contradict his bans.
If you will marry, make your love to me,
My lady is bespeake.

Gon. An interlude! 16

If none appear to prove upon thy person,
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge. [Throwing down a Glove.] I'll prove it on thy heart,
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.
Reg. Sick! O, sick!
Gon. [Aside.] If not, I'll nec'er trust prison.
Edm. There's my exchange: [Throwing down a Glove.] what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.
Call by thy trumpet: he that dares approach,
On him, on you, who not? I will maintain
My truth and honour firmly.
Alb. A herald, ho!
Edm. A herald, ho! a herald!
Alb. Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.
Reg. My sickness grows upon me.
Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent.
[Exit REGAN, led. Enter a Herald.]
Come hither, herald.—Let the trumpet sound,
And read out this.
Copt. Sound, trumpet.
[Trumpet sounds. Herald reads.]
"If any man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet. He is bold in his defence."
Edm. Sound !
Her. Again.
Her. Again.
[Trumpet answers within. Enter EDGAR, armed, preceded by a Trumpet.]
Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call o' the trumpet.
Her. What are you?
Your name? your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?
Edg. Know, my name is lost;
By treason's tooth bare-grinned, and cancel-bit:
Yet am I noble, as the adversary
I come to cope withal.
Alb. Which is that adversary?
Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloster?
Edm. Himself: what say'st thou to him?
Edg. Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice; here is mine.
[Drawing. Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. I protest,
Maugre thy strength, skill, youth, and eminence,
Despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour, and thy heart, thou art a traitor:
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
Conspiring 'gainst this high illustrious prince;
And, from th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou, "No!"
This sword, this arm, this, and all my best spirits, are bent
To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak,
Thou liest.
Edm. In wisdom, I should ask thy name;
But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
And that thy tongue some 'say of breathing breathes,
What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn.
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart;
Which, for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest for ever.—Trumpets, speak!
[Alarums. They fight. Edmund falls.
Alb. O, save him! save him!
Gon. This is mere practice, Gloster
By the laws of arms thou wast not bound to answer
An unknown opposite; thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozen'd and beguil'd.
Alb. Shut your mouth, dame; Or with this paper shall I stop it?—Hold, sir!—
Thou worse than any name,
She snatches at the Letter.
No tearing, lady; I perceive, you know it.
Gon. Say, if I do, the laws are mine, not thine:
Who canst arraign me for 't?
Alb. Most monstrous !
Know'st thou this paper?
Gon. Ask me not what I know.
Edm. Go after her: she's desperate; govern her.
[Exit an Officer.
Edm. What have you charg'd me with, that have I done, and more, much more; the time will bring it out:
'T is past, and so am I. But what art thou,
That hast this fortune on me? If thou 'rt noble,
I do forgive thee.
Edg. Let's exchange charity.
I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund;
If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.
[Taking off his Helmet.]
My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant voices;
Make instruments to plague us:
The dark and vicious place where thee he got
Cost him his eyes.
Edm. Thou hast spoken right, 't is true;
The wheel is come full circle: I am here.
Alb. Methought, thy very gait did prophesy
A royal nobleness. I must embrace thee:
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee, or thy father.
Edg. Where have you hid yourself?
How have you known the miseries of your father?
Edg. By nursing them, my lord.—List a brief tale;
And when 't is told, O, that my heart would burst!—
The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near, (O, our lives' sweetness!
That with the pain of death we'd hourly die,
Rather than die at once!) taught me to shift
Into a madman's rage: 't assumes a semblance
That very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings.
Their precious stones now lost; became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair;
Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,

---

Until some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
Told him my pilgrimage: but his heart
(Alack! too weak the conflict to support)
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burnt smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good; but speak you on:
You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more more woful, hold it in,
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.1

Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too-much, would make much more,
And top extremity.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who, having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhor'd society; but then, finding
Who 't was that so endure'd, with his strong arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he 'd burst heaven; threw him2 on my father;
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting,
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack; twice, then, the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd.

Alb. But who was this?

Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody Knife.

Gent. Help, help! O help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;
It came even from the heart of—O! she's dead:
Who died she? speak, man.

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady: and her sister
By her is poison'd; she hath confess'd it.

Edm. I was contracted to them both: all three
Now marry in an instant.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they alive or dead!—
This judgment3 of the heavens, that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pity. [Exit Gentleman.

Enter Kent.

Edg. Here comes Kent.

Alb. O! it is he.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my king and master eye good night:
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forget!—
Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cor-
Seat thou this object, Kent? [delia? —
[The Bodies of General and Regan are brought in.
Kent. Alack! why thus?

Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd;
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life:—some good I mean to do,
Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,—
Be brief in it,—to the castle; for my writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia.—

Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run! O, run!

Edg. To whom, my lord?—Who has the office? send Thy token of reprieve.

Edm. Well thought on: take my sword,
Give it the captain.

Alb. Haste thee, for thy life. [Exit Edgar.

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she forfard herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile! [From Edmund is borne off.

Enter Lear with Cordelia dead in his Arms; Edgar, Officer, and others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O! you are men of stones;
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vaults should crack.—She's gone for ever.—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth.—Lend me a looking-glass:
If that her breath will mist or stain the shine,4
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!—

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,
It is a chance which does redeem all sorrow.

Kent. That ever I have felt.

Lear. O, my good master! [Kneeling.

Lear. Prythee, away.

Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!

I might have sav'd her: now, she's gone for ever.—
Cordelia, Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!

What is 't thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low—an excellent thing in woman.—

I kill'd the slave that was a hanging thee.

Off. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not fell? I have seen the day, with my good biting faulchion
I would have made them' skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are you?

Mine eyes are not o' the best: I'll tell you straight.

Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated,
One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull light?—are you not Kent?

Kent. The same.

Your servant Kent. Where is your servant Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
He'll strike, and quickly too.—He's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very man—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else. All 's cheerless, dark, and deadly:—
Your eldest daughters have forborne themselves,
And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he says;5 and vain is it,
That we present us to him.

Edg. Enter an Officer.

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Scene III.

King Lear.

Alb. That's but a trifle here—
You lords, and noble friends, know our intent.
What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be applied: for us, we will resign,
During the life of this old majesty,
To him our absolute power.—To you your rights.

[To Edgar and Kent.

With boot, and such addition, as your honours
Have more than merited.—All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deserving.—O! see, see!

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no life:
Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou 'tis come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never!—
Pray you, undo this button: thank you, sir.—
Do you see this? Look on her, look,—her lips,—
Look there, look there!—

Edg. He faints.—My lord, my lord!—

Kent. Break heart; I pray thee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O! let him pass: he hates him,
That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

Edg. He is gone, indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long:
He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence. Our present business
Is general woe.—Friends of my soul, you twain

[To Kent and Edgar.

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go:
My master calls me; I must not say, no.

Alb. The weight of this sad time we must obey,
Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.
The oldest hath borne most: we, that are young,
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exeunt, with a dead March.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Roderigo in choler,1 and Iago.

Rod. Tush! never tell me, I take it much unkindly, That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse, As if the strings were thin; shouldst know of this. Iago. 'Sblood! but you will not hear me: If ever I did dream of such a matter, abhor me. Rod. Thou toldst me thou didst hold him in thy hate. Iago. Despair me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city, In personal suit to make me his lieutenant, Off-capp'd to him; and, by the faith of man, I know my price: I am worth no worse a place; But he, as loving his own pride and purposes, Evades them, with a bombast circumstance, Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war; And, in conclusion,4 Nonsuit my mediators; "For certes," says he, "I have already chose my officer." And what was he? Forsooth, a great arithmetician, One Michael Cassio, a Florentine, A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife; That never set a squadron in the field, Nor the division of a battle knows More than a spinster; unless the bookish theorist, Wherein the toged1 counsel can propose As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice, Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had th' election; And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof, At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds, Christian and heathen,—must be be-lee'd and calm'd By debitor and creditor, this counter-caster: Ho, in good time, must his lieutenant be, And I, God bless the mark! his Moor-ship's ancient. Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman. Iago. But there's no remedy: 'tis the curse of service,

SCENE I.  OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

Yet throw such changes⁵ of vexation on ’t,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father’s house: I’ll call aloud.

Do; it is like a sconce⁶, and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

Rod. What ho! Brabantio! signior Brabantio, ho!

Lock to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves! thieves!

Enter BRABANTIO, above, at a Window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons?

What is it, that aught with Brabantio?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock’d?

Bra. Why? wherefore ask you this?

Iago. ’Zounds! sir, you are robb’d; for shame, put
On your gown:

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul:
Even now, now, very now, an old black ram
Is tumping your white ewe. Arose, arose! Arise!
Awoke the snorting citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a grandaire of you.

Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not! what are you?

Rod. My name is Roderigo.

Bra. The worst of welcome:

I have charg’d thee not to haunt about my doors.
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,
Being full of supper and distempering draughts,
Upon malicious bravery⁷ dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir,—

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,

My spirit and my power have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good sir.

Bra. What tell’st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,

In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. ’Zounds! sir, you are one of those, that will Not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service, and you think we are ruffians, you’ll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse:
you’ll have your nephews neigh to you; you’ll have couriers for cousins, and gennets for Germans.

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you, your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago.

You are—a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer: I know thee, Roderigo.
you,

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But I beseech
If ’t be your pleasure, and most wise consent,
(As partly, I find, it is) that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even and dull watch o’ the night,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of common sort, a gondolier,
To the gross clasp of a lascivious Moor,

If this be known to you, and your allowance,
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;
But if you know not this, my manners tell me,
We have you in wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That from the see of all civility,
I thus would play and triflze with your reverence:
Your daughter, if you have not given her leave,
I say again, hath made a gross revolt,
Laying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes,
On’ an extravagant and wheeling⁸ stranger,
Of here and every where. Straight satisfy yourself:
If she be in her chamber, or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho!

Give me a taper!—call up all my people!—This accident is not unlike my dream;
Belief of it oppresses me already,—

Light, I say! light!

[Exit from above.

Iago. Farewell, for I must leave you:
It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produce’d (as if I stay I shall)
Against the Moor: for, do I know the state,—
However this may calm him with some check,—
Cannot with safety cast him; for he’s embark’d
With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars
(Which even now stand in act) that, for their souls,
Another of his fathom they have none,
To lead their business: in which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell pains,
Yet for necessity of present life,
I must show out a flag and sign of love,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find
him,
Lead to the sagacity the raised search;
And there will I be with him. So, farewell.

[Exit.

Enter BRABANTIO, and Servants with Torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is;
And what’s to come of my despised time
Is nought but bitterness.—Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O, unhappy girl!—

With the Moor, say’st thou?—Who would be a father?—

How didst thou know ’t was she?—O! thou deceiv’st me
Past thought.—What said she to you?—Get more tapers!

Raise all my kindred!—Are they married, think you?

Rod. Truly, I think, they are.

Bra. O heaven!—How got she out?—O, treason of my blood!—

Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters’ minds
By what you see them act.—Are there not charms,
By which the property of youth and maidhoud
May be abused? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir; I have, indeed.¹⁰

Bra. Call up my brother.—O, that you had had her!—

Some one way, some another.—Do you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think, I can discover him, if you please
To get good guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you, lead on.† At every house I’ll call;
I may command at most.—Get weapons, ho!
And raise some special officers of night.—

On, good Roderigo;—I’ll deserve your pains. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Attendants, with Torches.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain men, yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience to do no contriv'd murder: I lack iniquity sometimes, to do me service. Nine or ten times I had thought to have yield'd him here, under the ribs. Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he prated, and spoke such scurvy and provoking terms against your honour, that, with the little godliness I have, I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, sir, are you fast married? for, be sure of this, that the magnifico is much beloved; and hath, in his effect, a voice potent, as double as the duc[e]'s: he will divorce you; or put upon you what restraint, or grievance, the law (with all his might t' enforce it on) will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite: my services, which I have done the signiory, shall out-tongue his complaints. 'T is yet to know, which, when I know that boasting is an honour, I shall promulgate, I fetch my life and being from men of royal siege^ and my demerits^ may speak, unbonneted, as proud a fortune as this that I have reach'd: for know, Iago, but that I love the gentle Desdemona, I would not my unhoused free condition put into circumscription and confine for the sea's worth. But, look! what lights come saunter?

Iago. These are the raised father, and his friends: You were best go in.

Oth. Not I; I must be found: My parts, my title, and my perfect soul, shall manifest me rightly. Is it they? Iago. By Janus, I think no. Enter Cassio, and certain Officers with Torches.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant. The goodness of the night upon you, friends. What is the news?

Cas. The duke does greet you, general; and he requires your haste, post-haste appearance, even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you? Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine. It is a business of some heat: the gallies have sent a dozen sequent^ messengers, this very night, at one another's heels; and many of the consuls, rais'd and met, are at the duke's already. You have been hotly call'd when, being not at your lodging to be found, for; the senate sent above^ three severall quests, to search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.

I will but spend a word here in the house, and go with you. [Exit.

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here? Iago. 'Faith, he to-night hath board'd a land carack^: if it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He's married.

Cas. Re-enter Othello.

Iago. Marry, to—come, captain, will you go?

Oth. Have with you. Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for you. Iago. It is Brabantio.—General, be advis'd: He comes to bad intent.

Enter Brabantio, Roderigo, and Officers, with Torches and Weapons.

Oth. Holia! stand there! Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Oth. Down with him, thief! [They draw on both sides.

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for you. Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.

Good signior, you shall more command with years, than with your weapons. Bra. O, thou foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Darn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her; For I'll refer me to all things of sense, If she in chains of magic were not bound, Whether a maid so tender, fair, and happy, So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd The wealthie curled darlings^ of our nation, Would ever have, to inure a general mock, Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom Of such a thing as thou; to fear, not to delight. Judge me the world, if 't is not gross in sense, That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms; Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs, or minerals, That weaken motion,—I 'll have 't disputed on; 'T is probable, and palpable to thinking. I, therefore, apprehend, and do attach thee For an abuser of the world, a practiser Of arts inhibited, and out of warrant.— Lay hold upon him! if he do resist, Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands! Both you of my inclining, and the rest: Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter.—Where will you that I go, To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison; till fit time Of law, and course of direct session, Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey? How may the duke be therewith satisfied, Whose messengers are here about my side, Upon some present business of the state, To bear^ me to him? Off. The duke's in council, and your noble self, I am sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the duke in council, In this time of the night!—Bring him away. Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself, Or any of my brothers of the state, Cannot but feel this wrong, as 't were their own; For if such actions may have passage free, Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. [Exit

SCENE III.—The Same. A Council-Chamber.

The Duke, and Senators, sitting in state; Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition in these news, That gives them credit.

1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion'd My letters say, a hundred and seven gallies.

1 be assured: in folio. 2 and: in quartos. 3 height: in quartos. 4 Marits. 5 frequent: in quartos. 6 about: in folio. 7 Fortunis. 8 This line is not in quarto, 1622. 9 dæling: in folio. 10 This and the first following words, are not in quarto, 1599. 11 being in folio.
Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.
3 Sen. And mine, two hundred:
But though they jump not on a just account,
(As in these cases, with the same report,) 3
T'is oft with difference) yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.
Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment.
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful words.
Enter an Officer, with a Sailor.
Off. A messenger from the galleys.
Duke. Now, the business?
Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes:
So was I bid report here to the state,
By signior Angelo. 8
Duke. How say you by this change?
1 Sen. This cannot be,
By so great a reason: 'tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gage. When we consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turk;
And let ourselves again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it,
For, that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in;—if we make thought of this,
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest which concerns him first,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wage, and wage, a danger profitless.
Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.
Off. Here is more news.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injoin'd them 9 with an after fleet.
1 Sen. Ay, so I thought.—How many, as you guess?
Mess. Of thirty sail; and now do they re-stem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
With his free duty recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him.
Duke. 'T is certain, then, for Cyprus.—
Marcus Lucioceo, is not he in town?
1 Sen. He's now in Florence.
Duke. Write from us to him; post, post-haste dispatch.
1 Sen. Here comes Brabantino, and the valiant Moor.
Enter BRABANTINO, OTHELLO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Officers.
Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you
Against the general enemy Ottoman.—
I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior;
[To BRABANTINO.
We lack'd your counsel; and your help to-night.
Bro. So did I yours. Good your grace, pardon me;
Neither my place, nor sought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general care
Take hold of me, for my particular grief
Is of so flood-gate and o'er-bearing nature,
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.
Duke. Why, what's the matter?
Bro. My daughter! O, my daughter!

Sen. Dead?
Bro. Ay, to me
She is abus'd, stol'n from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks;
For nature so preposterously to err,
(Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense)
Sans witchcraft could not.
Duke. Whooe'er he be that, in this foul proceeding,
Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter,
After its own sense; yes, though our proper son
Stood in your action.
Bro. Humbly I thank your grace.
Here is the man, this Moor; whom now, it seems,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hitherto brought.
Duke and Sen. We are very sorry for it.
Duke. What, in your own part, can you say to this?
[To OTHELLO.
Bro. Nothing, but this is so.
Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signior.
My very noble and approv'd good masters,
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her:
The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,
And little bless'd with the set phrase of peace;
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now, some nine moons wasted, they have us'd
Their dearest action in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle;
And, therefore, little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious patience,
I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver
Of my whole course of love: what drugs, what charms,
What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withal)
I won his daughter with.
Bro. A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself; and she,—in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, every thing,—
To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on?
It is a judgment maim'd, and most imperfect,
That will confess perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature; and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell,
Why this should be. I, therefore, vouch again,
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,
Or with some charm conjur'd to this effect,
He wrought upon her.
Duke. To vouch this is no proof
Without more evidence and overt test; 9
These are thin habits, and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming, you prefer against him.
1 Sen. But, Othello, speak:—
Did you by indirect and forced courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections;
Or came it by request, and such fair question
As soul to soul afforded.
Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you, 10
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.—[Exeunt IAGO and Attendants.

And, till she come, as truly to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I’ll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady’s love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father lov’d me; oft invited me;
Still question’d me the story of my life,
From year to year; the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I had pass’d.

I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it:
Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents, by flood, and field;
Of hair-breadth escapes; the imminent deadly breach;
Of being taken by the insolent foe;
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And portance in my travel’s history:
Wherein of antres vast, and deserts idle,
Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to speak, such was the process;
And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. This to hear,
Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house affairs would draw her thence;
Which ever as she could with haste despatch,
She’d come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse. Which I observing,
Took once a pilant hour; and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by paroles she had something heard,
But not intentionally: I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer’d. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore,—in faith, ‘t was strange, ‘t was passing strange;
‘T was true, ‘t was wondrous pitiful:
She wish’d she had not heard it; yet she wish’d
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank’d me;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov’d her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. On this hint I spake;
She lov’d me for the dangers I had pass’d,
And I lov’d her, that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have us’d;
Here comes the lady; let her witness it.

Enter Desdemona, IAGO, and Attendants.
Duke. I think, this tale would win my daughter too.

Good Brabantio,
Take up this tangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use,
Than their bare hands.

Br. I pray you, hear her speak:
If she confess that she was half the woer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man.—Some hither, gentle mistress;—
Do you perceive in all this noble company,

Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My noble father. I do perceive here a divided duty.
To you, I am bound for life, and education:
My life and education both do learn me
How to respect you; you are the lord of a duty;
I am hitherto your daughter: but here’s my husband,
And so much duty as my mother show’d
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Bra. God be with you! I have done.—
Please it your grace, on the state affairs:
I had rather to adopt a child, than get it.—
Come hither, Moor;
I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart;
I would keep from thee. For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child,
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.—I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself; and say a sentence,
Which, as a grise, or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.
To mourn a mischief that is past and gone
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
What cannot be preserved when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.
The robb’d, that smiles, steals something from the thief;
He robs himself, that spends a bootless grief.

Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile—
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He bears the sentence well, that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears;
But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow,
That, to say grief, must of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:
But words are words; I never yet did hear,
That the bruise’d heart was pierced through the ear.
Beech see you, now, to the affairs of state.

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation, makes for Cyprus.—Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you; and though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion.
remains of sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you: you must, therefore, be content to bluster the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrann custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of dawn: I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness; and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly, therefore, bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife;
Due reference of place, and exhibition,
With such accommodation, and besort,
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please.

Be’t at her father’s.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I; I would not there reside.

To put my father in impatient thoughts,
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfold ing lend a prosperous ear:
And let me find a charter in your voice,
T' assist my simpleness.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence and storm's of fortunes
May trumpet to the world: my heart's subdued
Even to the very quality of my lord:
I saw Othello's visage in his mind;
And to his honours, and his valiant parts,
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rites for which I love him are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence. Let me go with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords: "beseech you, let her will Have a free way.
Vouch with me, heaven, I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with the young affects of heat,
In me defunct, and proper satisfaction;
But to be free and bounteous to her mind:
And heaven defend your counsels, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant,
When she is with me. No, when light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dulness
My speculative and active instruments,
That my disports corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indig and base adversities
Make head against my reputation!

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going. 'Tis affair cries haste,
And speed must answer it: you must hence to-night.

Des. To-night, my lord?

Duke. This night.

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine to the morning we'll meet again.
Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall our commission bring to you;
With such things else of quality and respect,
As do import you.

Oth. Please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty, and trust:
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.
Good night to every one.—And, noble signior,
To Brabantio.

If virtue no delighted beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.
1 Sc. Adieu, brave Moor! use Desdemona well.
Bra. Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see:
She has deceived her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt DUKE, Senators, Officers, &c.]

Oth. My life upon her faith.—Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee:
I pray thee, let thy wife attend on her,
And bring her after in the best advantage.
Common dangers I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matters and direction,
To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.]

Rod. Iago.
Iago. What sayst thou, noble heart?
Rod. What will I do, thinkst thou?
Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.
Rod. I will incontinent drown myself.
Iago. What if thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. What, thou silly pensanter?
Rod. It is stillness to live, when to live is a torment and then we have a prescription to die, when death is our physician.

Iago. O villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years, and since I could distinguish betwixt a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Guinea-hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess, it is my shame be to so fond: but it is not in my virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue? a fig! 't is in ourselves that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are gardens, to the which, our wills are gardeners; so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many; either to have it sterile with idleness, or manured with industry; why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: but we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts, whereof I take this, that you call—love, to be a sect, or secon.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood, and a permision of the will. Come, be a man, drown thyself! drown each, and blind puppies. I profess me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness; I could never stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; defeat thy favour with an usurer's beard; I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be, that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor, —put money in thy purse;—nor he his to her: it was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration,—put but money in thy purse.—
These Moors are changeable in their wills;—all thy purse with money: the food that to him now is as luscious as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as coloquintida. She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice.—She must have change, she must: therefore, put money in thy purse:—If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning.
Make all the money thou canst. If sanctimony and a frail vow, betwixt an erring barbarian and a supersupple Venetian, be not too hard for my wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hanged in compass-thy joy, than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me.—Go, make money.—I had told thee oft, and I ro tell thee again and again,
I hate the Moor: my cause is hearted; thine hath no less reason. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him: if thou canst ouckold him, thou dost tyself a pleasure, me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse: go; provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i' the morning?

Iago. At any lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

Rod. What say you to?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear?

Rod. I am changed. I'll sell all my land.

Iago. Go to; farewell; put money enough in your purse. [Exit Roderigo.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I would time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad that 'twixt my sheets
Has done my office: I know not if 't be true:
Yet I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do as if for surety. He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Casio: a proper man: let me see now;
To get his place, and to plume up my will
In double knavery.—How, how?—Let's see:—
After some time, to abuse Othello's ear
That he is too familiar with his wife:
He hath a person, and a smooth dispose,
To be suspected; fram'd to make women false.
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest, that but seem to be so,
And will as tenderly be led by the nose,
As asses are.—
I have 't;—it is engender'd:—hell and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port Town in Cyprus. A Platform.

[Enter Montano and Two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood;
I cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main,
Desyre a sail.

Mon. Methinks, the wind hath spoke aloft in land;
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortar: what shall we hear of this?

2 Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet:
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chidden billow seems to pelt the clouds,
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous mane,
Seems to cast water on the burning ear,
And quench the guards of th' ever-fixed pole.
I never did like molestation view
On the enchafted flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and emby'd, they are drown'd;
It is impossible to bear it out.

[Enter a Third Gentleman.

3 Gent. News, lads! our wars are done.
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their desigament halts: a noble ship of Venice
Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance
On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

3 Gent. The ship is here put in:
A Florentine, Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,
Is come on shore: the Moor himself's at sea,
And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't; 'tis a worthy governor.

3 Gent. But this same Cassio, though he speak of comfort
Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted
With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. Pray heaven be bo; for I have serv'd him, and the man commands

Like a full soldier. Let's to the sea-side, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in,
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello; even Till we make the main, and th' aerial blue,
An indistinct regard.

3 Gent. Come, let's do so;
For every minute is expectation
Of more arrivance.

[Enter Cassio, and several Islanders.

Cas. Thanks you, the valiant of the warlike isle,
That so approve the Moor.—O! let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea.

Mon. Is he well ship'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approv'd allowance;
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.

[Within.] A sail, a sail, a sail!
[Enter a Messenger.

Cas. What noise?

Mess. The town is empty; on the brow of the sea
Stand ranks of people, and they cry, "a sail!"

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

[Enter Cassio and several Islanders.

2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy:
Our friends, at least.

Cas. I pay you, sir, go forth,
And give us truth who 's is arriv'd.

2 Gent. I shall.

[Exit.

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd?
Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achiev'd a maid,
That paragon description, and wild fame;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,
And in th' essential vertue of creation,
Does bear all excellency. How now! who has put in?

Re-enter Second Gentleman.

2 Gent. 'T is one Iago, ancient to the general.
Cas. He has had most favourable and happy speed:
Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sand,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guilltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do emit

Their mortal natures, letting go safely
The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?
Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain’s captain,
Left in the conduct of the bold Iago;
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts,
A se’nnight’s speed.—Great Jove! Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath,
That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,
Make love’s quick pants in Desdemona’s arms,
Give renew’d fire to our extinct spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort.—O, behold!

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, Iago, Rodrigo, and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore.
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees.—

[They kneel.]

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Evenwheel thee round.

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.

What tidings can you tell me of my lord?
Cas. He is not yet arriv’d; nor know I aught
But that he’s well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O! but I fear. —How lost you company?
Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship.

[Wind. A sail, a sail! —[Guns heard.

2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel:
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.—

[Exit Gentleman.

Good ancient, you are welcome.—Welcome, mistress.—

[To Emilia.

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That extend my manners: ’tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy. [Kissing her.
Iago. Sir, would you give her so much of her lips,
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You’d have enough.

Des. Alas! she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;
And still it, when I have lost to sleep:
Warry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on; you are pictures out of doors,
Kills in your parlours, wild cats in your kitchens,
Laments in your injuries, devils being offended,
Layers in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

Des. O, fie upon thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk:
On rise to play, and go to bed to work.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst
Praise me?

Iago O gentle lady, do not put me to’t, or I am nothing, if not critical.

Des. Come on; assay.—There’s one come to the harbour.
Cas. Ay, madam.

Iago. I am not merry; but I do beguile
He thing, as by seeming otherwise.—

Come; how wouldst thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it, but, indeed, my invention
Comes from my pate, as birdlime does from frize,
It plucks out brains and all; but my muse labours,
And thus she is deliver’d.
If she be fair and wise,—fairness, and wit,
The one’s for use, the other useth it.

Des. Well prais’d! —How, if she be black and witty?
Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She’ll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly helps her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond’ paradoxes, to make fools
Laugh i’ the alehouse. What miserable praiso hast thou for her that’s foul and foolish?

Iago. There’s none so foul, and foolish thereunto,
But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.

Des. O heavy ignorance! thou praisest the worst
Best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a de-
Serving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud;
Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;
Never lack’d gold, and yet went never gay;
Fled from her wish, and yet said,—"now I may?"
She that, being anger’d, her revenge being nigh,
Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly;
She that in wisdom never was so frail,
To change the cod’s head for the salmon’s tail;
She that could think, and ne’er disclose her mind,
See suitors following, and not look behind:—
She was a wight,—if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what?

Iago. To sucke fools, and chronicle small beer.

Des. O, most lame and impotent conclusion! —Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.

—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal censurer?

Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may rely him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

[Walks apart with Desd.]

Iago. [Aside.] He takes her by the palm: ay, well said, whisper: with as little a word as this, will I ensure as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do; I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Say true; —’t is so, indeed: if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantry, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in. Very good; well kissed! an excellent courtesy! —’t is so indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? would, they were cyster-pipes for your sake.—[A Trumpet heard.] The Moor! I know his trumpet.

Cas. ’T is truly so.

Des. Let’s meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes! —

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. O, my fair warrior!

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content,
To see you here before me. O, my soul’s joy!
If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow, till they have waken’d death;
And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus-high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven. If it were now to die,
'T were now to be most happy; for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Oth. The heavens forbid,
But that our loves and comforts should increase,
Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!—
I cannot speak enough of this content;
It stops me here; it is too much of joy:
And this, and this, the greatest discord is.

[Kissing her.]

Oth. That ever our hearts shall make!

Iago. [Aside.] O! you are well tun'd now;
But I'll set down the pegs that makes this music,
As honest as I'm.

Oth. Come, let us to the castle.

News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

How does my old acquaintance of this isle?
Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus,
I have found great love amongst them. O my sweet,
I prattled out of fashion, and I dote
In mine own comfort.—I pr'ythee, good Iago,
Go to the bay, and disembark my coffer.
Bring thou the master to the citadel:
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona,
Once more well met at Cyprus.

[Exeunt Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour.
Come hither.—If thou be'st valiant—as they say base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me. The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard.—First, I must call thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him! why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger—thus, and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies; and will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be,—again to inflame it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite, loneliness in favour, sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in.
Now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor; very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted, (as it is a most pregnant and unforced position) who stands so emi-ently in the degree of this fortune, as Cassio does? a knife very volubly; no farther conceivable, than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why, none; why, none: a subtle slippery knife; a finder out of occasions; that has an eye to stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself: a devilish knife!
besides, the knife is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and green minds look after; a pestilent complete knife, and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her: she is full of most blessed condition.

Iago. Blessed fig's end! the wine she drinks is made of grapes: if she had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor: bless'd pudd'ing! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes, I did; but that was but courteous.

Iago. Lechery, by this hand; an index, and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts.
They met so near with their lips, that their breaths embraced together. Villainous thoughts, Roderigo!
when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion. Fish! But, sir, be you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay 't upon you. Cassio knows you not.—I'll not be far from you: do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline; or from what other cause you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden in choler, and happily, with his trunccheon may strike at you: provide him, that he may; for even out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny, whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by the displa-ing of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessary apparel. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit Iago.

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it;
That she loves him, 'tis apt, and of great credit:
The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not,—
Is of a constant, loving, noble nature,
And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona
A most dear husband. Now, I do love her too,
Not out of absolute lust, (though, peradventure,
I stand accountable for as great a sin)
But partly led to my revenge;
For that I do now, the Moor hath leap'd into my seat;
The thought whereof Doth like a poisonous mineral gnaw'd inward,
And nothing can, or shall, content my soul,
Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife;
Or, failing so, yet that I put the Moor
At least into a jealousy so strong
That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,—
If this poor brach of Venice, whom I trach, l
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,—
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hup;
Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb,—
For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too;
Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me.
For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet,
Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd:
Knavey's plain face is never seen, till to'd.

SCENE II. A Street.

Enter a Herald with a Proclamation; People following.

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and vali-general, that upon certain tidings now arrived, imposing the mere perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some SCENE III. A Hall in the Castle.

Enter Othello, Desdemona, Cassio, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night:
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do;
But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye
Will I look to 't.

Oth. Iago is most honest.

Michael, good night: to-morrow, with your earliest,
Let me have speech with you. Come, my dear love:
The purchase made, the fruits are to ensure;

That profit's yet to come 'twixt you and me.—

Good night. [Exeunt Oth., Dks., attended.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome, Iago: we must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; 'tis not yet ten o'clock.
Our general cast us thus early for the love of his Desdemona, whom let us not therefore blame:
he hath not yet made want the night with her, and she is sport for Jove.

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

Iago. And I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And, when she speaks, is it not an alarum to love?

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant.
I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of Cypruss galleys, that would fain have a measure to the health of the black Othello.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago. I have poor and unhappy brains for drinking: I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O! they are our friends; but one cup: I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too, and, behold, what innovation it makes on me. I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels: the gallants seize it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do 't, but it dislikes me. [Exit Cassio.

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, With that which he hath drank to-night already, 'twill be as full of quarrel and offence As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool, Roderigo,
Whom love has turned almost the wrong side outward, I'd Desdemona hath to-night carouse'd Tootions dapple deep; and he's to watch.

Three elves of Cyprus—noble, swelling spirits, That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,— Have I to-night stlider'd with flowing cups, And they watch too. Now, 'monget this flock of drunkards, Am I to put our Cassio in some action That may offend the isle. But here they come. If consequence do but approve my dream, My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter Cassio, with him Montano, and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho! And let me the canakin clink, clink; [Sings And let me the canakin clink; A soldier 's a man; A life's but a span; Why then let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! [Windows brought.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where (indeed) they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander,—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your Englishman.

Cas. Is your Englishman so exquisite in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.

Iago. O sweet England! King Stephen was a worthy peer,*
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
With that he call'd the tailor—low.
He was a weight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree;
'T is pride that pulls the country down,
Then take thine old clock about thee.

Some wine, ho! Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again?

Cas. No; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things.—Well, heaven's above all; and there be souls must be saved, and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. It is true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, nor any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay; but, by your leave, not before me. The lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient.—Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs.—Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk: this is my ancient;—this is my right hand, and this is my left hand. I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well, then; you must not think, then, that I am drunk. [Exit.

Mon. To the platform, masters: come, let's set the watch.

1 mind: in quarto, 1599. 2 of feasting: not in quarto. 3 to: in folio. 4 lads: in f. e. 5 Carouse 6 O man's life: in folio. 7 expert.
Iago. You see this fellow, that is gone before:
He is a soldier, fit to stand by Caesar
And give direction; and do but see his vice.
'T is to his virtue a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other: 't is pity of him.
I fear, the trust Othello puts in him,
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?
Iago. 'T is evermore the prologue to his sleep;
He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drunk rock not his cradle.

Mon. It was well,
The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps, he sees it not: or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils. Is not this true?

Enter Roderigo.

I pray you, after the lieutenant; go. [Exit Roderigo.

Mon. And 't is great pity, that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second,
With one of an ingrate infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well, and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But hark! what noise?
[Cry within.—Help! Help! Help!
Re-enter Cassio, pursuing Roderigo.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?
Cas. A knave!—teach me my duty?

I'll beat the knave into a wicker* bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue? [Striking Roderigo.

Mon. Nay, good lieutenant: [Staying him.
I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

Mon. Come, come; you're drunk.

Cas. Drunk! [They fight.

Iago. Away, I say! [Aside to Rod.] go out, and cry a mutiny.

[Exit Rod.

Nay, good lieutenant,—alas, gentlemen!—
Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—sir;—
Help, masters!—Here's a goodly watch, indeed!

[Bell rings.

Who's that that rings the bell?—Diablo, ho!
The town will rise: God's will! lieutenant, hold
You will be shamed for ever.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. 'Zounds! I bleed still: I am hurt to the death.

[He faints.

Oth. Hold, for your lives!

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant,—sir, Montano,—gentlemen!—

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
Hold, hold! the general speaks to you: hold, for shame!

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence arieth this?
Are we turn'd Turks, and to ourselves do that,
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?

For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl!
He that stirs next to carve for his own rage,
Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.
Silence that dreadful bell! it frights—the isle
From her propriety.—What is the matter, masters?—

Honest Iago, that look'est dead with grieving,

Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know.—Friends all but now, even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then, but now,
(As if some planet had unwit thee)
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds;
And would in action glorious I had lost
Those legs, that brought me to a part of it.

Oth. How came it, Michael, you were thus faggot?
Cas. Othello, pardon me, I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil,
The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted, and your name is great
In mouths of wisest censure: what's the matter,
That you unlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler? give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger:
Your officer, Iago, can inform you.

While I spare speech, which something now offends me.
Of all that I do know; nor know I aught
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
Unless self-charity be sometime a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,
My blood begins my safer guides to rule;
And passion, having my best judgment quelled,*
Assays to lead the way. If I once stir,
Or do but lift this arm, the best of you
Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on;
And he that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,
Shall lose me.—What! in a town of war,
Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,
To manage private and domestic quarrel,
In night, and on the court of guard and safety?
'Tis monstrous, —Iago, who began it?

Mon. If partially affi'd, or leagued in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near.
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,
Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him.—Thus it is, general.
Montano and myself being in speech,
There comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following him with determin'd sword
To execute upon him. Sir, this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause:
Myself the crying fellow did pursue,
Lest by his clamour (as it so fell out)
The town might fall in fright: he, swiftest of foot,
Outran my purpose; and I return'd, the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath, which, till to-night,
I never might say before. When I came back,
(For this was brief) I found them close together,
At blow and thrust, even as again they were,
When you yourself did part them.

More of this matter can I not report:—
But men are men; the best sometimes forget:—
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,
Yet, surely, Cassio, I believe, received

* Quelled: to subdue, subdue.
From him that fled some strange indignity,
Whose patience could not pass.

Iago, Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter;
Making it light to Cassio—Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.—

_Enter Desdemona, attended._

Look, if my gentle love be not rais’d up—
I’11 make thee an example.

_Des. What’s the matter?_
_Oth. All’s well now, sweeting; come away to bed._
_Sir, for your hurts, myself will be your surgeon._
[Montano is led off.]

_Iago, look with care about the town,_
_And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted._

Come, Desdemona; ’tis the soldier’s life._

To have their balmy armours wak’d with strife.

_[Exit all but Iago and Cassio._

_Iago_ puts up his sleeve._

_Iago._ What are you hurt, lieutenant?
_Cassio._ Ay, past all surgery.

_Iago._ Marry, heaven forbid!

_Cassio._ Reputation, reputation, reputation! O! I have lost my reputation. I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is basest.—My reputation, Iago, my reputation!

_Iago._ As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more offence in that, than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general good; you are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an imperious lion. Sue to him again, and he’s yours.

_Cassio._ I will rather sue to be despised, than to deceive so good a commander, with so light, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabbly? swagger? swear? and discourse lustily? and one’s own shadow?—O thou invisible spirit of wine! if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil.

_Iago._ What was he that you follow’d with your sword? What had he done to you?

_Cassio._ I know not.

_Iago._ Is’t possible?

_Cassio._ I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.—O God! hat men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, revel, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into men.

_Iago._ Why, but you are now well enough: how came you thus recovered?

_Cassio._ It hath pleased the devil, drunkenness to give place to the devil, wrath: one unpunctuality shows me nothing, to make me frankly despise myself.

_Iago._ Come, you are too severe a moralist. As the time, the place, and the condition of this country tands, I could heartily wish this had not beenfallen; but, since it is as it is, mend it for your own good.

_Cassio._ I will ask him for my place again: he shall tell me, I am a drunkard. Had I as many mouths as Hyr, such an answer would stop them all. To be now sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast!—strange!—Every inordinate cup is unblessed, and he ingredient is a devil.

_Iago._ Come, come; good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used; exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think, you think I love you.

_Cassio._ I have well approved it, sir.—I drunk

_Iago._ You, or man living, may be drunk at some time, man. I’ll tell you what you shall do. Our general’s wife is now the general:—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and devotement of her parts and graces:—confess yourself freely to her; importune her; she’ll help to put you in your place again. She is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, that she holds it a vice in her goodness, not to do more than she is requested. This broken joint between you and her husband entreat her to splinter, and my fortunes against any lay worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

_Cassio._ You advise me well.

_Iago._ I protest, in the sincerity of love, and honest kindness.

_Cassio._ I think it freely; and, betimes in the morning, I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me. I am desperate of my fortunes, if they check me here.

_Iago._ You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant;
I must to the watch.

_Cassio._ Good night, honest Iago.

_[Exit Cassio._

_Iago._ And what’s he, then, that says I play the villain,
When this advice is free I give, and honest
Probable to thinking, and, indeed, the course
To win the Moor again? For ’tis most easy
The inclining Desdemona to subdue
In any honest suit: she’s fram’d as fruitful
As the free elements. And, then, for her
To win the Moor,—were ’t to renounce his baptism,
All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,—
His soul is so enet defer’d to her love,
That she may make, unmake, do what she list,
Even as her appetite shall play the god
With his weak function. How am I, then, a villain,
To counsel Cassio to this parallel course,
Directly to his good?—Divinity of hell!
When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,
As I do now; for whilsts this honest fool
Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes,
And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor,
I’ll pour this pestilence into his ear,—
That she repeals him for her body’s lust;
And, by how much she strives to do him good,
She shall undo her credit with the Moor:
So will I turn her virtue into pitch,
And out of her own goodness make the net,
That shall enmesh them all.—How now, Roderigo?

_[Enter Roderigo, angrily._

_Roderigo._ I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry. My money is almost spent: I have been to-night exceedingly well cutgelled; and, I think, the issue will be—I shall have much experience for my pains, and so with no money at all, and a little more wit, return again to Venice.

_Iago._ How poor are they, that have not patience?
What wound did ever heal, but by degrees?
Thou know’st, we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time.
Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt hast cashtor'd Cassio.
Though other things grow fair against the sun,
Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe:
Content thyself a while.—By the mass, 't is morning;
Pleasure and action make the hours seem short.
Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter:
Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Rod.] Two things are to be done.
My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress.
I'll set her on:
Myself, the while, to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump where he may Cassio find
Soliciting his wife.—Ay, that's the way:
Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before the Castle.

Enter Cassio, and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here, I will content your pains:
Something that's brief; and bid good-morrow to the general. [Music.

Enter Cloen.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples, that they squeak1 i' the nose thus?
1 Mus. How, sir, how?

Clo. Are these? I pray you, called* wind instruments?
1 Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clo. O! thereby hangs a tail.
1 Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir?

Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you; and the general so likes your music, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.
1 Mus. Well, sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again; but, as they say, to hear music the general
does not greatly care.
1 Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away.
Go; vanish into air; away! [Exeunt. Musicians.

Cas. Dost thou hear, mine honest friend?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend; I hear you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, keep up your quill pens. There's a poor piece of gold for thee. If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech: wilt thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring, sir; if she will stir hither, I shall seem so to notify her. [Exit.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Do, good my friend.4—In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then?

Cas. Why, no; the day had broke
Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife: my suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
Procure me some access,

Iago. I'll send her to you presently;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. [Exit.

Cas. I humbly thank you for't. I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Good-morrow, good lieutenant. I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will soon4 be well,
The general and his wife are talking of it,
And she speaks for you stoutly: the Moor replies,

That he you hurt is of great fame in Cyprus;
And great affinity, and that in wholesome wisdom
He might not but refuse you; but, he protests, he love
you,
And needs no other suitor but his likings,
To take the safest occasion by the hand,5 To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—
If you think fit, or that it may be done,—
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you, come in:
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Castle.

Enter Iago, Lado, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot,
And by him do my duties to the state:6 That done, I will be walking on the works;
Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord; I'll do't.

Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see7 Gent. We wait upon your lordship. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Before the Castle.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf Emil. Good madam, do: I know it grieves my band,
As if the case11 were his.

Des. O! that's an honest fellow.—Do not desist Cassio.

But I will have my lord and you again
As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam, Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. O, sir! I thank you. You do love my lord!
You have known him long, and be you well assur'd
He shall in strangeness stand no farther off
Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but, lady, That policy may either last so long,
Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstance,
That, I being absent, and my place supplied,
My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that: before Emilia here,
I give thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee.
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it
To the last article: my lord shall never rest;

* speak: in f. e. 4 Not in folio. 5 of all loves: in quarto. 1022. 4 This word is not in f. e. 6 These four words are not in folio. 7 * This line is not in folio. 8 This speech is not in quarto. 1022. 9 senate: in folio. 10 warrant: in folio. 11 cause: in folio.
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience; His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift; I'll intermingle every thing he does With Cassio's suit. Therefore, be merry, Cassio; For thy solicitor shall rather die, Than give thy cause away.

Enter Othello and Iago, at a distance.

Em. Madam, here comes my lord.
Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.
Des. Why, stay, and hear me speak.
Cas. Madam, not now: I am very ill at ease; Unfit for mine own purpose.
Des. Well, do your discretion. [Exit Cassio.
Iago. Ha! I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say?
Iago. Nothing, my lord; or if—I know not what.
Oth. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?
Iago. Cassio, my lord? No, sure, I cannot think it, That he would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing you coming.

Oth. I do believe 't was he.
Des. How now, my lord!
I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.
Oth. Who is 't you mean?
Des. Why, your lieutenant, Cassio. Good, my lord,
If I have any grace, or power to move you,
His present reconciliation take;
For if he be not one that truly loves you,
That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,
I have no judgment in an honest face.
I pr'ythee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?
Des. Ay, sooth; so humbled,
That he hath left part of his grief with me,
To suffer with him. Good love, call him back.
Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other time.
Des. But shall 't be shortly?
Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.
Des. Shall 't be to-night at supper?
Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner then?
Oth. I shall not dine at home:
I meet the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday morn;
On Tuesday noon, or night; on Wednesday morn:
I pr'ythee, name the time. but let it not Exceed three days: in faith, he's penitent;
And yet his trespass, in our common reason,
Save that, they say, the wars must make examples
But of our dead is not almost a fault
I'll incur a private check. When shall he come?
Tell me, Othello: I wonder in my soul,
What you could ask me that I should deny,
Or stand so mannerly on. What! Michael Cassio,
That came a wooing with you, and so many a time,
When I have spoke of you disparingly,
Faith ta'en your part, to have so much to do
'Or bring him in! Trust me, I could do much.

Oth. Pr'ythee, no more: let him come when he will,
Will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a boon;
'Is it? I should entreat you wear your gloves,
In order on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm,
And to you to do a peculiar profit
On your own person: nay, when I have a suit
Therein I mean to touch your love indeed,

It shall be full of poise and difficult weight,
And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing.

Wherein, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.
Des. Shall I deny you? no, Farewell, my lord.
Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I'll come to thee straight.
Des. Emilia, come.—Be it as your fancies teach you;
Whate'er you be, I am obedient. [Exit, with EMILIA.

Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?
Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woe'd my lady,
Know of your love?
Oth. He did, from first to last: why dost thou ask?
Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;
No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?
Iago. I did not think, he had been acquainted with it.
Oth. O, yes: and went between us very oft.
Iago. Indeed?
Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed:—discreen'st thou aught in that?
Is he not honest?
Iago. Honest, my lord?
Iago. My lord, for aught I know.
Oth. What dost thou know?
Iago. Think, my lord?

Oth. Think, my lord!

By heaven, he echoes me,
As if there were some master in his thought.
Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean something.
I heard thee say but now,—thou lik'dst not that,
When Cassio left my wife: what didst not like?
And, when I told thee, he was of my counsel
In my whole course of wooing, thou criedest, "Indeed!"

And didst contract and purseth thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit. If thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.
Oth. I think, thou dost;
And—for I know thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,—
Therefore, these stops of thine fright me the more;
For such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but in a man that's just,
They are close delations, working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,
I dare be sworn. I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem;
Or, those that be not, would they might seem none!
Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.
Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this.
I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thoughts,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words.

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me:
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.
Utter my thoughts? Why, say, they are vile and false,—
As where’s that palace, whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not? who has a breast so pure,
But sometimes uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets, and law-days, and in session sit
With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dast conspire against thy friend, Iago,
If thou but think’st him wrong’d, and mak’st his ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago.
I do beseech you,—

Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess,
(As, I confess, it is my nature’s plague
To spy into abuses, and off my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not)—that your wisdom yet,
From one that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice; nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance.
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name, in man, and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls:
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing.
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he, that fitches from me my good name,
Robes me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thoughts.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand;
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha!

Iago. O! beware, my lord, of jealousy!
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth make
The meat it feeds on: that cuckold lives in bliss,
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;
But, O! what damned minutes tells he o’er,
Who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet fondly loves!
Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor, poor content! Rich, and rich enough;
But riches lessens as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.—
Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

Oth. Why? why is this?
Think’st thou, I’d make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No: to be once in doubt,
Is once to be revol’d. Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufficate and blown surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'T is not to make me jealous,
To say—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well;
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous:
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt;
For she had eyes, and chose me: no, Iago; I'll lose, where I don’t know prove;
And, on the proof, there is no more but this,
Away at once with love, or jealousy.

Iago. I am glad of it! for now I shall have reason
To show the love and duty that I bear you
With franker spirit: therefore, as I am bound,
Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio:
Wear your eye,—thus, not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of itself-bounty, be disturb’d; look to it.
I know our country disposition well;
In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare not show their husbands; their best con science
Is, not to leave’t undone, but keep’t unknown.
Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying you;
And, when she seem’d to shake, and fear your looks,
She lov’d them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then;
She that, so young, could give out such a seeming,
To seal her father’s eyes up, close as oak,—
He thought, ’t was witchcraft.—But I am much to blame;
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon,
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see, this hath a little dash’d your spirits.
Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me, I fear it has
I hope, you will consider what is spoke
Comes from my love.—But, I do see you are mov’d:—
I am to pray you, not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success,
As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio’s my worthy friend.
My lord, I see you are mov’d.

Oth. No, not much mov’d.—

Iago. Long live she so; and long live you to think so.

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,

Iago. Ay, there’s the point:—as,—to be bold with Iago. Not to affect many proposed matches,

Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
Wherefore, we see, in all things nature tends.
For one may smell in such a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.

But pardon me; I do not in suspicion
Distinctly speak of her, though I may fear,
Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,
May fail to match you with her country forms,
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell.
If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;
Set on thy wife to observe. Leave me, Iago.

Iago. My lord, I take my leave.

Oth. Why did I marry?—This honest creature,

Iago. My lord, I would I might entertain your be

To scan this thing no farther; leave it to time.
Although ’t is fit that Cassio have his place,
(For, sure, he fills it up with great ability)
Yet if you please to hold him off a while,
You shall by that perceive him and his means.
Scene III.

Othello, the Moor of Venice.

817.

Note, if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity:
Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my fears,
(As worthy cause I have to fear I am)
And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not thy government.

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit.

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities with a learned spirit.
Of human dealings: if I do prove her haggard, 1
Though that her jealous were my dear heart-string's, 2
I'd make her off, and let her down the wind, 2
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black,
And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have; or, for I am declin'd
Into the vale of years:—yet that she's not much
She's gone; I am abus'd; and my relief
Must be to loath her. O, curse of marriage!
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites. I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapours of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the th' love I love,
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great ones;
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
'T is destiny unhannable, like death:
Even then this forked plague is fated to us,
When we do quicken. Desdemona comes.

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

If she be false, O! then heaven mocks itself. 3
I'll not believe it.

How now, my dear Othello!

Your dinner and the generous islanders,
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why is your speech so faint? 4 Are you not well?
Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. Faith, that's with watching; 't will away again:
Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

[Offers to bind his Head.

Oth. Your napkin is too little; 't is time her Napkin.
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exeunt Oth. and Des.

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin.
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steal it; but she so loves the token,
(For he conjur'd her she should ever keep it)
That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kiss, and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,
And give 't Iago: what he will do with it,
Heaven knows, not I;

I nothing, but to please his fantasy. 19

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?
Emil. Do not you chide, I have a thing for you.
Iago. A thing for me?—it is a common thing.
Emil. Ha?
Iago. To have a foolish wife.
Emil. O! is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief? 20

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;

That which so often you did bid me steal.
Iago. What stolen it from her?
Emil. No, 'tis she; she let it drop by negligence;
And, to th' advantage, I, being here, took 't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench: give it me.

Emil. What will you do with't, that you have been so earnest
To have me flitch it?

Iago. Why, what's that to you? [Snatching it.
Emil. If it be not some purpose of import,
Give 't me again, poor lady! she'll run mad,
When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not acknowledged on't; I have use for it.
Go: leave me.

[Exit Emilia.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it: trifles, light as air,
Are to the jealous confirmations strong.
As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison: 12
Dangerous conceits are in their natures poisons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste;
But with a little setting on the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so—

Enter Othello.

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou ow'dst yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me? to me?

Iago. Why, how now, general! no more of that.

Oth. Avaunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the rack.

I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Than but to know 't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord!

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust? 4
I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:
I slept the next night well. 14 was free and merry;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is rob'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know 't, and he's not rob'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioneers and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known.—O! now, for ever,
Farewell the tranquil mind; farewell content;
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue: O, farewell!

Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing "fe,
The royal banner, and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!

And O! you mortal engines, whose rude 15 throats
Th' immortal Jove's dread cloumours counterfeits,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone.

Iago. Is it possible?—My lord,—

Oth. Villain, be sure thou proove my love a whore,
Be sure of it: give me the ocular proof,

[Taking him by the Throat.

Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog,

Than aguver my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is it come to this?

Oth. Make me to see 't; or, at the least, so proove it,
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on, or woe upon thy life!

Oth. My noble lord,—

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horns accumulate;
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd,
For nothing canst thou to damnation add,
Greater than that. [Releasing him.]

Oth. O grace! O heaven defend 4 me! Are you a man? have you a soul, or sense?—
God be wi' you: take mither grace.—O wretched fool, That livèt 4 to make thine honesty a vice! O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world! To be direct and honest, is not safe.—
I thank you for this profit: and, from hence.
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay.—Thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool, And loses that it works for.

Oth. By the world, I think my wife be honest, and think she is not; I think that thou art just, and think thou art not. I'll have some proof: her name, that was as fresh As Dian's visage, is now begrimed 5'd and black As mine own face. If there be cords, or knives, Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams, I'll not endure it.—Would I were satisfied! Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion: I do repent me that I put it to you. You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would! nay, I will.

Iago. And may; but how? how satisfied, my lord? Would you the supervision 4' grossly gape on? Behold her topp'd?

Oth. Death and damnation! O! Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think, To bring it 4 to that prospect. Damn them then, If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster, More than their own! What then? how then? What shall I say? Where's satisfaction? It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys, As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross As ignorance made drunk: but yet, I say, If imagination, and strong circumstances, Which lead directly to the door of truth, Will give you satisfaction, you may 4 have it. Oth. Give me a living reason she's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office;
But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far, Prick'd 4 by foolish honesty and love, I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately, And being troubled with a raging tooth, I could not sleep.
There are a kind of men, so loose of soul, That in their sleep will mutter their affairs: One of this kind is Cassio.

In sleep I heard him say,—"Sweet Desdemona, Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!"
And then, sir, would he grippe, and wring my hand, Cry.—"(O, sweet creature)" and then kiss me hard, As if he pluck'd up kissee by the roots,
That grew upon my lip: then, laid his leg Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then, Cried,—"Cursed fate, that gave thee to the Moor!"

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous! *

---

Nay, this was but his dream

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion: 'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream. Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs, That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done She may be honest yet. Tell me but this: Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief, Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand? Oth. I gave her such a one: 't was my first gift. Iago. I know not that; but such a handkerchief, (I am sure it was your wife's) did I to-day See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Iago. If it be that, or any that 4 was hers, It speaks against her with the other proofs. Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives! One is too poor, too weak for my revenge. Now do I see 't is true.—Look here, Iago; All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven: 'tis thought gone.

Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell!" Yield up, O Love! thy crown, and hearted throne, To tyrannous hate! swell, boseom, with thy fraught For 't is of aspiric' tongues!

Iago. Pray, 4 be content.

Oth. O, blood, Iago, blood!

Iago. Patience, I say: your mind, perhaps, may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontick sea, Whose icy current and compulsive course Ne'er knows 4 retiring ebb, but keeps due on To the Promontick, and the Hellespont; Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace, Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love, Till that a capable and wide revenge Shallswarm them up.—Now, by yond' marble heaven. In the due reverence of a sacred vow [Kneeling I here engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet.—

Witness, you ever-burning lights above! You elements that clip us round about! Witness, that here Iago doth give up The execution 11 of his wit, hands, heart, To wrong'd Othello's service. Let him command, And to obey shall be in me remorse, What bloody work 12 sooer.

Oth. I greet thy love, Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance bounteous, And will upon the instant put thee to 't. Within these three days let me hear thee say, That Cassio 's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead: 't is done at your request: But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn be! Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw; To furnish me with some swift means of death For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant. Iago. I am your own for ever.

---

SCENE IV.—The Same.

*Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where the lieutenant Cassio lies?

Clo. I dare not say, he lies any where.

Des. Why, man?
Othello, the Moor of Venice.

Clown. He is a soldier; and for one to say a soldier lies is stabbing.

Des. Go to. Where lodges he?

Clown. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie."

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clown. I know not where he lodges; and for me to deceive a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, to lie in mine own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified to report?

Clown. I will catechize the world for him; that is, to make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him; bid him come hither; tell him,
I have moved my lord in his behalf; and hope all will be well.

Clown. To do this is within the compass of man's wit:
and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit.

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief, Emilia?

Emilia. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzeados; and but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To poison all to ill thinking.

Emilia. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who? he! I think the sun, where he was born,
Drew all such humours from him.

Emilia. Look, where he comes.

Enter Othello.

Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio
Be call'd to him.—How is 't with you, my lord?

Othello. Well, my good lady.—[Aside.] O. hardness to dismember!—

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Othello. Give me your hand. This hand is moist, my lady.

Des. It yet hath felt no age, nor known no sorrow.

Othello. This argues fruitfulness, and liberal heart.

Des. Hot, and moist: this hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty, fasting and praying. Much castigation, exercise devout;

For here's a young and sweating devil here,
That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand;

A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;
For 't was that hand that gave away my heart.

Othello. A liberal hand: the hearts of old gave hands,
But our new heraldry is—hands, not hearts.

Des. I cannot speak of this. Come now, your promise.

Othello. What promise, churl?

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you.

Othello. I have a salt and sudden rheum offends me.

Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord. [Offering it.]

Othello. That which I gave you.

Des. Have I it not about me.

Othello. No, indeed, my lord.

Des. That is a fault.

Othello. The handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;

She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people; she told her, while she kept it,
'T would make her amiable and subdue my father

Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her lost, and his spirits should hunt
After new fancies. She, dying, gave it me;

And bid me, when my fate would have me wise,
To give it to him; I did so; and take heed on 't:

Make it a darling like your precious eye.

To lose or give 't awere were such perdition,
As nothing else could match.

Des. Is it possible?

Othello. 'T is true: there's magic in the web of it.

A sibyl, that had number'd in the world
The sun to course® two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;

The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk,
And it was dyed in mummy, which the skilful
Conserv'd® of maidens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is it true?

Othello. Most veritable; therefore look to 't well.

Des. Then, would to heaven that I had never seen it!

Othello. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

Othello. Is it lost? is it gone? speak, is it out of the way?

Des. Heaven bless us!

Othello. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; but what an it if were?

Othello. Say it, is it not lost?

Des. Why, so can I, sir; but I will not now.

This is a trick to put me from my suit:

I pray, let Cassio be receive'd again.

Othello. Fetch me that® handkerchief: my mind mis-
Des. Come, come; [gives.

You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Othello. The handkerchief,—

Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.®

Othello. The handkerchief,—

Des. A man that, all his time,
Hath founded his good fortunes on your love;

Shar'd dangers with you;

Othello. The handkerchief,—

Des. In sooth, you are to blame.

Othello. Away!®

Emilia. Is not this man jealous?

Des. Ne'er saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief:

I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emilia. 'T is not a year or two shows us a man:

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,

They belch us.

Enter Iago and Cassio.

Iago. Look you! Cassio, and my husband.

Lago. There is no other way; 'tis she must do 't:
And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.

Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit. I do beseech you,

That by your virtuous means I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love.

Whom I, with all the office® of my heart,

Entirely honour: I would not be delay'd.

If my offence be of such mortal kind,

That nor my service past, nor present sorrows,

Nor purpose'd merit in futurity,

Can ransom me into his love again,

But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a fore'd content,
And shift' myself upon some other course,
To fortune's alma.

Des. Alas! thrice-gentle Cassio,
My advocacy is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd.
So help me every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blank of his displeasure,
For my free speech. You must a while be patient:
What I can do, I will; and more I will,
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now;
And, certainly, in strange unquietness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air,
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother:—and can he be angry?
Something of moment, then; I will go meet him.
There's matter in't, indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I pr'ythee, do so. [Exit Iago.]—Something, sure, of state,—

Either from Venice, or some unhatch'd practice,
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,—
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so;
For let our finger ache, and it induces
Our other healthful members ov'n to that sense
Of pain: nay, we must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observances
As fit the bridal.—Be shrivell me much, Emilia,
I was (unhandsome warrior as I am)
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find, I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indited falsely.

Emil. Pray heaven, it be state matters, as you think,
And no conception, nor no jealous toy,
Concerning you.

Des. Alas, the day! I never gave him cause.
Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster,
Begot upon itself. born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen.

Des. I will go seek him.—Cassio, walk hereabout.
If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit,
And seek to affect it to my uttermost.
Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.

[Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?

How is it with you, my most fair Bianca?
I' faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.
Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.

What, keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eight score times?
O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca;
I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;
But I shall, in a more convenient time,
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

[Giving her Desdemona's Handkerchief.

Take me this work out.

Bian. O, Cassio! whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend:
To the felt absence, now, I feel a cause.
Is it come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Go to, woman! Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous, now,
That this is from some mistress some remembrance:
No, in good truth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber.
I like the work well: are it be demanded.
(As like enough it will) I'd have it copied:
Take it, and do't; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general,
And think it no addition. nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cas. Not that I love you not.
Bian. But that you do not love me.
I pray you, bring me on the way a little;
And say, if I shall see you soon at night.

Cas. 'Tis but a little way, that I can bring you,
For I attend here; but I'll see you soon.

Bian. 'T is very good: I must be circumstanc'd.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Othello and Iago.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth. Think so, Iago?

Iago. What?

Oth. To kiss in private?

Iago. An unauthorized kiss.

Oth. Or to be naked with her friend a-bed,
An hour, or more, not meaning any harm?

Iago. Naked a-bed, Iago, and not mean harm?

It is hypocrisy against the devil:
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip
But if I give my wife a handkerchief,—

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why, then 'tis hers, my lord; and, being hers,
She may, I think, bestowed on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too:
May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;
They have it—very oft, that have it not:
But, for the handkerchief,—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it
Thou saist,—O! it comes o'er my memory,
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boding to all,—he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?
Oth. That's not so good, now.
Iago. What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong?
Or heard him say,—as knaves be such abroad, Who having by their own importunate suit, Or voluntary dotage of some mistresse, Convinced or supplied them, cannot choose But they must blab—
Oth. Hath he said any thing?
Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well assur'd, No more than he 'll unswear.
Oth. What hath he said?
Iago. 'Faith, that he did—'I know not what he did.
Oth. What? what?
Iago. Lie—
Oth. With her?
Iago. With her, on her; what you will.
Oth. Lie with her! lie on her!—We say, lie on her, when they belie her. Lie with her! that's falserome.—
Handkerchief,—confessions,—handkerchief!—To confess, and be hanged for his labour.—First, to be hanged, and then to confess,—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shuddering passion without some instruction. It is not words, that shake me thus: —Pish!—Noses, ears, and lips.—Is it possible?—Confess!—Handkerchief!—O devil!— [Falls in a Trance;
Iago. Work on, my medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught; And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus, All guiltless, meet reproach.—What, ho! my lord! Enter Cassio.
My lord, I say! Othello!—How now, Cassio! Cas. What's the matter?
Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsye; This is his second fit; he had one yesterday. Cass. Rub him about the temples.
Iago. No, forbear.3
The lethargy must have his quiet course, If not, he forms at mouth; and, by and by, Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs: Do you withdraw yourself a little while, He will recover straight: when he is gone, I would on great occasion speak with you.—
[Exit Cassio.
How is it, general? have you not hurt your head?
Oth. Dost thou mock me?
Cas. There's many a beast, then, in a populous city, And many a civil monster.
Oth. Did he confess it?
Iago. Good sir, be a man; Think, every bearded fellow, that's a but yok'd, May draw with you: there's millions now alive, That nightly lie in those improper beds, Which they dare swear peculiar: your case is better. 4 'Tis the spit of hell, the fiend's arch-mock, To lip a wanton in a secure couch, And to suppose her chaste. No, let me know; And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall be. Oth. Oh! thou art wise; 'tis certain.
Iago. Stand you awhile apart; Confine yourself but in a patient bed; 4 Whiles you were here, o'erwhelm'd 5 with your grief, (A passion most unsetting such a man) Cassio came hither: I shifted him away, And laid good 'scape upon your ecstasy; Bade him anon return, and here speak with me; The which he promises. But encave yourself, And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns, That dwell in every region of his face; For I will make him tell the tale anew, Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when He hath, and is again to cope your wife: I say, but mark his gesture.—Marry, patience; Or I shall say, you are all-in-all in spleen, And nothing of a man.
Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?
Iago. I will be found most cunning in my patience But (dost thou hear?) most bloody.
Oth. That's not amiss; But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?
[Othello retires.
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca, A housewife, that by selling her desires, Buys herself broad and clothes: it is a creature, That dotes on Cassio, as 'tis the trumpeter's plague, To beguile many, and be beguil'd by one. He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain' From the excess of laughter:—here he comes,— Re-enter Cassio.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad; And his unbookish jealousy must construe Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong.—How do you now, lieutenant? Cas. The worse, that you give me the addition, Whose want even kills me.
Iago. Fly Desdemona well, and you are sure on't. Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power, [Speaking lower. How quickly should you speed?
Cas. Alas, poor catif! [Aside.
Oth. Look, how he laughs already! [Aside.
Iago. Do you hear, Cassio? [Aside.
Cas. No, he importurned him To tell it o'er. Go to; well said, well said. [Aside. Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry her: Do you intend it?
Cas. Ha, ha, ha!
Oth. Do you triumph o'er me? Do you triumph?
[Aside.
Cas. I marry her!—what, a customer? I pray thee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it is so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!
Oth. So, so, so, so. They laugh that win. [Aside. Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes, that you shall marry her. Cas. Pr'ythee, say true. Iago. I am a very villain else. Oth. Have you scorned me? Well. [Aside. Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise. Oth. Iago beckons me: now he begins the story. [Aside.
Cas. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians, and thither comes this bauble; and, by this hand, she fails me thus about my neck—

Oth. Crying, O dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it.

Cas. So hangs', and lolls, and weeps upon me; so hales, and pulls me; ha, ha, ha!—

Oth. Now he tells, how she plucked him to my chamber. O! I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to.

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! I look where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfumed one.—What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief, you gave me even now? I was a-fine fool to take it. I must take out the work!—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There, give it your hobby-horse: whereas you had it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca! how now, how now!

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief!

Cas. An you 'll come to supper to-night, you may: an you will not, come when you are next prepared for.

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. 'Faith, I must: she'll rain in the street else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you, for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, come; will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more.

[Exit Cassio.

Oth. [Advancing.] How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice.

Oth. O, Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand: and to see how he prises the foolish woman your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a killing.—A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damned to-night, for she shall not live. No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand. O! the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side, and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do say what she is.—So delicate with her needle!—An admirable musician! O! she will sing the savageness out of a bear.—Of so high and plentiful wit and invention!—

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. O! a thousand thousand times. And then, of so gentle a condition.

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain:—but yet the pity of it, Iago!—O, Iago! the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into pieces.—Cuckold me!

Iago. O! 'tis foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.
OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE. 823

And will return to Venice.—Hence! avaunt!

[Exit Desdemona.

Cassio shall have my place. And,—air, to-night, I do intreat that we may sup together:
You are welcome, air, to Cyprus.—Goats and monkees! [Exit.

 Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full senate
Call all-in-all sufficient?—This the noble nature
Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue
The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,
Could neither graze, nor pierce?—

Lago. He is much changed.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is henot light of brain?
Lago. He's that he is: I may not breathe my censure.
What he might be,—if, what he might be, he is not,
I would to heaven, he were.

Lod. What! strike his wife? Lago.
"Faith, that was not so well; yet would I knew,
That stroke would prove the worst.

Lod. Is it his use? Or did the letters work upon his blood,
And new create this fault?

Lago. Alas, alas! It is not honesty in me, to speak
What I have seen and known. You shall observe him;
And his own courses will denote him so,
That I may save my speech. Do but go after,
And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry, that I am deceiv'd in him. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?
Emil. Nor ever heard; nor ever did suspect.
Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and her together.
Emil. But then I saw no harm; and then I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them.
Oth. What! did they never whisper?
Emil. Never, my lord.
Oth. Nor send you out of the way?
Emil. Never.
Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?
Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. That's strange.
Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,
Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,
Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom.
If any wretch have put this in your head,
Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse,
For if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy; the purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—go. [Exit Emilia.
She says enough;—yet she's a simple bawd,
That say not as much. —This is a subtle whore,
A closed-lock-and-key of villainous secrets:
And yet she 'll kneel, and pray: I have seen her do't.

Re-enter Emilia, with Desdemona.

Des. My lord, what is your will?
Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.
Des. What is your pleasure?
Oth. Look in my face.
Des. What horrible fancy is this?
Oth. Some of your function, mistress; [To Emilia.
Leave procursing alone, and shut the door;

Cough, or cry hem, if any body come:
Your mystery, my mystery,—nay, despatch.

[Exit Emilia.

Des. Upon my knee, what doth your speech import?
I understand a fury in your words, [Kneels.
But not the words.
Oth. Why, what art thou?
Des. Your wife, my lord; your true
And loyal wife.
Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;
Last, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves
Should fear to seize thee: therefore, be double-damned;
Swear thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.
Oth. Heaven truly knows, that thou art false as hell.
Des. To whom. my lord? with whom? How am I false?
Oth. O Desdemona!—away, away, away!
Des. Alas, the heavy day!—Why do you weep?
Am I the occasion' of these tears, my lord?
If, haply, you my father do suspect
An instrument of this your calling back,
Lay not your blame on me: if you have lost him,
Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleased heaven
To try me with affliction; had he rain'd
All kinds of sores, and shames, on my bare head;
Sleep'd me in poverty to the very lips;
Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes:
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience: but, alas! to make me
A fixed figure, for the hand's of sorrow
To point his slowly moving finger at;
Yet could I bear that too; well, very well:
But there, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life,
The fountain from which my current runs
Or else dries up; to be discarded thence,
Or keep it as a cistern, for foul toads
To knot and gender in!—turn thy complexion there,
Patience, thou young and rose-ripp'd cherubin;
Ay, there: look grim as hell!—
Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest.
Oth. O! ay; as summer flies are in the shambles,
That quicken even with blowing. O thou wondrous weed!
Who art so lovely fair, and smell'est so sweet,
That the sense aches at thee, would thou hadst never been born!
Des. Alas! what ignorant sin have I committed?
Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,
Made to write whereupon? What committed?
Committed?—O thou public commoner! I
I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did I but speak thy deeds.—What committed?
Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks:
The bawdy wind, that kiss's all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear it. What committed?—

Impudent strumpet! [Des.

By heaven you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?
Des. No, as I am a Christian.
If to preserve this vessel for my lord,
From any other, foul, unlawful touch,
Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.
Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, so I shall be saved.

Emil. O, fie upon them! some such squire he was,
That turn’d thy wit the seamy side without,
And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des.

O good’ Iago!

What shall I do to win my lord again?
Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven,
I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:
If e’er my will did tremble, spurn my love,
Either in discourse of thought, or actual deed;
Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,
Delighted them in any other form;
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will,—though he do shake me off
To baggery divorcement,—love him dearly,
Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much;
And his unkindness may defeat my life,
But never taunt my love. I cannot say whore;
It does abhor me now I speak the word;
To do the act that might the addition earn,
Not the world’s mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, be content; ’tis but his humour:
The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you.

Des.

If ’t were no other.—

Iago. ’Tis but so, I warrant. [Music.]
Hark! how these instruments summon to supper!
The messengers of Venice stay the meal.
Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Exit DESEMDEMA and EMIL.
Enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo!

Rod. I do not find that thou deal’st justly with me
Iago. What in the contrary?

Rod. Every day thou dost me with some device
Iago; and rather, as it seems to me now, keep’st from me all conveniency, that suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will, indeed, no longer endure it; nor am I yet persuaded, to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo?

Rod. ’Faith, I have heard too much; for your words and performances, are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means: the jewels you have had from me, to deliver to Desdemona, would half have corrupted a votarist: you have told me, she has received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance; but I find none.

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor
’tis not very well: by this hand, I say, it is very scurvy;
and begin to find myself fobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you, ’tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: if she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repea the unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself, I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest intention of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there’s mettle in thee; and even, from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderoio: thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but, yet I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant, indeed, it hath not appeared, and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that within thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean, purpose, courage, and valour,—this night show it: if thou the next night following enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treacher; and devise engines for my life.

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason, and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no! he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be lingered here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him uncapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me do?

Iago. Ay; if you dare do yourself a profit, and a right. He sups to-night with a harlotry, and thither will I go to him: he knows not yet of his honourable fortune. If you will watch his going thence, (which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one) you may take him at your pleasure: I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste: about it.

Rod. I will hear farther reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Castle.

Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and Attendants.

Desdemona,—

Oth. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no farther. Oth. O! pardon me; 't will do me good to walk.

Rod. Madam, good-night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?—

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant; I will be returned forthwith. Dismiss your attendant there: look, it be done.

Des. I will, my lord. [Exeunt OTHELLO, LODOVICO, and Attendants.

Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says, he will return incontinent. He hath commanded me to go to bed, and bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia, Give grace to my nightly wearied and adieu: We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would you had never seen him.

Des. So would not I: my love doth so approve him,

That even his stubbornness, his checks, and frowns,—Pr'ythee, unpin me,—have grace and favour in them.

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All 's one.—Good faith, how foolish are our minds!—If I do die before thee, pr'ythee, shroud me In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd Barbara: She was in love; and he she lov'd prov'd mad, And did forsake her: she had a song of—willow, An old thing 't was, but it express'd her fortune, And she did singing it: that song, to-night, Will not go from my mind: I have much to do, Not to go hang my head all at one side, And sing it like poor Barbara. Pr'ythee, despatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?

Des. No, unpin me here.—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. He speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice would have walked barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip.

Des. A's poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree, [Singing. Sing all a green willow; Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee, Sing willow, willow, willow: The fresh streams ran by her, and murmurs'd her moons; Sing willow, willow, willow: Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones; Lay by these.—

Sing willow, willow, willow.

Pr'ythee, his thee; he'll come anon.—

Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve,— Nay, that's not next.—Hark! who is it that knocks? Emil. It is the wind.

Des. I call'd my love false love; but what said he then?

Sing willow, willow, willow:

If I court no women, you'll touch with no men. So, get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do itch; Dost that bode weeping?—'T is neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so.—O, these men, these men!—

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,— That there be women do abuse their husbands In such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world? Emil. Why, would not you? Des. No, by this heavenly light. Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light: I might do 't as well i' the dark.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world? Emil. The world is a huge thing: 't is a great price For a small vice.

Des. In troth, I think thou wouldst not.

Emil. In troth, I think I should, and undo't, when I had done. Many I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring, nor for measures of lawn, nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition; but, for the whole world,—why, who would not make her hus-

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter Iago and Roderigo.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come:

Wear thy gourd rapier bare, and put it home.
Quick, quick; fear nothing: I'll be at thy elbow.
It makes us, or it mars us; think on that,
And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in’t.

Iago. Here, at thy hand: be bold, and take thy stand.

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed;
And yet he has given me satisfying reasons.—

Tis but a man gone.—forth, my sword; he dies.

[Stands back.

Iago. I have rubbed this young quat almost to the sense,
And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,
Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Every way makes my game: live Roderigo;
He calls me to a restitution large
Of gold, and jewels, that I bob’d from him,
As gifts to Desdemona;
It must not be: if Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold to me: there stand I in much peril.
No, he must die.—be’t so; I hear' him coming.

[Retiring.

Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gait; ’tis he.—Villain, thou diest.

[Runs forward, and making a pass at Cassio.

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,
But that my coat is better than thou know’st:
I will make proof of thine.

[Draws, and wounds Roderigo.

O! I am slain.

Rod. [Iago starts forward, cuts Cassio behind in the leg, and exit.

Cas. I am main’d for ever.—Light, ho! murder! murder!

[Dies.

[Enter Othello, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio.—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. It is o’er so.

---

Cas. O, help! ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. ’Tis he.—O brave Iago! honest, and just,
That hast such noble sense of thy friend’s wrong;
Thou teachest me.—Minion, your dear lies dead,
And your unblustree fate lies.—strumpet, I come.

Forth of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are bietes:
Thy bed, lust-stain’d, shall with lust a blood be spred.

[Exit Othello.

Enter Lodovico and Gratiano, at a distance.

Cas. What, ho! no watch? no passage? murder! murder!

Grat. ’Tis some mischance; the cry is very direful.

Cas. O, help! help!

Lod. Hark! Hark!

Rod. O, wretched villain! Lod. Two or three groans.—It is a heavy night.

These may be counterfeiters: let’s think’t unsafe
To come in to the cry without more help.

Rod. No body come? then, shall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago, unready, 15 with a Light.

Lod. Hark! Hark!

Gra. Here’s one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Who’s there? whose noise is this, that cries out murder thus?

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did not you hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here! for heaven’s sake, help me.

Iago. What’s the matter?

Gra. This is Othello’s ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here, that cry so grievously?

Cas. Iago? O! I am spoli’d; undone by villains:
Give me some help.

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done this me?

Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout,
And cannot make away.

[To Lodovico and Gratiano.

Iago. O treacherous villains!—What are you there? come in, and give some help.

Lod. O, help me! here.

Cas. That’s one of them.

Iago. O murderer slave! O villain!

[Exit Iago.
Red. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!—
Iago. Kill men i' the dark!—Where be those bloody thieves?
How silent is this town!—Ho! murder! murder!
What may you be? are you of good, or evil?
Lady. As you shall prove us, praise us.
Iago. Signior Lodovico?
Lady. He, sir.
Iago. I cry you mercy. Here's Cassio hurt by villains.
Gras. Cassio?
Iago. How is it, brother?
Cas. My leg is cut in two.
Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!—
Enter Bianca.
Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is 't that cry'd?
Iago. Who is 't that cry'd?
Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!
Iago. O notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that have thus mangled you?
Cas. No.
Gras. I am sorry, to find you thus: I have been to seek you.
Iago. Lend me a garter:—so—O, for a chair,
To bear him easily hence!
Bian. Alas! he faints.—O Cassio! Cassio! Cassio! Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
To be a party* in this injury.—
Patience a while, good Cassio.—Come, come.
Lend me the light.—Know we this face, or no?
[Looking at Ron.]*
Alas! my friend, and my dear countryman,
Rodrigo? no:—yes, sure. O heaven! Rodrigo.
Gras. What, of Venice? Iago. Even he, sir; did you know him?
Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry you gentle pardon:
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you.
Gras. I am glad to see you.
Iago. How do you, Cassio?—O, a chair, a chair!
Gras. Rodrigo! Iago. He, he, 'tis he.—O! that's well said;* the chair.—
[Chair brought.]
Some good man bear him carefully from hence;
I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—For you, mistress,
[To Bianca.]
Save you your labour.—He that lies slain here, Cassio,
Was my dear friend. What malice was between you?
Cas. None in the world: nor do I know the man.
Iago. What, look you pale?—O, bear him out o' the air.—
Casio and Ron. are borne off.
Stay you, good gentlemen.—Look you pale, mistress?
Do you perceive the greatness* of her eye?—
Nay, an you stir:*—we shall hear more anon.
Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her:
Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guilliness will speak,
Though tongues were out of use.
Enter Emilia.
Emil. Alas! what's the matter? what's the matter, husband?
Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are scap'd:
He's almost slain, and Rodrigo dead.*
Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio! Iago.
This is the fruit of whoring.—Pr'ythee, Emilia,
Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night.—
What! do you shake at that?
Bian. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore awake not.
Iago. O! did he so? I charge you, go with me.
Emil. O, fie upon thee, strumpet!
Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest,
As you that thus abuse me.
Emil. As I? fie upon thee!
Iago. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dress'd.—
Come, mistress, you must tell 'another tale.—
Emilia, run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath happ'd.—
Will you go on, I pray?—This is the night, [Aside.
That either makes me, or fordoes me quite.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber.

DESDEMONA in Bed asleep. A Light burning.
Enter Othello,* locking the Door after him.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,—
Let me not name it to you. you chaste stars!—
It is the cause.—Yet I'll not shed her blood;
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster.
Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then—put out the light?
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me; but once put out thy light,*
Thou cunning st* pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat,
That can thy light renew. When I have pluck'd the rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again,
It needs must wither:—I'll smelt it* on the tree.—
[Kissing her.

O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword!—One more, one more.—
Be thus when thou art dead. and I will kill thee,
And love thee after.—One more, and this the last:
So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,
But they are cruel tears: this sorrow's heavenly;
It strikes, where it doth love.—She wakes—
Des. Who's there? Othello?
Oth. Ay, Desdemona.
Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?
Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona? Des.
Ay, my lord.
Oth. If you be think'nyt yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heaven and grace,
Seek for it straight.
Des. Alas, my lord! what may you mean by that?
Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by:
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heaven forfend, I would not kill thy soul.
Des. Talk you of killing?
Oth. Ay, I do.
Des. Then, heaven
Have mercy on me!
Oth. Amen, with all my heart.
Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.
Oth. Humph!

Des. And yet I fear you: for you are fatal then,
When your eyes roll so. Why I should fear, I know not Since guilliness I know not; but yet, I feel I fear.
Oth. Think on thy sins.
Des. They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural, that kills for loving.—

Alas! why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:
These are portents; but yet, I hope, I hope,
They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still!

Des. I will so. What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief, which I so lov'd, and gave Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul!

Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed,
Take heed of perjury; thou 'rt on thy death-bed.

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth. Yes,' presently:
Therefore, confess thee freely of thy sin;
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove, nor choke, the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Thou art to die.

Des. Then, Lord, have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too!—I never did
Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio,
But with such general warranty of heaven
As I might love: I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in 's hand.
O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,
And mak'st me call, what I intend to do,
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice.

I saw the handkerchief.

Des. He found it then;
I never gave it him.—Send for him hither;
Let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath—would thee.

Des. How? unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He will not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;
Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.

Des. My fear interprets then.—What! is he dead?

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge
Ha'ld stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet! Weep'rt thou for him to my face?

Des. O! banish me, my lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow; let me live to-night.

Oth. Nay, if you strive,—

Des. But half an hour.

Oth. Being done,

There is no pause. 1

Des. It is too late.

Oth. It is too late.

Des. O Lord. Lord, Lord! 2

[He smothers her.

Emil. [Within.] My lord, my lord! what ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. What noise is this?—Not dead: not yet quite dead?

I, that am cruel, am yet merciful;
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—

So, so.

[Stabs her. 3

Emil. [Within.] What ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. Who's there?

1 Not in folio. 2 Quarto, 1609: nd's death. 3 This speech is not in quarto, 1623. 4 'Tis a speech is not in folio. 5 Not in f. e. 6 rare in quarto. 7 Did: in quarto. 8 It is: in quarto, 1623. 9 Not in f. e. 10 hear: in folio. 11 Not in folio.
Of one entire and perfect chrysolyte,
I'd not have sold her for it.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. Ay, 't was he that told me first:
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. What needs this iteration, woman? I say, thy husband.

Emil. O mistress! villainy hath made mocks with love.

My husband say, that she was false?

Oth. He, woman;
I say, thy husband: dost understand the word?
My friend, thy husband, honest, Iago.
Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day! he lies to the heart;
She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha! [Threatening her.]

Emil. Do thy worst:
This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace! you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not half the power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt. O guilt! O do it!
As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed,—
I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known,
Though I lost twenty lives.—Help! help! ho! help!
The Moor has kill'd my mistress! Murder! murder!

Enter Montano, Gratianio, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter?—How now, general!

Emil. O! are you come, Iago? you have done well,
That men must lay their murders on your neck.

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a man:
He says, thou told'st him that his wife was false.
I know, thou didst not, thou 'rt not such a villain.
Speak, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no more
Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him, she was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a lie; an odious, damned lie;
Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie.—
She false with Cassio!—Did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, mistress. Go to, charm your tongue.

Emil. I will not charm my tongue; I am bound to speak.

My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed.

All. O, heaven forfend!

Emil. And your reports have set the murderer on.

Oth. Nay, stay not, masters: it is true, indeed.

Gra. 'T is a strange truth.

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil. Villainy! villainy! villainy! I think upon 't; I think,—I smell 't;—O villainy! I thought so then,—I'll kill myself for grief.—
O villainy, villainy! villainy! villainy! villainy! Iago. What are you mad? I charge you, get you home.

Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak:
'T is proper I obey him, but not now.—
Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

Oth. O! O! O! [Falling on the ground.]

Emil. Nay, lay thee down and roar, for thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent.

That o'er did lift up eye.

Oth. O! she was foul,—[Starting up
I scarce did know you, uncle: there lies your niece,
Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd
I know, this act shows terrible and grim.

Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's dead
Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now,
This sight would make him do a desperate turn,
Yes, curse his better angel from his side,
And fall to reprobation.]

Oth. 'T is pitiful; but yet Iago knows,
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
A thousand times committed: Cassio confess'd it;
And she did gratify his amorous works
With that recognizance and pledge of love
Which I first gave her. I saw it in his hand;
It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.

Emil. O heaven! O heavenly powers!

Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. 'T will out, 't will out:—I hold my peace,
sir? no;
No, I will speak as liberal as the wind.

Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

Iago. Be wise, and get you home. [Drawing.

Emil. I will not. [Iago offers to stab Emil.

Gra. Fie! Your sword upon a woman?

Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st at,

I found by fortune, and did give my husband:
For often, with a solemn earnestness,
(No more, indeed, belonging to such a trifle)
He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. Villainous whore! [They hold him.

Emil. She give it Cassio! no, alas! I found it,
And I did give 't my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou liest. [Stabs her, and exit instantly.

Emil. By heaven, I do not; I do not, gentlemen.
O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool
Do with so good a wife? 12

Oth. Are there no stones in heaven,
But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!

Gra. The woman falls: sure, he has kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay.—O, lay me by my mistress' side!

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'T is a notorious villain. Take you this weapon,
Which I have here recover'd from the Moor.

Come, guard the door without: let him not pass,
But kill him rather. I'll after that same villain,
For 't is a damned slave.

[Exit Montano and Gratianio.

Oth. I am not valiant neither,
But every puny whisper gets my sword.
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
And die in music:—Willow, willow, willow.

Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel Moor:
So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;
So speaking as I think, I die,—I die.

[Dies.

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber,
It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper.
O! here it is.—Uncle, I must come forth.

ACT V.

Gra. [Within.] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear:
Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.
Oth. Look in upon me, then, and speak to me,
Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter GAFFAINTO.

Gra. What is the matter?
Oth. Behold! I have a weapon;
A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier’s thigh: I have seen the day,
That, with this little arm, and this good sword,
I made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop.—But, O vain boast!
Who can control his fate? ’tis not so now.—
Be not afraid, though you see me weapon’d;
Here is my journey’s end, here is my butt,
And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.
Do you go back dismay’d? it is a lost fear;
Man but a rush against Othello’s breast,
And he retires.—Where should Othello go?—
Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-star’d wench:
Pale as thy amock! when we shall meet at combat,
This look of thine will hurst my soul from heaven,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl;
Even like thy chastity,—O, cursed slave!—
Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead? O! O! O! 4
Enter Lodovico and Cassio.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?
Oth. That’s he, that was Othello: here I am.
Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain forth.

Enter Montano with IAGO, bound, and Officers.

Oth. I look down towards his feet;—but that’s a fable:
If that thou be’st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[Othello wounds Iago.]

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.
Iago. I bleed, sir; but not kill’d.
Oth. I am not sorry neither; I’d have thee live;
For, in my sense, ’tis happiness to die.
Lod. O thou Othello! that wert once so good,
Fall’n in the practice of a damned slave,
What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, any thing:
An honourable murderer, if you will;
For nought I did in hate, but all in honour.
Lod. This wretch hath part confess’d his villainy.
Did you and he consent in Cassio’s death?

Oth. Ay.
Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.
Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.
Will you, I pray, demand that demi-devil,
Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body?
Iago. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know.

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What! not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befall’n,
Which, as I think, you know not. Here is a letter,
Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo; [Showing it.
And here another: the one of them imports
The death of Cassio to be undertook
By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain!
Cas. Most heathenish, and most gross!
Lod. Now, here’s another discontented paper,
[Producing it."

Found in his pocket too: and this, it seems,
Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain;
But that, belike, Iago in the interim
Came in and satisfied him.
Oth. O, the pernicious caitiff!—
How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief,
That was my wife’s?
Cas. I find it in my chamber;
And he himself confess’d, but even now,
That there he drop’d it, for a special purpose,
Which wrought to his desire.
Oth. O fool! fool! fool!
Cas. There is, besides, in Roderigo’s letter,
How he upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast: and even but now he spoke,
After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.
Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us.
Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,
If there be any cunning cruelty
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close prisoner rest
Till that the nature of your fault be known
To the Venetian state.—Come; bring them away.
Oth. Soft you; a word or two, before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know it;
No more of that.—I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malicious: then, must you rest
Of one that lov’d, not wisely, but too well:
Of one not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplex’d in the extreme: of one, whose hand,
Like the base Indian,* threw a pearl away
Richer than all his tribe; of one, whose subdued eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal* gum. Set you down this;
And say, besides, that in Aleppo once,
When* a malignant and a turban’d Turk
Beat a Venetian, and traduc’d the state,
I took by the throat the circumcised dog,
And smote him—thus.
[Stabs himself.
Lod. O bloody period!

Gra. All that’s spoke is mar’t.
Oth. I kiss’d thee, ere I kill’d thee:—no way but this.
Killing myself, to die upon a kiss. [Dies on the bed.
Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon.
For he was great of heart.
Lod. O Spartan dog!
More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea,
Look on the tragic loading* of this bed; [To laco
This is thy work: the object poisons sight;
Let it be hid.—Gratiano, keep the house,
And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,
For they succeed on you.—To you, lord governor,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain;
The time, the place, the torture:—O, enforce it!
Myself will straightly afloat, and to the state
This heavy act with heavy heart relate. [Exeunt.

SCENE, in several Parts of the Roman Empire.

ACT I.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

Phil. Nay, but this dotage of our general's Overflows the measure: those his goodly eyes, That o'er the files and muster of the war Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bond, now turn The office and devotion of their view Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart, Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst The buckles on his breast, reneges' all temper, And is become the bellows, and the fan, To cool a gypsy's lust. Look, where they come. Flourish. Enter Antony and Cleopatra, with their Trains; Eumuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him The triple pillar of the world transform'd Into a trumpeter's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much. Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd. Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be belief'd. Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—the sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony: Fulvia, perchance, is angry; or, who knows If the scarce-bearded Caesar have not sent His powerful mandate to you. "Do this, or this;" Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that; Perform 't, or else we doom thee." Ant. How, my love! Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like,—You must not stay here longer; your dismissal Is come from Caesar; therefore hear it, Antony. Where's Fulvia's process? Caesar's, I would say?— Both?— Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen, Thou bluest, Antony, and that blood of thine Is Caesar's homager; else so thy cheek pays shame, When shrill-tongued Fulvia scolds.—The messengers Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt, and the wide arch Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space. Kingdoms are clay: our dunghy earth alike Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life Is to do thus; when such a mutual pair, [Embracing And such a twain can do't, in which I bind, On pain of punishment, the world to weet," We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood! Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?— I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.— Now, for the love of Love, and her soft hours, Let's not confound the time with conference harah. There's not a minute of our lives should stretch Without some pleasure now. What sport to-night? Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen! Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every fashion fitful strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir’d.
No messenger; but thine, and all alone,
To-night we’ll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it.—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt Ant. and Cleop. with their Train.

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz’d so little?
Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I am full sorry,
That he approves the common liar, who
Thus speaks of him at Rome; but I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Room.

Enter Charman, Iris, Alexas, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, most sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where’s the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O! that I knew this husband, which, you say, must charge his horns with garlands!

Alex. Soothsayer!

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is’t you, sir, that know the things?

Sooth. In nature’s infinite book of secrecy
A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter Enoebarus.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough,
Cleopatra’s health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray, then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means, in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Sooth. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more believing, than belov’d.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune. Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage: find me to marry me with Octavius Cæsar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs.

Sooth. You have seen, and proved a fairer former fortune,
Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then, belike, my children shall have no names. Pr’ythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And fruitful every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come; tell Iras here.

Alex. We’ll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be, drunk to bed.

Iras. There’s a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the overflowing Nilus presagest famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.—Pr’ythee, tell her but a work-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband’s nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts heavens mend! Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune.—O! let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee: and let her die too, and give him a worse: and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold. Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight, good Isis, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people; for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knife uncuckolded: therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo! now, if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they’d do’t.

Char. Not he, the queen.

Enter Cleopatra.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was disposed to mirth; but on the sudden,
A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enoebarus!—
Eno. Madam.

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where’s Alexas?

Alex. Here, at your service.—My lord approaches.

Enter Antony, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: go with us.

[Exit Cleopatra, Enoebarus, Alexas, Iras, Charman, Soothsayer, and Attendants.

Mess. Fulvia, thy wife, first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:
But soon that war had end, and the time’s state
Made friends of them, uniting their forces against Cæsar;
Whose better issue in the war, from Italy
Upon the first encounter drave them.

Ant. Well, what worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool, or coward.—On:
Things, that are past, are done, with me.—’T is thus:
Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
I hear him as he flatter’d.

Mess. Labienus

(This is stiff news) hath with his Parthian force

Extended’ Asia from Euphrates;
His conquering banner shocked from Syria
To Lydia, and to Ionia; whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say,—

Mess. O, my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general tongue;

SCENE III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome;
Hail thou in Fulvia's phrase, and taunt my faults
With such full license, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. O! then we bring forth weeds,
When our quick winds lie still; and our ills told us,
Is as our earing. Fare thee well awhile.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.

Ant. From Siceny now the news? Speak there.
1 Att. The man from Siceny!—Is there such an one?
2 Att. He stays upon your will.
Ant. Let him appear,—
These strong Egyptian fetters I must break,
Enter another Messenger.
Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?
2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.
Ant. Where did she die?
2 Mess. In Siceny:
Her length of sickness, with what else more serious
Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Giving a Letter.
Ant. Forbear me.— [Exit Messenger.

There's a great spirit gone. Thus did I desire it:
What our contents do often hurl from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By repetition souring, doth become
The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone;
The hand would pluck her back, that shov'd her on.
I must from this enchanting queen break off;
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!
Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?
Ant. I must with haste from hence.
Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women. We see how mortal an unkindness is to them: if they suffer our departure, death's the word.
Ant. I must be gone.
Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die:
it were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be estimated nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly: I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment. I do think, there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon er, she hath such a celerity in dying.
Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.
Eno. Alack, sir! no: her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love. We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are:
greater storms and tempests than armacans can report;
this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.
Ant. Would I had never seen her!
Eno. O, sir! you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work, which not to have been blessed within would have discreditéd your travel.
Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Eno. Sir?
Ant. Fulvia is dead.
Eno. Fulvia!
Ant. Dead.
Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice.
When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shews to man the tailors of the earth:
comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to lament: this grief is crowned with convolution: your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:
and, indeed, the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow.
Ant. The business she hath broached in the state
Cannot endure my absence.
Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.
Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers
Have notice what we purpose. I shall break
The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her leave to part: for not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches.
Do strongly speak to us, but the letters, too,
Of many our contriving friends in Rome
Petition us at home. Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands
The empire of the sea: our slippery people (Whose love is never link'd to the deservor, Till his deserts are past) begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his dignities,
Upon his son: who, high in name and power,
Higher than both in blood and life, stands up
For the main soldier; whose quality, going on,
The sides o' the world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which, like the curser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure,
To such whose place is under us, requires
Our quick remove from hence.
Eno. I shall do it. [Exit.

SCENE III.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, AND ALFAXAS.

Cleo. Where is he?
Char. I did not see him since.
Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does.
I did not send you.—If you find him sad,
Say, I am dancing: if in mirth, report
That I am suddenly sick: quick, and return. [Exit ALEX.
Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,
You do not hold the method to enforce
The like from him.
Cleo. What should I do, I do not?
Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.
Cleo. Thou teachest, like a fool, the way to lose him.
Char. Tempt him not so far: I wish, forbear.
In time we hate that which we often fear.
Enter ANTONY.

Cleo. But here comes Antony.
Ant. I am sick, and sullen.
Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall fall:
It cannot be thus long; the sides of nature
Will not sustain it.
Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—
Cleo. Pray you, stand farther from me.
Ant. What's the matter?
Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.
What says the married woman?—You may go:
Would, she had never given you leave to come!
Let her not say, 'tis I that keep you here,
I have no power upon you; hers you are.
Ant. The gods best know.—
Cleo. O! never was there queen
So mightily betray'd; yet at the first
I saw the treasons planted.

1 Ploughing our "quick winds" which dry the soil for the plough.
2 By revolution lowering: in o.
3 Dyce reads: He.
4 Expedition.
5 love: in folio.
6 An allusion to the ancient belief, that a horse hair laid into water, turned into a snake.
Ant. Cleopatra,—
Cleo. Why should I think, you can be mine, and true,
Though you in swearing shake the thronden gods,
Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness,
To be entangled with those mouth-made vows,
Which break themselves in swearing!
Ant. Most sweet queen,—
Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,
But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying,
Then was the time for words; no going then:
Eternity, our lipes, and eyes:
Bliss in our brows bent; none our parts so poor,
But was a race of heaven: they are so still,
Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world,
Art turn’d the greatest liar.
Ant. How now, lady!
Cleo. I would, I had thy inches; thou shouldst know
There were a heart in Egypt.
Ant. Hear me, queen.
The strong necessity of time commands
Our services a while, but my full heart
Remains in use with you. Our Italy
Shines o’er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the port of Rome:
Equality of two domestic powers
Breeds scrupulous faction. The hated, grown to strength,
Are newly grown to love: the condemn’d Pompey,
Rich in his father’s honour, creeps space
Into the hearts of such as have not thriv’d
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change. My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going,
is Fulvia’s death.
Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,
It does from c‘tulousness.—Can Fulvia die?
Ant. She’s dead, my queen.
Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read
The garboll’s she awak’d; at the last, best,
See, when, and where she died.
Cleo. O, most false love!
Where be the sacred vials thou shouldst fill
With sorrowful water? Now I see, I see,
In Fulvia’s death, how mine receiv’d shall be.
Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar’d to know
The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice: by the fire
That quickens Nilus’ slime, I go from hence,
Thy soldier, servant; making peace, or war,
As thou affect’st.
Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come.—
But let it be.—I am quickly ill, and well,
So Antony loves.
Ant. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true credence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.
Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I pr’ythee, turn aside, and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say, the tears
Belong to Egypt: good now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look
Like perfect honour.
Ant. You’ll heal my blood: no more.
Cleo. You can do better yet, but this is meetly.
Ant. Now, by my sword,—
Cleo. And target.—Still he mends;
But this is not the best. Look, pr’ythee, Charmian,
How this Hecatean Romain does become
The carriage of his state.
Ant. I’ll leave you, lady.
Cleo. Courteous lord, one word
Sir, you and I must part,—but that’s not it:
Sir, you and I have lov’d,—but there’s not it;
That you know well: something it is I would,—
O! my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.
Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.
Cleo. ’Tis sweating labour
To bear such idleness so near the heart,
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;
Since my comings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you: your honour calls you hence;
Therefore, be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you! upon your sword
Sit laurel’d victory, and smooth success
Be strew’d before your feet!
Ant. Let us go. Come;
Our separation so abides, and dies,
That thou, residing here, go’st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeting, here remain with thee.
Away!

Enter Octavius Caesar, Lepidus, and Attendants.
Caesar. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It was your great competitor. From Alexandria
This is the news: he fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel; is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra, nor the queen of Ptolemey,
More wannyman than he: hardly gave audience, a
Vouchsa’d to think he had partners: you shall see
There
A man, who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.
Lep. I must not think, there are
Evils even to darken all his goodness:
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night’s blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchas’d: what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.
Caesar. You are too indulgent. Let us grant, it is
As Amies to tumble on the bed of Ptolemey,
To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knives that smell of sweat: say, this becomes him.
(As his composure must be rare indeed,
Whom these things cannot blemish) yet must Antony
No way excuse his foils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill’d
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Fall’d on him for ‘t; but, to confound such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud
As his own state, and ours,—it’s to be chid
As we rate boys; who, being mature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.
Lep. Mess. Thy biddings have been done; and every man
Most noble Caesar, shalt thou have report
How ‘t is abroad. Pompey is strong at sea;
And it appears, he is belov'd of those,
That only have fear'd Caesar: to the fleets
The discontent repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Cæs. I should have known no less.

It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he, which is, was wish'd, until he were:
And the ebb'd man ne'er lov'd, till ne'er worth love,
Comes lov'd by being lack'd. This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, and lackeying the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mas. Caesar, I bring thee word,
Menocrates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them; which they ear and wound
With keels of every kind: many hot inroads
They make in Italy; the borders maritime
Lack blood to think on't, and flush youth revolt.
No vessel can peer forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen; for Pompey's name strikes more,
Than could his war resisted.

Cæs. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious vessels. When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirius and Panas, consul's, at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,
Though dauntly brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer: thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle,
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the roughest hedge;
Yes, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The bars of trees thou browsed'st: on the Alps
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on; and all this
(I wounds thine honour, that I speak it now)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pity of him.

Cæs. Let his shame hast quickly
Drive him to Rome. 'Tis time we twain
Did show ourselves i' the field: end, to that end,
Assemble we immediate council: Pompey
Thrive in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Caesar,
I shall be furnished to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To front this present time.

Cæs. Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord. What you shall know mean time
Of stir abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Cæs. Doubt not, sir; I knew it for my bond.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleó. Charmian!

Char. Madam, I trust, not so.

Cleo. Thou, enuch, Mardian—

Mar. What is your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing: I take no pleasure
Inauth'n an enuch has. 'Tis well for thee,
That, being unseem'd, thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do nothing.
But what in deed is honest to be done:
Yet have I fierce affections, and think
What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O, Charmian! Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?
Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?
O, happy horse to bear the weight of Antony!
Do bravely, horse, for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?
The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
And burgonet of men. — He's speaking now,
Or murmuring, "Where's my serpent of old Nile?
For so he calls me. Now I feed myself!
With most delicious poison—think on me,
That am with Phoebus' amorous pinches black,
And wrinkled deep in time? Broad-fronted Caesar,
When thou wast here above the ground, I was
A morsel for a monarch; and great Pompey
Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my brow:
There would he anchor his aspect, and die
With looking on his life.

Enter Alexandros.

Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail! Cleopatra!

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony;
Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
With his tinct gilded thee. —

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,
He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,—
This orient pearl:—his speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. Good friend, quoth he,
Say, "the firm Roman to great Egypt sends
This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot,
To mend the petty present, I will piece
Her opulent throne with kingdoms: all the east,"
Say thou, "shall call her mistress." So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arm-girl' steed.
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was boastfully dumb'd by him.

Cleo. What! was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the ex trones
Of hot and cold: he was nor sad, nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,
Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him
He was not sad, for he would shine on those
That make their looks by his: he was not merry,
Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
In Egypt with his joy: but between both:
O heavenly mingle!—Be st thou sad, or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes.
So does it no man else.—Mast'st thou my posts?

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers.

Cleo. Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day
When I forget to send to Antony,
Shall die a beggar.—Ink and paper, Charmian.—

Welcome, my good Alexas.—Did I, Charmian,
Eve/ love Caesar so?

Char. 3, that brave Caesar!

Cle. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!

Sav. the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Caesar!

Cle. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Caesar paragon again
My man of men

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
I sing but after you.

Cle. My salled days,
When I was green in judgment,—cold in blood,
To say as I said then!—But come, away:
Get me ink and paper;
He shall have every day a several greeting,
Or I'll unpeople Egypt.

[Exeunt]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Messina. A Room in Pompey's House.

Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Menas. Know, worthy Pompey, That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, decays
The thing we use for.

Menas. We, ignorant of ourselves, Be oft our own harms, which the wise powers
Deny us for our good; so find we profit
By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:
The people love me, and the sea is mine;
My powers are crescent, and my auguring hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sit at dinner, and will make
No wars without doors: Caesar gets money, where He loves hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd: but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

Men. Caesar and Lepidus
Are in the field: a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this? 't is false.

Men. From Silvius, sir.

Pom. He dreams: I know, they are in Rome together,
Looking for Antony. But all the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy warm' lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both:
Lay up the libertine in a flood of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming: Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloysterless sauce his appetite,
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till a Lethe'd dulness.—How now, Varrius!

Enter Varrius.

Var. This is most certain, that I shall deliver.
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected; since he went from Egypt, 't is
A space for farther travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd his helm
For such a petty war: his soldiership
Is twice the other twain. But let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er lust-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope,
Caesar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife that 's dead did trespasses to Caesar;
His brother war'd upon him, although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were 't not that we stand up against them all,

ACT II.
Scene II.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Cæs. I must be laugh'd at, If, or for nothing, or a little, I Should say myself offended; and with you Churlishly! the world: more laugh'd at, that I should Once name you derogately, when to sound your name It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Cæsar, What was't to you?

Cæs. No more than my residing here at Rome Might be to you in Egypt: yet, if you there Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practis'd? You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent, By what did here befall me. Your wife, and brother, Made wars upon me, and their contestation Was theme for you; you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business: my brother never Did urge me in his set: I did enquire it; And have my learning from some true reports, That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Diverge my authority with yours: And make the wars alike against my stomach, Having alike your cause? Of this my letters Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel, No matter whole you have to make it with, It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself: By laying defects of judgment to me; but You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so; not so; I know you could not lack, I am certain on't, Very necessity of this thought, that I, Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought, Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars Which fronted mine own peace. As for my wife, I would you had her spirit in such another: The third o' the world is yours, which with a snaffle, You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women!

Ant. So much unceivable, her garbois, Cæsar, Made out of her impatience, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too) I grieving grant, Did you too much disquiet: for that, you must But say, I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you, When rioting in Alexandria; you Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts Did give my misive out of audience. Sir, He fell upon me, ere admitted: then Three kings I had newly feast'd, and did want Of what I was i' the morning: but, next day, I told him of myself, which was as much As to have ask'd him pardon. Let this fellow Be: nothing of our strife: if we contend, Out of our question wipe him. You have broken The article of your oath, which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with. Soft, Cæsar.

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak: The honour's sacred which he talks on now, Supposing that I lack'd it. But on, Cæsar; The article of my oath.

Cæs. To lend me arms and aid when I requir'd them, The which you both denied. Neglected, rather; And then, when poison'd hours had bound me up From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may, I'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power Work without it. Truth is, that Fulvia, To have me out of Egypt, made wars here; For which myself, the ignorant motive, do So far ask pardon, as being mine honour To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken.

Mc. If it might please you, to enforce no farther The griefs between ye: to forget them quite, Were to remember that the present need Speaks to atone'-you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mæcænas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only: speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent I had almost forgot

Ant. You wrong this presence; therefore, speak no more.

Eno. Go to then; you considerate stone. Cæs. I do not much dislike the matter, but The manner of his speech; for it cannot be, We shall remain in friendship, our conditions So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge.

O' the world I would pursue it.

Agr. Give me leave, Cæsar,—

Cæs. Speak, Agrrippa.

Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side, Admir'd Octavia: great Mark Antony Is now a widower.

Cæs. Say not so, Agrrippa:

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof Were well deserved for rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar: let me hear Agrrippa farther speak.

Agr. To hold you in perpetual amity, To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts With an unsliping knot, take Antony Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims No worse a husband than the best of men, Whose virtue and whose general graces speak That which none else can utter. By this marriage, All little jealousies, which now seem great, And all great fears, which now import their dangers, Would then be nothing: truths would be tales, Where now half tales be truths: her love to both, Would, each to other, and all loves to both, Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke, For 'tis a studied, not a present thought, My duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak?

Cæs. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd: With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrrippa If I would say, "Agrrippa, be it so,"

To make this good?

Cæs. The power of Cæsar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never To this good purpose, that so fairly shows, Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand: Further this act of grace, and from this hour, The hearts of brothers govern in our loves,
And sway our great designs.

_Caes._ There is my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother _Ant. takes it._
Did ever love so dearly: let her live
To join our kingdoms, and our hearts; and never Fly o'er our loves again!

_Lep._ Happily, amen.

_Ant._ I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst Pompey:
For he hath' laid strange courtesies, and great,
O! late upon me: I must thank him, only
Least any remembrances suffer ill report;
At heel of that, defy him.

_Lep._ Time calls upon us:
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

_Ant._ Where lies he?
_Caes._ About the Mount Misenum.

_Ant._ What's his strength?

_Lep._

_Caes._ Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

_Ant._ So is the fame.
Would we had spoke together! Hast we for it;
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despacht we
The business we have talk'd of.

_Caes._ With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I'll lead you.

Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

_Lep._ Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish.

_Exeunt Caes, Antony, and Lepidus.

_Mec._ Welcome from Egypt, sir.

_Eno._ Half the heart of Caesar, worthy Mecenas!—
my honourable friend, Agrippa!—

_Agr._ Good Enobarbus!

_Mec._ We have cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested. You stay'd well by it in Egypt.

_Eno._ Ay, sir: we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

_Mec._ Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true?

_Eno._ This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had more much monstrous matter of feast, which worthy deserved noting.

_Mec._ She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.

_Eno._ When she first met Mark Antony, she purr'd up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

_Agr._ There she appeared indeed, or my reporter
devis'd well for you.

_Eno._ I will tell you.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purpl'd the sails, and so perfumed, that
The winds were love-sick with them: the oars were silver;
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
It beggar'd all description: she did lie
In her pavilion, (cloth of gold and* tissue)
Over-picturing that Venus, where we see,
The fancy out-work nature: on each side her,
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With the same countenance: whose wind did seem
To blow* the delicate cheeks which they did cool,

And what they undid, did.

_Ogr._ O, rare for Antony!

_Eno._ Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings: at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackle
Smell* with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely* frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enroth'd in the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

_Agr._ Rare Egyptian!

_Eno._ Upon her landing Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she replied,
It should be better he became her guest,
Which she entreated. Our courteous Antony,
Whom neither the word of "No!" woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only.

_Royal wench! She made great Caesar lay his sword to bed;
He plough'd her, and she cropped._

_Eno._ I saw her ones
Hop forty paces through the public street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,
That she did make defect perfection.
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

_Mec._ Now Antony must leave her utterly.

_Eno._ Never; he will not.
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appetites they feed, but she makes hungry,
Where most she satisfies; for viler things
Become themselves in her, that the holy priests
Bless her when she is riggish.

_Mec._ If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony. Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

_Agr._ Let us go.—

Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest,
Whilst you abide here.

_Eno._ Humbly, sir, I thank you.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in Caesar's House.

_Enter Cesar, Antony, Octavia between them;
Attendants._

_Ant._ The world, and my great office, will sometimes
Divide me from your bosom.

_Octa._ All which time,
Before the gods my knee shall bow with prayers
To them for you.

_Ant._ Good night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square, but that to come
Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.

_Good night, sir._

_Caes._ Good night.

[Exeunt Caesar and Octavia.

_Enter a Soothsayer._

_Ant._ Now, sirrah: you do wish yourself in Egypt Sooth. Would I had never come from thence, as you tither!

_Ant._ If you can, your reason?

_Sooth._ I see it in my motion, have it let in my tongue: but yet hit you to Egypt again.
SCENE V.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Ant. Say to me, whose fortune shall rise higher, Caesar's, or mine?

Sooth. Caesar's.

Therefore, O Antony! stay not by his side: Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable, Where Caesar's is not; but near him thy angel Becomes afeard, as being o'erpow'rd: therefore, Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee; so more, but when to thee. If thou dost play with him at any game, Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck, He beats thee 'gainst the odds: thy lustre thickens, When he shines by. I say again, thy spirit Is all afraid to govern thee near him, But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone:
Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him. —

[Ereunt Soothsayer.

He shall to Parthia. — Be it art, or hazard. He hath spoken true: the very dice obey him; And in our sport my better cunning faints Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speedeth: His looks do win the battle still of mine, When it is all to nought; and his quails ever Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt; And though I make this marriage for my peace, Enter Ventidius,

I' the east my pleasure lies. — O! come, Ventidius, You must to Parthia: your commission's ready; Follow me, and receive it.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — The Same. — A Street.

Enter Lepidus, Mecenas, and Agrrippa.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no farther: pray you, hasten Your generals after.

Agr. Sir, Mark Antony Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress, Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. As I conceive the journey, be at Mount* Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter; My purposes do draw me much about: You'll win two days upon me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Alexandria. — A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, moody food Of us that trade in love.

Attend. The music, ho!

Enter Mardian.

Cleo. Let it alone; let's to billiards: come, Charmian. Char. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an enuch play'd, As with a woman. — Come, you'll play with me, sir? Mar. As well as I can, madam. [too short.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though 'tis come The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now.— Give me mine angle,—we'll to the river: there, My music playing far off. I will betray Tawny-fin'd' fishes; my bended hook shall pierce Their slippery jaws, and as I draw them up, I'll think them every one an Antony, And say, Ah, ha! you're caught.

1 a fear: in f. e. 2 Mt. Missam. * Tawny-fin'd: in folio Theobald made the change. 3 Enter a Messenger: in f. e.
Smarting in lingering pickle.

Mess. Gracious madam,
I, that do bring the news, made not the match.

Cleo. Say, 'tis not so, a province I will give thee,
And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hastad
Shall make thy peace for moving me to rage;
And I will boot thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue! thou hast liv'd too long. [Draws a Knife.

Mess. Nay, then I'll run—

What mean you, madam? I have made no fault. [Exit Char.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself:
The man is innocent.

[Cleo. Some innocents 'scape not the thunder-bolt.—
Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents—Call the slave again;
Though I am mad, I will not bite him.—Call. Char. He is afeard to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him—

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, sir.

Re-enter Ellis, the Messenger.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news: give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell
Themselves, when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worse than I do,
If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O! I would, thou must,

So half my Egypt were submers'd, and made
A cistern for sea snakes. Go, get thee hence:
Hast thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. Take no offence, that I would not offend you:
To punish me for what you make me do,
Seems much unequal. He is married to Octavia.

Cleo. O! that his fault should make a knave of thee,
That art not! What! thou'st sure of?—Get thee hence!
The merchandise which thou hast brought from Rome,
Are all too dear for me: lie they upon thy hand,
And be undone by 'em! [Exit Messenger.

Char. Good your highness', patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony, I have displeas'd Caesar.

Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo. I am paid for 't now.

Lead me from hence;
I faint.—O Laos! Charmian!—'Tis no matter.—
Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him
Report the feature of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her hair: bring me word quickly.—

Exit Alexas.

Let him for ever go?—let him not—Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other way he's a Mars.—Bid you Alexas,

[To MARDIAN. Bring me word, how tall she is—Pity me, Charmian,
But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.

[Exit.]
SCENE VII.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Ant. The beds i’ the east are soft; and thanks to you,
That call’d me timelier than my purpose hither,
For I have gain’d by it.

Cas. Since I saw you last, there is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not what counts harsh fortune casts upon my face,
But in my bosom she never come,
To make my heart her vessel.

Lep. Well met here.

Pom. I hope so; Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed.
I crave, our composition may be written,
And seal’d between us.

Cas. That’s the next to do.

Pom. We’ll feast each other ere we part; and let us draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the lot; but, first
Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery
Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Caesar Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then, so much have I heard:
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—

Eno. No more of that;—he did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Caesar in a mattress.

Pom. I know thee now: how far’st thou, soldier?

Eno. Well; and well am I like to do; I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand:
I never hated thee. I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir, I never lov’d you much; but I have prais’d you,
When you have well deserved ten times as much
As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.——
Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Cas. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom. [Exeunt POMPEY, CAESAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, Soldiers and Attendants.

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne’er have made this treaty.—[Aside.]—You and I have known, sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me;
though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes; something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: if our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men’s faces are true, whatsoever their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

ENO. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep it back again.

Men. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here: pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Caesar’s sister is call’d Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray you, sir?

Eno. ‘Tis true.

Men. Then is Caesar, and he, for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think, the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too: but you shall find, the band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity. Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: then, shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Caesar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is: he married but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come; let’s away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—On Board Pompey’s Galley, lying near Misenum.

Music. Enter two or three Servants, with a Banquet.

1 Serv. Here they’ll be, man. Some o’ their plants are ill-rooted already; the least wind i’ the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink.

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, “No more!” reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men’s fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service, as a partisan I could not have.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in’t, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A Sennet sounded. Enter CAESAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, AGrippa, MECENAS, ENOBARBUS, Menas, with other Captains.

Ant. Thus do they, sir. [To CAESAR.] They take the sail of the Nile.

By certain scales i’ the pyramid: they know,
By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if deareth,
Or poison’d follow. The higher Nilus swells
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred, now, of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.
Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine!—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll never out.

Eno. Not till you have slept: I fear me, you'll be in, till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard, the Ptolemies' pyramids are very good things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. [Aside.] Pompey, a word.

Pom. [Aside.] Say in mine ear: what is't?

Men. [Aside.] Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee.

And hear me speak a word. [Captain, Pom. [Aside.] Forbear me till anon.—

This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself, and it is as broad as it hath breadth; it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs; it lives by that which nourisheth it, and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so; and the tears of it are wet.

Cas. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [To Menas, aside.] Go, hang, sir, hang! Tell me of that, away!

Do as I bid you.—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. [Aside.] If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear.

Rise from thy stool. [me.

Pom. [Aside.] I think, thou'rt mad. The matter?

[Walks aside.

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith. What's else to say?—

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus,

Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world? That's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it,

And though thou think me poor, I am the man

Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove: What'er the ocean pales, or sky inclines,

Is thine, if thou wilt have 't.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competitors,

Are in thy vessel: let me cut the cable;

And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:

All then is thine.

Pom. Ah! this thou shouldest have done,

And not have spoken on't. In me, 'tis villainy;

In thee, 't had been good service. Thou must know,

'T is not my profit that does lead mine honour,

Mine honour it. Repent, that ever thy tongue

Hath so betray'd thine act: being done unknown,

I should have found it afterwards well done,

But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. [Aside.] For this,

I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more.

Who drinks, and will not take, when once 'tis offer'd,

Shall never find it more.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Plain in Syria.

Ent. Ventidius, as it were in triumph, with Silvius, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead Body of Pacificus borne before him.

Ven. Now, daring Parthia, art thou struck; and now Pless'd fortune doest of Marcus Crassus' death Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body Before our army.—Thy Pacificus, Orodes, Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius, Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm, The fugitive Parthians follow: spur through Media, Mesopotamia, and the shepherds whither The routed fly: so thy grand captain, Antony, Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius! I have done enough: a lower place, note well, May make too great an act; for learn this, Silius, Better to leave undone, than by our deeds acquire Too high a fame, when him we serve's away. Caesar and Antony have ever won More in their officer, than person: Sossius, One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant, For quick accumulation of renown, Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour. Who does i't the wars more than his captain can, Becomes his captain's captain; and ambition, The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss, Than gain which darkens him.

I could do more to do Antonius good, But 't is would offend him; and in his offence Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier, and his sword, Gains scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony? Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name, That magical word of war, we have effected; How, with his banners and his well-paid ranks, The ner-er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now? Ven. He purposeth to Athens; whiter, with what haste The weight we must convey with us will permit, We shall appear before him.—On, there! pass along.

[Exeunt.

Enter Agrrippa, and Enobarbus, meeting.

Agr. What! are the brothers parted?

Eno. They have despatch'd with Pompey: he is gone:

The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps
To part from Rome; Caesar is sad; and Lepidus, Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled
With the green sickness.

Agr. 'T is a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one. O, how he loves Caesar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark Antony!

Eno. Spake you of Caesar? How! the nonpareil!

Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!

Eno. Would you praise Caesar, say,—Caesar;—go no farther.

Agr. Indeed, he ply'd them both with exorbitant praises.

Eno. But he loves Caesar best;—yet he loves Antony. Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, harps, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho! His love to Antony. But as for Caesar, Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his shar'ds, and he their beetle.

So,—[Trumpets

This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrrippa.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, and Octavia.

Ant. No farther, sir.

Cae. You take from me a great part of myself;

Use me well in 't.—Sister, prove such a wife As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest band Shall pass on thy approbation.—Most noble Antony, Let not the piece of virtue, which is set Betwixt us as the cement of our love, To keep it builded, be the ram to batter The fortress of it; for better might we Have loved without this mean, if on both parts This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended In your distrust.

Cae. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find, Though you be therein curious, the least cause For what you seem to fear. So, the gods keep you, And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends. We will here part.

Cae. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirit all of comfort! fare thee well.

Oct. My noble brother!—

Ant. The April's in her eyes; it is love's spring, And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.

Oct. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—

Cae. What, Octavia?

Oct. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart inform her tongue; the swan's down feathers That stands upon the swell at the full of tide, And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Caesar weep? [Aside to Agrrippa.

Agr. He has a cloud in his face.

Eno. He was the worse for that, were he a horse; So is he, being a man.

Agr. Why, Enobarbus, When Antony found Julius Caesar dead, He cried almost to roaring; and he wept, When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound, he wail'd: Believe 't, till I weep too.

Cae. No, sweet Octavia, You shall hear from me still; the time shall not Outgo my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come; I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love.
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.
Cas. Adieu; be happy.
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!
Cas. Farewell farewell. [Kisses OCTAVIA.
Ant. Farewell [Trumpets sound. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEX.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?
Alex. Half a sea-fear to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to.—Come hither, sir.
Enter Enist, the Messenger.

Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: but how, when Antony is gone,
Through whom I might command it?—Come thou near.

Cleo. Most gracious majesty,— Octavia?
Mess. Ay, dread queen.
Cleo. Where?
Mess. Madam, in Rome.

I look'd her in the face; and saw her lod
Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?
Mess. She is not, madam.
Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongu'd, or low?
Mess. Madam, I heard her speak: she is low-voic'd.
Cleo. That's not so good: he cannot like her long.
Char. Like her? O Isis! 'tis impossible.
Cleo. I think so, Charismatic: dull of tongue, and dwarfish!—

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.
Mess. Her action and her station are as one:
She shows a body rather than a life;
A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?
Mess. Or I have no observance.

Char. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing,
I do perceive 't.—There's nothing in her yet.—
The fellow has good judgment.
Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I pr'ythee.

Mess. Madam,
She was a widow.

Cleo. Widow?—Charismatic, hark.
Mess. And I do think, she's thirty.
Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? 's t' long, or round?
Mess. Round, even to faultiness.
Cleo. For the most part, too, they are foolish that are so.—
Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam; and her forehead
As low as you could wish it.

Cleo. There's gold for thee:
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
I will employ thee back again: I find thee
Most fit for business. Go, make thee ready;
Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit Messenger.

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much,
That I so harr'd him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.
Char. Nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.
Char. Hath he seen majesty? Is he else defend,
And serving you so long?

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, god
Charismatic:
But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
Where I will write. All may be well enough.
Char. I will warrant you, madam. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Athens. A Room in Antony's House.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that.—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import.—but he hath wagg'd
New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read a
To public ear.
Spoke scantily of me: when perforce he could not
But pay me terms of honour, coldly and sickly
He ventured them; most narrow measure lett me.
When the best hint was given him, he but look'd,
Or did it from his teeth.

Oct. O, my good lord!
Believe not all: or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Praying for both parts:
The good gods will mock me presently,
When I shall pray, "O, bless my lord and husband!"
Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
"O, bless my brother!" Husband win, win brother,
Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks Best to preserve it. If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,
Yourself shall go between us: the mean time, lady,
I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall stay your brother. Make your soonest haste:
So, your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.
The Jove of power make me most weak: most weak,
Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would be;
As if the world should cleave, and that slain man
Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going:
Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter ENOBARBUS and EROS, meeting.

Eno. How now, friend Eros?
Eros. There is strange news come, sir.

Eno. What, man?

Eros. Caesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old: what is the success?

Eros. Caesar, having made use of him in the war
'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry, would not let him partake in the glory of the action; and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him:
so the poor third is up till death enlarge his confines.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of shapes, no
more;
And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind each other. Where is Antony?

Eno. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurns
The rush that lies before him: cries, "'Fool, Lepidius!"
And threatens the throat of that his officer,
That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.

Eno. For Italy, and Caesar. More, Domitius;
My lord desires you presently: my news
I must have told after.

Eno. 'Twill be naught;
But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eno. Come, sir.  [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Room. A Room in Caesar's House.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas.

Caes. Contemning Rome, he has done all this, and
In Alexandria: here's the manner of it. [more,
I'm the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd: at their feet sat
Ceresian, whom they call my father's son,
And all the unlawful issue, that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the 'stablishment of Egypt; made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,
Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye?

Caes. I'll the common show-place, where they exercise.
His sons he there* proclaim'd the kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia,
He gave to Alexander; to Tmolus he assign'd
Syria, Cilicia, and Phoenicia. She
In the habitaments of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience,
As 'tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus

Inform'd.

Agr. Who, queasy with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.

Caes. The people know it; and have now receiv'd
His accusations.

Agr. Whom does he accuse?

Caes. Caesar; and, that, having in Sicily
Sexus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part o' the isle: then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unrestor'd: lastly, he frets,
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Caes. 'Tis done already, and a messenger gone.
I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he his high authority abuse'd,
And did deserve his change: for what I have conquer'd,
I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I
Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Caes. Nor must not, then, be yielded to in this.

Enter Octavia, with her Train.

Oct. Hail, Caesar, and my lord! hail, most dear Caesar!

Caes. That ever I should call thee cast-away!

Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause

Caes. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You

Come not

Like Caesar's sister: the wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way,
Should have borne men, and expectation faint'd.
Longing for what it had not; nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Rais'd by your populous troops. But you are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left unsown,
Is often held unlov'd: we should have met you
By sea and land, supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
Of my free-will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My grieved ear withal; whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Caes. Which soon he granted,

Being an abstrect* 'tween his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord.

Caes. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.

Where is he now?

Caes. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra
Hath nodded him to her: he hath given his empire
Up to a whore: they are now levying
The kings o' the earth for war. He hath assembled
Bocchus, the king of Lybia; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, king
Of Paphgallonia; the Thracian king, Adallas:
King Malthas of Arabia; king of Pont;
Herod of Jewry: Mithridates, king
Of Comagene: Ptolemon and Amintas,
The kings of Meda, and Lyconia,
With a more larger list of scep'tres.

Oct. Ah me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other!

Caes. Welcome hither.

Your letters did withhold our breaking forth,
Till we perceiv'd, both how you were wrong'd,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart:
Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities;
But let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unwavell'd their way. Welcome to Rome;
Nothing more dear to me. You are abuse'd
Beyond the mark of thought; and the high gods,
To do you justice, make his ministers
Of us and those that love you. Best of comfort;
And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you:
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment* to a trull,
That noises it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?

Caes. Most certain. Sister, welcome: pray you,
Be ever known to patience. My dearst sister!

SCENE VII.—Antony’s Camp, near the Promontory of Actium.

Enter Cleopatra and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why?

Cleo. Thou hast forspoke my being in these wars,
And say’st, it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it?

Cleo. If not denounced’st against us, why should not we
Be then in person?

Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply:—
If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely lost; the mares would bear
A soldier, and his horse.

Cleo. What is’t you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from’t time,
What should not then be spar’d. He is already Traduc’d for levity; and ’tis said in Rome,
That Phoebus an enmune, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear in’t war,
And as the president of my kingdom will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done
Here comes the emperor.

Enter Antony and Caiusidus.

Ant. Is ‘t not strange, Caiusidus,
That from Tarentum, and Brundusium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in’ Toryne?—You have heard on ’t, sweet?

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir’d,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good robeck,
Which might have well become the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Caiusidus, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! what else?

Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to’t.

Eno. So hath my lord dar’d him to single fight.

Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia,
Where Caesar fought with Pompey; but these offers,
Which serve not for his vantage, he shokes off,
And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann’d;
Your mariners are mutiners, respers, people
In good’st by swift impress; in Caesar’s fleet
Are those, that often have ’gainst Pompey fought.
Their ships are yare, yours heavy: no disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar’d for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.

Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark’d footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance, and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I’ll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sails, Caesar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn,
And with the rest, full-mann’d, from the head of Actium

With very ignorance: we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Ero. How appears the fight?

Scarr. On our side like the token'd pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yond' ribald hag of Egypt,
Whom leprosy o'ertake! i' the midst o' the fight,—
When vantage, like a pair of twins, appear'd
Both as the same, of rather ours the elder; —
The brace² upon her like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

Ero. That I beheld:
Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Endure a further view.

Scarr. She once being loof'd,
The noble ruin of her magic. Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and like a doting mallard,
Leaving the flight in height, flies after her.
I never saw an action of such shame:
Experience, manhood, honour, n'er before
Did violate so itself.

Ero. Alack, alack!

Enter CAMIDUS.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
O! he has given example for our flight,
Most grossly, by his own.

Ero. Ay, are you thereabouts? Why then, good night.
Indeed.

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.
Scarr. 'T is easy to't; and there I will attend
What further can.

Can. To Caesar will I render
My legions, and my horse: six kings already
Show me the way of yielding.

Ero. I'll yet follow
The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason
Sits in the wind against me.

SCENE IX.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY, and Attendants.

Ant. Hark! the land bids me tread no more upon 't;
It is shabam'd to bear me.—Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever.—I have a ship
 Laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly,
And make your peace with Caesar.

Att. Fly! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself, and have instructed cowards
To run, and show their shoulders.—Friends, be gone;
I have myself resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:
My treasure 'e in the harbour, take it.—O!
I follow'd that I blunt to look upon:
My very hairs do mutiny; for the white
Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them
For fear and doting.—Friends, be gone: you shall Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of lothness: take the hint
Which my despair proclaims; let that be left
Which you do itself: to the sea-side straightway:
will possess of that ship and treasure.
Leave me, I pray, a little; 'pray you now:
'Say, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command,
Therefore, I pray you. I'll see you by and by.

[Empire down.

Enter EROS, and CLEOPATRA, led by CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him; comfort him.

IRAS. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do! Why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit down.—O Juno!

Ant. No, no, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir?

Ant. O fie, fie, fie!

Char. Madam.—

IRAS. Madam: O good empress!—

Eros. Sir, sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes.—He, at Philippi, kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended: he alone
Dealt on lieutenant, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war; yet now—No arrter.

Cleo. Ah! stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

IRAS. Go to him, madam, speak to him:
He is unqualified with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—sustain me:—O!
Eros. Most noble sir, arise; the queen approaches
Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her; but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation

By most unnonable servering.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O! whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See,

By looking back what I have left behind
'Stroyd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord!
Forgive my fearful sails: I little thought,
You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well
My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings,
And thou shouldest tow me after: o'er my spirit
Thy full supremacy thou knew'st, and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods
Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon!

Ant. Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lowness, who
With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd,
Making, and marring fortunes. You did know,
How much you were my conqueror; and that
My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon!

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say: one of them rates
All that is won and lost. Give me a kiss:
Even this repays me.—We sent our schoolmaster;
Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead.
Some wine, within there, and our viands!—Fortune knows,

We scour her most when most she offers blows. [Exeunt

SCENE X.—CEASAR'S Camp in Egypt.

Enter Cesar, DOLABELLA, THYREUS, and others.

Ces. Let him appear that's come from Antony.

Dol. Know you him?

Cesar. 'tis his schoolmaster:

An argument that he is plague'd, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing,
Which had superfetuous wings for messengers,
Not many moons gone by.

Enter EUPHRONIUS.

Ces. Approach, and speak.

Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea.

_Cas._ Be it so. Declare thine office.

_Eup._ Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt; which not granted,
He lessens his requests, and to thee succs
To let him breathe between the heavens and earth,
A private man in Athens: this for him.

Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness,
Submits her to thy might, and of thee charms
The circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs,
Now hazarded to thy grace.

_Cas._ For Antony,
I have no ears to his request. The queen
Of audience, nor desire, shall fail: so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,
Or take his life there: this if she perform,
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

_Eup._ Fortune pursue thee!

_Cas._ Bring him through the bands.

_[Exit Euphronius._

To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time; despacht.
From Antony win Cleopatra: promise, _[To Thyret._
And in our name, what she requires; add more,
From thine invention, offers. Women are not
In their best fortunes strong, but want willjurge
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Try thy cunning, Thyreus;
Make thine own effect for thy pains, which we
Will answer as a law.

_Thyr._ Cleopatra, I go.

_Cas._ Observe how Antony becomes his flaw,
And what thou think'st his very action speaks
In every power that moves.

_Thyr._ Cleopatra, I shall. _[Exit._

_SCENE XI._—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

_Enter Cleopatra, Eobabrus, Charmian, and Iras._

_Cleo._ What shall we do, Eobabrus?

_Eno._ Think, and die.

_Cleo._ Is Antony, or we, in fault for this?

_Eno._ Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other, why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his cap'tainship; at such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The mooted' question. 'T was a shame, no less
Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazling.

_Cleo._ Pr'ythee, peace.

_[Enter Antony, with Euphrasius._

_Ant._ Is that his answer?

_Eup._ Ay, my lord.

_Ant._ The queen shall then have courtesy, so she
Will yield us up.

_Eup._ He says so.

_Ant._ Let her know it.—
To the boy Caesar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.

_Cleo._ That head, my lord?

_Ant._ To him again. Tell him, he wears the rose
Of youth upon him, from which the world should note
Something particular: his coin, ships, legions.
May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail
Under the service of a child, as soon

As i' the command of Caesar: I dare him, therefore,
To lay his gay comparisons apart,
And answer me declin'd; sword against sword,
Ourselves alone. I'll write it: follow me.

_[Exeunt Antony and Euphronius._

_Eno._ Yes, like enough, high-battled Caesar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd t' the show
Against a sworder.—I see, men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward
Do draw the inward qualities after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,
Knowing all miseries, the full Caesar will Answer his emptiness!—Caesar, thou hast subdu'd
His judgment too.

_Enter an Attendant._

_Ant._ A messenger from Caesar.

_Cleo._ What, no more ceremony?—See, my women!—
Against the blown rose may they step their nose,
That kneel'd unto the bud.—Admit him, sir.

_Eno._ Mine honesty and I begin to square. _[Aside.
The loyalty well held to fools does make
Our faith mere folly: yet he, that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i' the story.

_[Enter Thyret._

_Cleo._ Caesar's will?

_Thyr._ Hear it apart.

_Cleo._ None but friends: say boldly
_Thyr._ So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

_Eno._ Ho needs as many, air, as Caesar has,
Or needs not us. If Caesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: for us, you know,
Whose he is, we are, and that's Caesar's.

_Thyr._—So,—
Thus then, thou most renown'd: Caesar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st,
Farther then he is Caesar.

_Cleo._ Go on: right royal.

_Thyr._ He knows, that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you feard him.

_Cleo._ O!

_Thyr._ The scars upon your honour, therefore, he does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserv'd.

_Cleo._ He is a god, and knows
What is most right. Mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

_Eno._ _[Aside._ To be sure of that,
I will ask Antony.—Sir, thou 'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee. _[Exit Eobabrus._

_Thyr._ Shall I say to Caesar
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desir'd to give. It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon; but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from you you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud, who is
The universal landlord.

_Cleo._ What's your name?

_Thyr._ My name is Thyreus.

_Cleo._ Most kind messenger
Say to great Caesar, that in reputation
I kiss his conqu'ring hand: tell him, I am prompt
To lay my crown at 's feet, and there to kneel.
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.
Thy. 'Tis your noblest course.
Wisdom and fortune combating together;
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cle. Your Caesar's father oft,
When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses. [Thy. kisses her hand.]

Re-enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Re-enter Antony and Enobarbas.
Favourites, by Jove that thunders! —
What art thou, fellow?
Thy. One, that but performs
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there. — Ah, you kite! — Now gods and devils! Authority melts from me: of late, when I cry'd, "ho!"
Like boys unto a mus'ns. kings would start forth,
And cry, "Your will? — Have you no ears? I am

Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars!
Whip him. — Were 't twenty of the greatest tributaries
That do acknowledge Caesar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of—she here, what's her name,
Since she was Cleopatra? — Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.

Thy. Mark Antony, —

Ant. Tug him away: being whipp'd,
Bring him again. — The Jack of Caesar shall Sear us an errand to him. — [Exit Attend. with Thyreas.]

You were half blasted ere I knew you: ha!
Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
And by a gem of women, to be abused
By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever: —

But when in our viciousness grow hard,
O misery on 't! the wise gods see![i.e. eyes,
our own skill drive our clear judgments; make us
Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. O! is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel, cold upon
Cæsar's trencher: nay, you were a fragment
Of Cneius Pompey's: besides what hotter hours,
'register'd in vulgar fame, you have
Luxuriously pick'd out; for, I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should be,
you know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And say, "God quit you!" be familiar with
My playfellow, your hand; that kingly seal,
And plighter of high hearts! — O! that I were
Upon the hill of Basan, to out roar
He habited herd, for I have savage cause;
And to proclaim it civilly were like
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank
Or being yare about him.

Re-enter Attendants, with Thyreas.

The whipp'd?

1 Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Tid'ry he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Att. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry
To follow Caesar in his triumph, since
Thou hast been whipp'd for following him: henceforth
The white hand of a lady fever thee:
Shake but to look on 't. Get thee back to Caesar,
Tell him thy entertainment: look, thou say,
He makes me angry with him; for he seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. He makes me angry,
And at this time most easy 't is to do 't,
When my good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abyss of hell. If he dislike
My speech, and what is done, tell him, he has Hipparchus, my enfanchis'd bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quiet me. Urge it thou:
Haste, with thy stripes! begone! [Exit Thyreas.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack! our terebre moon
Is now eclips'd, and it portends alone
The fall of Antony.

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Cold-hearted toward me?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear! if it be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,
And poison it in the source, and the first stone
Drop in my neck: as it determines, so
Disolve my life! The next Cassarion amite,
Till by degrees the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the discandying of this pettified storm,
Lie graceless, till the flies and gnats of Nile
Have barried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cæsar sits down in Alexandria, where
I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
Hath nobly held; our sev'rd navy, too,
Have knit again, a fleet threat'ning most seawise.
Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear
Lady?

If from the field I shall return once more
To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
And my sword will earn our chronicle:
There's hope in't yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine hours
Were nice and luxury, men did ransom lives
Of me for jests; but now I'll set my teeth,
And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
Let's have one other gaudy night.—Call to me
All my sad captives: fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday:
I had thought to have held it poor; but since my lord
Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captives to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and to-night I'll [force]

Queen;

The wine peep through their scars.—Come on, my

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Cæsar’s Camp at Alexandria.
Enter Cæsar, reading a Letter; Agrippa, Mecenas, and others.

Cæs. He calls me boy, and chides, as he had power
To beat me out of Egypt; my messenger
He hath whipp’d with rods, dares me to personal combat,
Cæsar to Antony: let the old ruffian know
I have many other ways to die; mean time,
Laugh at his challenges.
McC. Cæsar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he’s hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot of his distraction: never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight. Within our files there are,
Of those that serv’d Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it done;
And feast the army: we have store to do’t,
And they have earn’d the waste.—Poor Antony!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter Antony, Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, Iras, Alexas, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius?

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I’ll fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Woot thou fight well?
Eno. I’ll strike; and cry, ‘Take all.’

Ant. Well said; come on.—
Call forth my household servants: let’s to-night.

[Enter Servants.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest:—so hast thou—
Thou, and thou,—and thou:—you have serv’d me
And kings have been your fellows.

Cle. What means this?

Eno. ’T is one of those odd tricks, which sorrow shoots
Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.
I wish I could be made so many men,
And all of you clapp’d up together in
An Antony, that I might do you service,
So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night;
Scant nor my cups, and make as much of me,
As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffer’d my command.

1 is: in folio.

Cleos. What does he mean?

Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night:
May be, it is the period of your duty:
Haply, you shall not see me more; or if,
A mangled shadow: perchance, to-morrow
You’ll serve another master. I look on you,
As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends
I turn you not away; but, like a master
Married to your good service, stay till death.
Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield you for’t!

Eno. What mean you, sir?
To give them this discomfort? Look, they weep.
And I, an ass, am onion-eyed: for shame,
Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!
Now, the witch take me, if I meant it thus.
Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense,
For I spake to you for your comfort; did desire, you
To burn this night with torches. Know, my hearts,
I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you,
Where rather I expect victorious life,
Than death and honour. Let’s to supper; come,
And drown consideration.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before the Palace.
Enter Two Soldiers, to their Guard.

1 Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow is the day.

2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well
Hear you of nothing strange about the streets?

1 Sold. Nothing. What news?

2 Sold. Belike, it is but a rumour. Good night to you.

1 Sold. Well, sir, good night.

[Enter Two other Soldiers.

2 Sold. Soldiers, have careful watch.

3 Sold. And you. Good night, good night.

[The first Two place themselves at their Posts.

4 Sold. Here we: [They take their Posts.] and if to-morrow
Our masters thrive, I have an absolute hope
Our landmen will stand up.

3 Sold. ’T is a brave army,
And full of purpose.

[Music of Haultboys under the Stage.

4 Sold. Peace! what noise?

1 Sold. List, list! It

2 Sold. Hark!

1 Sold. Music in the air.

2 Sold. Under the earth.

3 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signifies, does it not?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace! I say. What should this mean?

2 Sold. ’T is the god Hercules, who Antony lov’d.

Now leaves him.

1 Sold. Walk; let’s see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do. [They advance to another Part.]
Ant. Would thou, and those thy scars, had once prevail'd
To make me fight at land!
Sold. Hadst thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels.
Ant. Who's gone this morning?
Sold. Who
One ever near thee: call for Enobarbus,
He shall not hear thee; or from Caesar's camp
Say, "I am none of thine."
Ant. What say'st thou?
Sir,
He is with Caesar.
Eros.
Sir, his chests and treasure
He has not with him.
Ant. Is he gone?
Sold. Most certain.
Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it:
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Write to him
(I will subscribe) gentle adieu, and greetings:
Say, that I wish he never find more cause
To change a master. — O! my fortunes have Corrupted honest men: — despatch. — Enobarbus!
[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Caesar's Camp before Alexandria.
Flourish. Enter Caesar, with Agrippa, Enobarbus,
and others.
Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight.
Our will is, Antony be took alive;
Make it so known.
Agripp. Caesar, I shall.
[Exit Agrippa.
Cæs. The time of universal peace is near:
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world
Shall bear the olive freely.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Antony
Is come into the field.
Cæs. Go; charge Agrippa
Plant those that have revolted in the rear,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself.
[Exit all but Enobarbus.
Eno. Alexa did revolt, and went to Jewry on Affairs of Antony; there did persuade
Great Herod to incline himself to Caesar,
And leave his master Antony: for this pains
Caesar hath hang'd him. Candidus, and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.
[Exit Enerbus.
Enter a Soldier of Caesar's.
Sold. Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus: the messenger
Came on my guard, and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.
Eno. I give it you.
Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus,
I tell ye true: best you had sent the bringer
Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove.
[Exit Soldier.
Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most.—O Antony!
Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid

1 things: in f. a. 9 This and the previous speech, are printed as one in the folio. Hammett made the change. 8 f. a. give these words to CLEOPATRA. 4 hear: in f. a. 4 Earnell Caesar and Train: in f. a. 8 Made safe.
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my heart:
If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrive thought: but thought will do't, I feel.
I fight against thee?—No: I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Field of Battle between the Camps.

Alarum. Drums and Trumpets. Enter Agrippa, and others.

Agr. Retire; we have engag'd ourselves too far.
Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Antony, and Scærus wounded.

Scæ. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!
'Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads. [Shouts afar off.

Ant. Thou bleed'st at pace.

Scæ. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scæ. We shall beat 'em into bench-holes. I have yet
Room for six scotches more. [Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

Ant. Let us score their backs,
And match 'em up, as we take hares, behind: 'T is sport to mail a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scæ. I'll halt after. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Under the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. Enter Antony, marching; Scærus, and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp. Run one before,
And let the queen know of our gists. To-morrow,
Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all,
For doughty-minded are you: and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as it had been
Each man's, like mine: you have shown all Hector.
Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss
The honour'd shades whole.—Give me thy hand:
Enter Cleopatra, attended.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee.—O, thou day o' the world!
Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness to my heart, and there
Ride on the panto triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords! O infinite virtue! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaged?

Ant. My nightingale,
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl! though grey
Do something mingle with our younger brown; yet have we
A bain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man;

[Pointing to Scærus.]

Commend unto his lips thy fav'ring hand:—
Kiss it, my warrior:—he hath fought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had
Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold; it was a king's.
Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncle
Like glowing Phebus' car.—Give me thy hand.
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our haekd't targets like the men that owe them.
Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together,
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines,
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together
Appealing our approach. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Caesar's Camp.

Sentinels on their Post. Enter Enobarbus.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard. The night
Is shiny, and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was A shrewd one to us. Eno. O! bear me witness, night,—

3 Sold. What man is this?

2 Sold. Stand close, and list him.
Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon!
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear basefull memory, poor Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent.

1 Sold. Enobarbus!

3 Sold. Peace! Hark farther.

Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy!
The poisonous damp of night dispone upon me,
That life, a very rebel to my will, [Lying down.
May hang no longer on me: throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault,
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony!
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,
Forge me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive.

O Antony! O Antony! [Dies

2 Sold. Let's speak to him.
1 Sold. Let 'e hear him; for the things he speaks
May concern Caesar.

3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.
1 Sold. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet 'fore' sleep.

2 Sold. Go we to him.

3 Sold. Awake, sir; awake! speak to us.
2 Sold. Hear you, sir?

1 Sold. The hand of death hath raught' him. Hark! the Drums off after

Do early wake the sleepers. Let us bear him
To the court of guard; he is of no's. Our hour
Is fully out.

3 Sold. Come on, then;
He may recover yet. [Exit, with the Body

SCENE X.—Between the two Camps.

Enter Antony and Scærus, with Forces, marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea:
We place them not by land.

Scæ. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would, they'd fight i' the fire, or i' the air,
We'd fight there too. But this it is: our foot
SCENE XII.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Upon the hills adjoining to the city
Shall stay with us (order for sea is given,
They have put forth the fleet) Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.

Enter Caesar, and his Forces, marching.

Caesar: But' being charg'd, we will be still by land,
Cæsas, as I take't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage! [Exeunt.

Re-enter Antony and Scarus.

Ant. Yet they are not joint'd. Where yond pine does
I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word
Straight, how 't is like to go.

Scar. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurers*
Say, they know not—they cannot tell:—look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant, and despotic; and by starts
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Of what he has, and what has not.

[Admit for off, as at a Sea-Fight.

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost! This foul Egyptian hath betray'd me:
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whor'e! 'tis thou
Hast sold me to this novice, and my heart
Makes only wars on thee—Bid them all fly;
For when I am reveng'd upon my charm,
I have done all.—Bid them all fly; be gone.

[Exit Scarus.

O sun! thy uprise shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands.—All come to this?—The hearts
That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do discard, melt their sweets
On blossoming Caesar; and this pine is bark'd,
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am.
O this wise spell of Egypt! this great charm,
Whose eye beck'rd my war's, and call'd them home
Whose bosom was my crownet, my chief end,
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose, ¹
Bemil'd me to the very heart of loss.—

What, Eros! Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt!

Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?

Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blemish Caesar's triumph. Let him take thee,
'Ant rhis thee up to the shouting plebeians:
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex; most monster-like, be shown
For poor'st diminutives, for dois; ² and let Patient Octavius plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. [Exit Cleo.

'Tis well thou 'rt gone,
If it be well to live: but better 't were
Thou fell'st under my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!—
The shirt of Nessus is upon me; teach me,
Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage:
Let me lodge Lichas on the horns of the moon;
And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,
Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die:
To the young Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Under this plot; she dies for 't.—Eros, ho! [Exit.

[Scene XI.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O! he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so embossed.¹

Char. To the monument!
There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead
The soul and body rive not more in parting,
Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument!
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say, that the last I spoke was, Antony,
And word it, pry'thee, piteously. Hence
Mardian, and bring me how he takes my death.—
To the Monument! [Exeunt.

SCENE XII.—The Same. Another Room.

Enter Antony and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me.

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime, we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion,
A tower'd citadel, a pendant rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air: thou hast seen these signs,
They are black vesper's pageants.

Eros. Ay, my lord.

Ant. That, which is now a horse, even with a thought.
The rack dimmings, and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave, Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony,
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Egypt, and the queen,
Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine,
Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto 't
A million more. now lost: she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Caesar's, and false play'd my glory,
Unto an enemy's triumph.—
Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
Ourselves to end ourselves.—O, thy vile lady!

Enter Mardian.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony:
My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy cunnoch: peace!
She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once,
And that she has discharg'd. What thou would'st do,
Is done unto thy hand: the last she spake
Was, Antony! most noble Antony!
Then, in the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips. She render'd life,
Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead, then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm me, Eros: the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep.—That thou depart'st hence safe,
Does pay thy labour richly; go.—[Exit Mardian.

Off, pluck off:—
The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep
The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!

² [Footnote: The sense of the lines 24-29 is uncertain.]
Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,
Crack thy frail case!—Apane, Eros. space.—
No more a soldier:—bruised pieces, go;
You have been nobly borne.—From me a while.—

[Exit Eros.

I will o'er-take thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is torture: since the torch is out,
Lie down, and stray no farther. Now all labour
Mars what it does: yes, very force entangles
Itself with strength: seal then, and all is done.—
Eros!—I come, my queen.—Eros!—Stay for me:
Where souls doouch on flowers, we'll hang in hand,
And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze:
Dido and her Æneas shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros! Eros!
Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died
I have liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarrel'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back
With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
The courage of a woman; less noble minded
Than she, which by her doath our Caesar tells,
"I am conqueror of myself." Thou art sworn, Eros,
That when the exigent should come, (which now
Is come indeed) when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution
Of disgrace and horror, that on my command
Thou then wouldst kill me: do't; the time is come.
Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Caesar thou destroyest.
Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!
Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Eros,
Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy master thus with pleas'd arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdued
To penetrative shame, whilst the wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Caesar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensued?

Eros. I would not see 't.

Ant. Come, then: for with a wound I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O, sir! pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, swore thou not then
To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once,
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.
Eros. Turn from me, then, that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee! [Turning his face from him.
Eros. My sword is drawn.

Ant. Then, let it do at once.

The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,
My captain, and my emperor, let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man; and farewell.
Eros. Farewell, great chief! Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there then.—[Falls on his Sword.]

Thou dost escape the sorrow
Of Antony's death. [Dies.

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!

Thou testest me, O valiant Eros! what
I should, and thou couldst not. My queen and Eros
Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me
A nobleness in record: but I will be
A bridegroom in my death, and run into't
As to a lover's bed. Come then; and, Eros,
Thy master dies thy scholar: to do thus [Exeques of Antony.

The guard.

What's the noise? Ant. I have done my work ill, friends: O! make an end
Of what I have begun.

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and we! Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard.

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exit Guard.

Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly,
This sword but shown to Caesar, with this tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed; there.

Dio. Lives he?

Ant. Wilt thou not answer, man? [Exit Diomed.

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword,
And give me

Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute lord,
My mistress, Cleopatra, sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Dio. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear
Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw
(Which never shall be found) you did suspect
She had compos'd with Caesar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead,
But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent
Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late, good Diomed. Call my guard, I pr'ythee.

Dio. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard, what, ho!

Come; your lord calls.

Enter some of the Guard.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bids;
'T is the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Woe, woe are we, sir, you may not live to wear
All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp
To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,
Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up:
I have led you oft; carry me now, good friends,
And have my thanks for all. [Exit, bearing Antony.

SCENE XIII.—The Same. A Monument.

Enter, above, CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. O Charmian! I will never go from hence.
Char. Be comforted, dear madam.
SCENE I. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Cleo.
No, I will not.
All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise: our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
Enter, below, DIOMEDES.
As that which makes it.—How now! is he dead?
Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.
Look out o' the other side your monument,
His guard have brought him thither.
Enter, below, ANTONY, borne by the Guard.
Cleo. O, en, Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in!—darkling stand,
Thou varying shore o' th' world. O Antony, Antony, Antony!
Help, Charmian, help, Iras, help: help, friends
Below; let's draw him thither.
Ant. Peace!
Not Caesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumph'd on itself.
Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
Should conquer Antony; but woe 'tis so!
Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only
I here importune death awhile, until
Of many thousand kissthe poor last
I lay upon thy lips.—
Cleo. I dare not, dear,
(Dear my lord, pardon) I dare not,
Lest I be taken: not the imperious show
Of the full-fortun'd Caesar ever shall
Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe.
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still condition, shall acquire no honour
Demurring upon me.—But come, come, Antony,—
Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up.—
Assist, good friends.
Ant. O! quick, or I am gone.
Cleo. Here's port, indeed!—How heavy weighs my lord!
Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight: had I great Juno's power,
The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little;—
Wishers were ever fools.—O! come, come, come;
[They draw ANTONY up.
And welcome, welcome! die, where'Thou hast liv'd:
Quicken with kissting: had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out.
All.
Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying.
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.
Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high,
That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel,
Provok'd by my offence.
Ant. One word, sweet queen.
Of Caesar seek your honour with your safety.—O!
Cleo. They do not go together.
Ant. Gentle, hear me
None about Caesar trust, but Proculeius.
Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust;
None about Caesar.
Ant. The miserable change now at my end
Lament nor sorrow at, but please your thoughts,
In feeding them with those my former fortunes,
Wherein I liv'd the greatest prince o' the world,
The noblest: and do now not basely die,
Nor cowardly put off my helmet to
My countryman, a Roman by a Roman Valia! y vanquish'd! Now, my spirit is going;
I can so more.

Dios.
Noblest of men, woot die?
Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is
No better than a sty?—O! see, my women,
The own o' the earth doth melt.—My lord!—
O! ither'd is the Garland of the war,
The soldier's pole is fallen: young boys, and girls,
Are level now with men; the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting moon.
Char. O, quietness, lady!
Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.
Char. Lady!—
Iras. Madam!—
Char. O madam, madam, madam!
Iras. Royal Egypt!
Empress!
Char. Peace, peace, Iras!
Cleo. No more, but 'en a woman; and commanded
By such poor passion as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chase. —It were for me
To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;
To tell them, that thus world did equal theirs,
Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but naught;
Patience is sottish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad: then is it sin,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us?—How do you. women?
What, what! good cheer! Why, how now, Charmian!
My noble girls!—Ah, women. women! look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out.—Good airs, take heart:
[To the Guard below.
We'll bury him; and then, what's brave, what's noble,
Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take us. Come, away:
This case of that huge spirit now is cold.
Ah, women, women! come; we have no friend
But resolution, and the briest end.
[Exeunt; those above bearing off ANTONY'S Body.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—CEsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Enter Cesar, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, MECENAS,
GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, and others.

Ces. Go to him. Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him, that he mocks
The pauses that he makes.

He mocks us by the pauses, &c.
Would be eternal in our triumph. Go,
And with your speediest bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Caesar, I shall. [Exit PROCULEIUS.

Cas. Gallus, go you along.—Where’s Dolabella?
To second Proculeius? [Exit Gallus.

Dolabella! [Exit.

Cas. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he’s employed: he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent, where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war,
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings. Go with me, and see
What I can show in this. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Monument

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life. ’Tis paltry to be Caesar:
Not being fortune, he’s but fortune’s knave,
A minister of her will; and it is great
To do that thing which tends all other deeds,
Which shakes accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dag,
The beggar’s nurse and Caesar’s;

Enter, to the Gates of the Monument, PROCULEIUS,
GALLUS, and Soldiers.

Pro. Caesar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt;
And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean’st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. What’s thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Antony

Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceived;
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,
That majesty, to keep decorum. must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer’d Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own, as I
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer;
You are fallen into a princely hand. fear nothing.
Make your full acknowledgement to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need. Let me report to him
Your sweet dependance, and you shall find
A conqueror, that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel’d to.

Cleo. Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune’s vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience, and would gladly
Look him in the face.

Pro. This I’ll report, dear lady.
Have comfort; for, I know, your plight is pitied
Of him that caus’d it.

Gal. You see how easily she may be surpris’d.

[PROCULEIUS, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a Ladder, and come behind.
CLEOPATRA. Some of the Guard unbarring and opening the Gates.

Guard her till Caesar come.

[To PROCULEIUS and the Guard. Erit Gallus.

Iras. Royal queen!

Char. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!—

Cleo. Quick, quick. good hands. [Drawing a Dagger.

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold!

[Disturbance.
Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Believ'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death, too,
That rids our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,
Do not abuse my master's bounty, by
'Th undoing of yourself: let the world see
His nobleness well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death?

Cleo. Come hither, come! come, come, and take a queen
Worth many beaus and beggars!

Pro. O! temperance, lady.

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir;
If idle talk will once be necessary,
I'll not sleep neither. This mortal house I'll ruin,
Do Caesar what he can. Know, sir, that I will Not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,
And show me to the shaving variety
Of censoring Rome! Rather a ditch in Egypt
Be gentle grave to me! rather on Nisus' mud
Lay me stark nak'd, and let the water flies
Blow me into abhorring! rather make
My country's high pyramids my gibbet,
And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend
These thoughts of horror farther, than you shall Find cause in Caesar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done thy master Caesar knows,
And he hath sent for thee: for the queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,
It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—
To Caesar I will speak what you shall please.

[To CLEOPATRA.

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Exeunt PROCULEIUS, and SOLDIERS.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known.
You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their dreams:
Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony:
O, such another sleep, that I might see
But such another man!

Dol. If it might please you,—

Cleo. His face was as the heavens: and therein stuck
A sun, and moon, which kept their course, and lighted
The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature,

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean; his rear'd arm,
Crested the world: his voice was proportion'd
As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;
But when he meant to quail and shake the orb,
He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in 't: an autumn* 't was,
That grew the more by reaping: his delights
Were dolphin-like: they show'd his back above
The element they liv'd in: in his livery
Walk'd crowns, and crownetts: realms and islands were
As plate's drop'd from his pocket.

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods:
But, if there be, or ever were one such,
'Tis past the size of dreaming: nature wants stuff
To vie* strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine
An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy,
Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam.

Your love is as yourself, great; and you bear it
As answering to the weight: I would I might never O'ertake pursed' success, but I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that smiles
My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

Know you, what Caesar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir.—

Dol. Though he be honourable,

Cleo. He'll lead me, then, in triumph?

Dol. Madam, he will; I know't.

Within. Make way there!—Caesar!

Enter CÉSAR, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, MEDEMAS,
SELEUCUS, and Attendants.

Cés. Which is the queen of Egypt?

Dol. It is the emperor, madam. [CLEOPATRA kneels.

Cés. Arise, you shall not kneel.

I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods
Will have it thus: my master and my lord
I must obey.

Cés. Take to you no hard thoughts:
The record of what injuries you did us,
Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Solc sir o' the world,
I cannot project mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but do confess I have Been laden with like frailties, which before
Have often shamed our sex.

Cés. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,
(Which towards you are most gentle) you shall find
A benefit in this change: but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking
Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may through all the world: 'tis yours;
And we
Your scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.

Cés. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,
I am posses'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
[Shewing a Paper.
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sel. Here, madam.

Cleo. This is my treasurer: let him speak, my lord.

On his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing.—Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,
I had rather seal my lips, than to my peril
Speak that which is not.
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

ACT V.

Cleo. What have I kept back? Sell. Enough to purchase what you have made known. Cle. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve Your wisdom in the deed. Cleo. See, Caesar! O, behold, How pomp is follow'd! mine now will now be yours, And should we shift estates, yours would be mine. The ingratitude of this Seleucus does Even make me wild.—O slave, of no more trust Than love that's hid!—What! goest thou back? thou shalt Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes, Though they had wings. Slave, soul-less villain, dog! O rarely base! Cass. Good queen, let us entreat you. Cleo. O Cassar! what a wounds' shame is this; That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me, Doing the honour of thy lordliness To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Cassar, That I some lady trifles have reserv'd, Immoment toys, things of such dignity As we greet modern friends withal; and say, Some nobler token I have kept apart For Livia, and Octavia, to induce Their mediation, must I be unfolded With one that I have broid? Ye gods! it smites me Beneath the fall I have. Pr'ythee, go hence; [To SELECTUS. Or I shall show the cinders of my spirit Through th' ashes of mischance.—Wert thou a man, Thou wouldst have mercy on me. Cass. Forbear, Seleucus. [Exit SELECTUS. Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are misthought For things that others do; and when we fall, We answer others' merits in our name, And therefore to be pitied. Cass. Cleopatra, Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd, But we i' the roll of conquest: still be it yours, Bestow it on your pleasure; and believe, Cassar's no merchant, to make prize with you Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be chear'd; Make not your thoughts your prisons: no, dear queen; For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep: Our care and pity is so much upon you, That we remain your friend; and so, adieu. Cleo. My master, and my lord! Cass. Not so. Adieu. [Flourish. Exeunt Cæsar, and his Train. Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not Be noble to myself: but bark thee, Charmian. [Whispers Charmian. Iras. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done, And we are for the dark. Cleo. Hie thee again: I have spoken already, and it is provided; Go, put it to the haste. Clar. Madam, I will. [Re-enter DOLABELLA. Dol. Where is the queen? Clar. Behold, sir. [Exit Charmian. Cleo. Dolabella? Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command, Which my love makes religion to obey,

I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria Intends his journey, and within three days You with your children will he send before. Make your best use of this: I have perform'd Your pleasure, and my promise. Cleo. I shall remain your debtor. Dol. I your servant. Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cæsar. Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. [Exit Cæsar. Now, Iras what think'at thou? Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shall be shown In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers. shall Uplift us to the view: in their thick breaths, Rank of gross diet. shall we be enclosed, And forc'd to drink their vapour. Iras. The gods forbid! Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain. Iras. Saucy lictors Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald rhymer ballad us out o' tune: the quiet comedians Extemporarily will stage us, and present Our Alexandrian revels: Antony Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness P't the posture of a whore. Iras. O, the good gods! Cleo. Nay, that is certain. Iras. I'll never see it; for, I am sure, my nails Are stronger than mine eyes. Cleo. Why, that's the way To foil their preparation, and to conquer Their most assur'd intents.—Now, Charmian?— [Re-enter CHARMIAN. Show me, my women, like a queen:—go fetch My best attires,—I am again for Cydnus, To meet Mark Antony.—Sirrah, Iras, go.— Now, noble Charmian, we'll despatch indeed; And, when thou hast done this charge, I'll give thee leave To play till dooms-day.—Bring our crown and all. Wherefore 's this noise? [Exit Iras. A noise within. [Enter one of the Guard. Guard. Here is a rural fellow, That will not be denied your highness' presence: He brings you figs. Cleo. Let him come in.—How poor an instrument [Exit Guard. May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty. My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing Of woman in me: now from head to foot I am marble-constant; now the fleeting moon No planet is of mine. Re-enter Guard, with a Clown bringing in a Basket. Guard. This is the man. Cleo. Avoid, and leave him.— [Exit Guard. Hast thou the pretty worm of Nius there, That kills and pains not? Clown. Truly I have him; but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal: those that do die of it do seldom or never recover. Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died on't? Clown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday: a very honest woman, but something given to lie, as a woman should not do but in the way of honesty: how she died of the bitting of it, what pains she had.—Truly, she makes a very good report o' the worm; but he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do. But this is most fallible, the worm's an adder’s worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence : farewell.
Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.
Cleo. Farewell. [Clown sets down the Basket.
Cleo. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.
Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.
Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.
Cleo. Take thou no care: it shall be heeded.
Clown. Very good. Give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.
Cleo. Will it eat me?
Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not; but, truly, these same whoreson devils do goods great harm to their women, for in every ten that they make, the devils make nine.
Cleo. Well, get thee gone: farewell.
Clown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy of the worm.

[Exit.

Re-enter Iras, with a Robe, Crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have Immortal longings in me. Now, no more
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip.—
Vare, vare, good Iras; quick.—Methinks, I hear
Antony call: I see him rouse himself.
To praise my noble act; I hear him mock
The luck of Caesar, which the gods give men
To excuse their after wrath. Husband, I come:
Now to that name my courage prove my title.
I am fire, and air; my other elements
I give to baser life.—So,—have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.
Farewell, kind Charmian.—Iras, long farewell.

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?
If thou and nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,
Which hurts, and is desired. Dost thou lie still?
If thou shinest, thou tell'st the world
It is not worth leave-taking.
Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain, that I may see,
The gods themselves do weep.
Cleo. This proves me base:
If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her, and spend that kiss,
Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch,[She applies the Asp to her Breast.
With thy sharp teeth this knot insinistrisate
Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and despatch. O! couldst thou speak,
That I might hear thee call great Caesar ass Unpolished!

Char. O eastern star!
Cleo. Peace, peace!
Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep?
Char. O, break! O, break!
Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle.—
O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too.—
[Applying another Asp to her Arm.

Why! should I stay, I see, the keeping of thee?
[Dies, and dies.

Char. In this wild world?—So, fare thee well.—
Now boast thee, death, in thy possession lies

A less unparalleled.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phoebus never be behold
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown’s away;
I’ll mend it, and then play—

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?
Char. Speak softly; wake her not.
1 Guard. Caesar hath sent—
Char. Too slow a messenger. [Applies the Asp.
O! come; space; despatch: I partly feel thee.
1 Guard. Approach, ho! All’s not well: Caesar’s beguiled.
2 Guard. There’s Dolabella sent from Caesar: call him.
1 Guard. What work is here?—Charmian, is this well done?
Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess
Descended of so many royal kings.
Ah, soldier!—

Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?
2 Guard. . . . All dead.
Dol. Caesar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: thyself art coming to see perform’d the dreadful act, which thou
So soughtst to hinder.

Within. A way there! a way for Caesar!

Enter Caesar, and all his Train.

Dol. O, sir! you are too sure an augurer:
That you did fear, is done.

Cez. Bravest at the last:
She levell’d at our purposes, and, being royal,
Took her own way,—The manner of their deaths?
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?
1 Guard. A simple countryman that brought her figs:
This was his basket.

Cez. Poison’d, then.

1 Guard. O Caesar.
This Charmian lived but now; she stood, and spoke.
I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress: tremulously she stood,
And on the sudden dropp’d.

Cez. O noble weakness!—
If they had swallow’d poison, ‘t would appear
By external swelling; but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast,
There is a vent of blood, and something blown.
The like is on her arm.

1 Guard. This is an aspick’s trail; and these figs leaves
Have slime upon them, such as the aspick leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Cez. Most probable,
That so she died; for her physician tells me,
She hath pursu’d conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed,
And bear her women from the monument.
She shall be buried by her Antony;
No grave upon the earth shall clip it
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is No less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend this funeral,
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity.

[Exeunt

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Britain. The Garden of Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. You do not meet a man, but frowns: our bloods
No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers
Still seem as does the king.

2 Gent. But what's the matter?

1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom,
Whom he purpos'd to his wife's sole son, (a widow
That late he married) hath refer'd herself
Unto a poor but worthy gentleman. She's wedded;
Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all
Is outward sorrow, though, I think, the king
Be touch'd at very heart.

2 Gent. None but the king?

1 Gent. He that hath lost her, too: so is the queen,
That most desir'd the match; but not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowl at.

2 Gent. And why so?

1 Gent. He that hath miss'd the princess is a thing
Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her
(I mean, that married her,—alack, good man!—
And therefore banish'd) is a creature such
As, to seek through the regions of the earth
For one his like, there would be something failing
In him that should compare. I do not think,
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but he.

2 Gent. You speak him far.

1 Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself;
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure duly.

Scene II.

Cymbeline

2 Gent. How long is this ago?
1 Gent. Some twenty years.
2 Gent. Strange a king's children should be so conveyed. So slackly guarded, and the search so slow, That could not trace them!
1 Gent. Howsoever 'tis strange, Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at, Yet is it true, sir.
2 Gent. I do well believe you.
1 Gent. We must forbear. Here comes the gentleman, the queen, and princess. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—The Same.

Enter the Queen, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Queen. No, be assured, you shall not find me, daughter, After the slander of most step-mothers, Ev'n you and I: you are my prisoner, but Your jailor shall deliver you the keys That open up your restraint. For you, Posthumus, So soon as I can win th'offended king, I will be known your advocate: marry, yet The fire of rage is in him; and 'twere good, You 'd unto his sentence, with what patience Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness, I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril. I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying The pangs of bard'affections, though the king Hate charg'd you should you not speak together.

[Exit QUEEN.

Imo. O dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds!—My dearest husband, I something fear my father's wrath; but nothing (Always reserv'd my holy duty) what His rage can do on me. You must be gone; And I shall here abide the hourly shot Of angry eyes; not comforted to live, But that there is this jewel in the world, That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress! O, lady! weep no more, lest I give cause To be suspected of more tenderness Than doth become a man. I will remain The loyal'est husband that did e'er plight troth: My residence in Rome at one Philario's; Who to my father was a friend, to me Known but by letter. Thither write, my queen, And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send, Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter QUEEN.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you: If the king come, I shall incur I know not How much of his displeasure. [Aside] Yet I'll move him To walk this way. I never do him wrong, But he does buy my injuries to friends, Pays dear for my offences. [Exit.

Post. Should we be taking leave As long a term as yet we have to live, The loathness to depart would grow. Adieu! Imo. Nay, stay a little: Were you but riding forth to air yourself, Such parting were too petty. Look here, love: This diamond was my mother's; take it, heart; But keep it till you woo another wife, When Imogen is dead.

Post. How! how! another?—You gentle gods, give me but this I have, And rear up my embraces from a next With bonds of death!—Remain, remain thou here [Putting on the Ring.

While sense can keep it on. And sweetest, fairest, As I my poor self did exchange for you, To your so infinite loss, so in our trifles I still win of you: for my sake, wear this: It is a manacle of love; I'll place it Upon this fairest prisoner. [Putting a Bracelet on her Arm.

Imo. O, the gods! When shall we see again?

Enter Cymbeline and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king! Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence, from my sight! If after this command thou fraught the court With thy unworthiness, thou diest! Away! Thou'rt poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you, And bless the good remainders of the court! I am gone. [Exit.

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death More sharp than this is.

Cym. That shouldst repair my youth, thou hastest A year's age on me.

Imo. I beseech you, sir, Harm not yourself with your vexation; I am senseless of your wrath: a touch more rare Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace? obedience? Imo. Past hope, and in despair; that way, past grace Cym. That mightst have had the sole son of my queen Imo. O bless'd, that I might not! I chose an eagle, And did avoid a pottle.1 Cym. Thou took'st a beggar would have made my throne A seat for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added A lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vile one! Imo. Sir, It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus. You bred him as my play-fellow; and he is A man worth any woman; overbuys me Almost the sum he pays.

Cym. What! art thou mad? Imo. Almost, sir: heaven restore me!—Would I were A neatherd's daughter, and my Leonatus Our neighbour shepher'd's son! [Exit QUEEN.

Re-enter QUEEN.

Cym. Thou foolish thing!—They were again together: you have done! [To the Queen Not after our command. Away with her, And pen her up. Queen. Beseech your patience. Peace! Dear lady daughter, peace!—Sweet sovereign, Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort Out of your best advice.

Cym. Nay, let her languish A drop of blood a day; and, being aged, Die of this folly. [Exit.

Enter PIRANIO.

Queen. Fie!—You must give way: Here is your servant. How now, sir! What news? Pir. My lord your son drew on my master.

1 Hand of a worthless breed. * a beggar; wouldst, &c., in f. o.
No harm, I trust, is done?

Pis.  There might have been,
But that my master rather play’d than fought,
And had no help of anger: they were parted
By gentlemen at hand.

Queen.  I am very glad on’t.

Imo. Your son’s my father’s friend; he takes his part.—

To draw upon an exile! —O brave sir! —
I would they were in Afric both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back.—Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command.  He would not suffer me
To bring him to the haven: left these notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
When ’t pleas’d you to employ me.

Queen.  This hath been,
Your faithful servant: I dare lay mine honour,
He will remain so.

Pis.  I humbly thank your highness.

Queen.  Pray, walk a while.

Imo.  About some half hour hence,
Pray you, speak with me.  You shall, at least,
Go see my lord aboard: for this time, leave me.  [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Public Place.

Enter Cloth, and Two Lords.

1 Lord. Ser, I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice.
Where air comes out, air comes in; there’s none abroad
so wholesome as that you vent.

Clo. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it—Have
I hurt him?

2 Lord. [Aside.] No, faith; not so much as his patience.

1 Lord. Hurt him? his body’s a passable carcass, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.

2 Lord. [Aside.] His steel was in debt; it went o’
the backride the town.

Clo. The villain would not stand me.

2 Lord. [Aside.] No; but he fled forward still, toward your face.

1 Lord. Stane you! You have land enough of your own; but he added to your having, gave you some ground.

2 Lord. [Aside.] As many inches as you have oceans.
—Puppies!

Clo. I would they had not come between us.

2 Lord. [Aside.] So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground.

Clo. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse
me!

2 Lord. [Aside.] If it be a sin to make a true election, she is dammed.

1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: she’s a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.

2 Lord. [Aside.] She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her.

Clo. Come, I’ll to my chamber. Would there had been some hurt done!

2 Lord. [Aside.] I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an asp, which is no great hurt.

Clo. You ’ll go with us?

1 Lord. I’ll attend your lordship.

Clo. Nay, come, let’s go together.

2 Lord. Well, my lord.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Cymbeline’s Palace.

Enter Imogen and Pisanio.

Imo. I would thou grow’st unto the shores o’ the haven,
And question’st every sail: if he should write,
And I have it, ’t were a paper lost
As uffir’d mercy is. What was the last
That he spoke to thee?

Pis.  It was, his queen, his queen

Imo. Then war’d he his handkerchief?

Pis.  And kiss’d it, madam,

Imo. Senseless linen, happier therein than I! —
And that was all?

Pis.  No, madam; for so long
As he could make me with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail’d on,
How swift his ship.

Imo.  Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pis.  Madam, so did I.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings, crack’d them, but
To look upon him, till the diminution
Of space had point’d him sharp as my needle;
Nay, follow’d him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air; and then
Have turn’d mine eye, and wept.—But, good Pisanio,
When shall we hear from him?

Pis.  Bo assur’d, madam.

With his next vantago.

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think on him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts, and such; or I could make him swar
The shes of Italy should not betray
Mine interest, and his honour; or have charg’d him,
At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,
’T encounter me with orisons, for then
I am in heaven for him: or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from growing.

Enter a Lady.

The queen, madam,

Desires your highness’ company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them desspatch’d.—
I will attend the queen.

Pis.  Madam, I shall.  [Exeunt.

Enter Philiaro, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Jack. Believe it, sir, I have seen him in Britain:
he was then of a crescent note; expected to prove so worthy, as since he hath been allowed the name of;
but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Phi. You speak of him when he was less furnished, than now he is, with that which makes him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very manly there could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his king's daughter, (wherein he must be weighed rather by her value, than his own) words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

French. And, then, his banishment.

Iach. Ay, and the approbations1 of those that weep this lamentable divorce and her dolours.2 are wou'd3 wonderfully to extend him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without more4 quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phi. His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life.—

Enter Posthumus.

Here comes the Briton. Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suits with gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality.—I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman, whom I command to you, as a noble friend of mine: how worthy he is. I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Iach. So, since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness. I was glad I did stand5 my countryman and you: it had been pity, you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose, as then, each bore, upon importance of so slight and trivial a nature.

Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller; rather shunned to go even with what I heard, than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences: but, upon my mended judgment, (if I not offend to say it is mended) my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. Faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such two, that would, by all likelihood, have confounded one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

French. Safely, I think. 'T was a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses; this gentleman at that time vouching, (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation) his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant, qualified, and less attemptable, than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living; or this gentleman's opinion, by this, worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still, and my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As fair, and as good, (a kind of hand-in-hand comparison) had been something too fair, and too good, for any lady in Britain. If you will believe others I have heard, as that diamond of yours outshines many; but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her as I rated her; so do I my stone.

Iach. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iach. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outrizied by a trife.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given, so if there were wealth enough for the pur chase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Iach. You may wear her in title yours; but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds. Your ring may be stolen, too: so, of your bruce of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual; a cunning thief, or a that way accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier to convince6 the honour of my mistresse, if in the holding or loss of that you term her frail. I do nothing doubt, you have store of thieves; notwithstanding, I fear not my ring.

Phi. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior, I think him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your fair mistresse; make her go back, even to the yielding, had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring, which, in my opinion, o'ervalue it something, but I make my wager rather against your confidence, than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deal abused in too bold a persuasion: and I doubt not you'll sustain what you're worthy of by your attempt.

Iach. What's that?

Post. A repulse; though your attempt, as you call it, deserve more,—a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this; it came in too suddenly: let it die as it was born, and, I pray you, be better acquaintance.

Iach. Would I had put my estate, and my neighbour's, on the approbation of what I have spoke.

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Iach. Yours; whom in constancy, you think, stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers, which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger; 't is part of it.

Iach. You are afeared,16 and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting. But I see, you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue: you bear a swearer purpose, I hope.

Iach. I am the master of my speeches; and would undergo what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return. Let there be covenants drawn between us. My mistresse exceeds in goodness the huggeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match. Here's my ring.

Phil. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods, it is one.—If I bring you no sufficient testimony, that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours: so is your diamond too: if I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours;—provided, I have your commendation, for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles between us.—Only, thus far you shall answer: if you make good your vauntage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have preval'd, I am no farther your enemy; she is not worth our debate: if she remain unsuced, (you not making it appear otherwise) for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Iach. Your hand: a covenant. We will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain, lest the bargain should catch cold, and starve. I will fetch my gold, and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed. [Exit Posthumus and Iachimo.

French. Will this hold, think you?

Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.—Britain. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace. Enter Queen, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Queen. Whilest yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers: Make haste. Who has the note of them?

1 Lady. I, madam. [Exit.

Queen. Despatch.—[Exit Ladies.

Now, master doctor, have you brought these drugs? Cor. Pleased your highness, ay: here they are, as madam: [Presenting a small Box. But I beseech your grace, without offence.

(My conscience bids me ask) wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds, Which are the mover of a languishing death; But though slow, deadly?

Queen. I wonder, doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a question: have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learnt me how To make perfumes? distill? preserve? yea, so, That our great king himself doth woo me oft For my confessions? Having thus far proceeded, (Unless thou think'st me devilish) is't not meet That I did amplify my judgment in Other conclusions? I will try the forces Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging, (but none human) To try the vigour of them, and apply Allayments to their act; and by them gather Their several virtues, and effects.

Cor. Your highness Shall from this practice but make hard your heart: Besides, the seeing these effects will Be both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O! content thee.— Enter Pisanio.

[Aside.] Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him Will I first work: he's for his master, And enemy to my son.—How now, Pisanio!—

Doctor, your service for this time is ended: Take your own way.

Cor. [Aside.] I do suspect you, madam; But you shall do no harm.

Queen. Hark thee, a word.—[She talks apart to Pisanio.]

Cor. I do not like her. She doth think, she has Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit, And will not trust one of her malice with A drug of such damn'd nature. Those she has Will quittify and dull the sense awhile; When heat, perchance, she'll prove on cats, and dogs, Then afterward up higher; but there is No danger in what show of death it makes More than the locking up the spirits a time, To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd With a most false effect; and I the truer, So to be false with her.

Queen. No farther service, doctor,
Until I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave. [Exit. Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time She will not quench, and let instruction enter Where folly now possesses? Do thou work: When thou shalt bring me word she loves my son, I'll tell thee on the instant thou art, then, As great as is thy master: greater; for His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gaps: return he cannot, nor Continue where he is: to shift his being Is to exchange one misery with another, And every day that comes comes to decay A day's work in him. What shalt thou expect, To be depender on a thing that leans? Who cannot be new-built; nor has no friends, [The Queen drops the Box: Pisanio takes it up and presents it. So much as but to prop him.—Thou takst up Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labour, It is a thing I made, which hath the king Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know What is more cordial:—nay, I pr'ythee, take it; It is an earnest of a farther good That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how The case stands with her: do 't as from thyself. Think what a chance thou hast on; but think Thou hast thy mistress still; to boot, my son, Who shall take notice of thee. I'll move the king To any shape of thy preferment, such As thou'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly, That set thee on to this desert, am bound To load thy merit richly. Call my women: Think on my words. [Exit Pisanio.—A sly and constant knave, Not to be shak'd; the agent for his master, And the remembrancer of her, to hold The hand fast to her lord.—I have given him that, Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her Of liegers for her suite; and which she after, Except she bend her humour, shall be assur'd

Re-enter Pisanio, and Ladies.

To taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done. The violets, cowslips, and the primroses, Bear to my closet.—Fare thee well, Pisanio; Think on my words. [Exit Queen and Ladies Pisanio. And shall do; But when to my good lord I prove untrue, I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you. [Exit.}
SCENE VII.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false; A foolish suitor to a wedded lady. That hath her husband banish’d:—O, that husband! My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen, As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable Is the desire that’s glorious: blessed be those, How mean soe’r, that have their honest wills, Which seasonable comfort.—Who may this be? Fie!

Enter Pisano and Iachimo.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome Comes from my lord with letters.

Iach. Change you, madam? The worthy Leonatus is in safety, And greets your highness dearly. [Gives a Letter.

Iach. Thanks, good sir:

You are kindly welcome. All of her, that is out of door, most rich! [Aside.

Imo. If she be furnish’d with a mind so rare, She is alone the Arabian bird, and I Have lost the wager. Boldness, be my friend: Arm me, audacity, from head to foot, Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight; Rather, directly fly.

Iach. [Reads] He is one of the noblest note, to whose kindness I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.

"LEONATUS."

So far I read aloud; But even the very middle of my heart Is warm’d by the rest, and takes it thankfully. You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I Have words to bid you; and shall find it so In all that I can do.

Iach. Thanks, fairest lady.

What are men mad? What nature gives them eyes To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope? Or seas and land, which can distinguish twixt The fiery orbs above, and the twain’d stones Upon whose number’d beach: and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious? Twixt fair and foul? What makes your admiration? Iach. It cannot be i’ the eye; for apes and monkeys, Twixt two such sages, would chatter this way, and Contemn with mows the other: nor i’ the judgment; For idiots, in this case of favour, would Be wisely definite: nor i’ the appetite; Stuttery, to such heat excellency oppo’ed, Should make desire vomit to emptiness, Not so allure’d to feed.

Imo. What is the matter, trow? Iach. The cloyed will, (That satiate yet unsatisfied desire, That tub both fill’d and running) raving first The lamb, longs after for the garbage.

My man’s abode where I did leave him; he Is strange and peevish. Pis. I was going, sir, To give him welcome. [Exit Pisano.

Imo. Is he dispose’d to mirth? I hope, he is. Iach. Exceeding pleasant: none, a stranger there, So merry and so game some: he is call’d The Briton reveiler.

Imo. When he was here, He did incline to sadness; and oft-times Not knowing why.

Iach. I never saw him sad. There is a Frenchman here passionately, one. An eminient monsieur, that, it seems, much loves A Gallian girl at home; he furnaces The thick sighs from him, whilsts the jolly Briton (Your lord, I mean) laughs from ‘a’s free lungs, cries, ‘O! Can my sides hold, to think, that man,—who knows By history, report, or his own proof, What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose But must be.—will his free hours languish For assurance’ bondage?"

Imo. Will my lord say so? Iach. Ay, madam, with his eyes in flood with laughter It is a recreation to be by, And hear him mock the Frenchman; but, heavens know Some men are much to blame.

Imo. Not he; but yet heaven’s bounty towards b— might Be use’d more thankfully. In himself, ’t is much: In you,—which I account beyond all talents,— While I am bound to wonder, I am bound To pity too.

Imo. What do you pity, sir? Iach. Two creatures, heartily.

Imo. Will I be, sir? You look on me: what wreck discern you in me, Deserves your pity?

Iach. Lamentable! What! To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace P’ the dungeon by a snuff? I pray you, sir, Deliver with more openness your answers To my demands. Why do you pity me? Iach. That others do, I was about to say, enjoy your—But It is an office of the gods to venge it, Not mine to speak on ’t.

Imo. You do seem to know Something of me, or what concerns me: pray you, (Since doubting things do ill, often hurts more Than to be sure they do; for certainties Either are past remedies, or, timely knowing, The remedy then born) discover to me What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this cheek To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch, Whose every touch, would force the sleeper’s soul To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye, Fixing it only here; should I (damn’d then) Slaver with lips as common as the stairs That mount the Capitol; join grieves with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood (falsehood as With labour), then bo-peeping in an eye, Base and illustrious as the smoky light That’s fed with stinking tallow, they were fit, That all the plagues of hell should at one time Encounter such revolt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Court before Cymbeline’s Palace.

Enter Cloten, and Two Lords, as from the Bowling-alley.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when I knocked the jack upon an up-cast, to be hit away! I had a hundred pound on’t: and then a whoreson jackass must make me up for swearing; as if I borrowed mine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

Lord. What got he by that? You have broke bi pate with the bowl.

Were deeply rooted; and shall make your lord,
That which he is, new o’er: and he is one
The truest manner’d; such a holy witch,
That he enchanteth societies unto him:
Half all men’s hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Iack. He sits ‘mongst men, like a descended god
He hath a kind of honour sets him off,
More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry,
Most mighty princes, that I have adventur’d
To try your taking of a false report; which hath Honour’d with confirmation your great judgment
In the election of a sir so rare,
Which, you know, cannot err. The love I bear him
Made me to fan you thus; but the gods made you,
Unlike all others, chaffless. Pray, your pardon.

Imo. All’s well, sir. Take my power in the court for yours.

Iack. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot
’T entertain your grace but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concerns
Your lord; myself, and other noble friends.
Are partners in the business.

Imo. Pray, what is’t?

Iack. Some dozen Romans of us, and your lord,
The beast feather of our wing) have mingled sums,
To buy a present for the emperor;
Which I, the factor for the rest, have done
In France: ’t is plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form. Their value’s great,
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage: may it please you
To take them in protection?

Imo. Willingly,
And pawn mine honour for their safety: since
My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them
In my bed-chamber.

Iack. They are in a trunk,
Attended by my men; I will make bold
To send them to you, only for this night,
I must aboard to-morrow.

Imo. O! no, no.

Iack. Yes, I beseech; or I shall short my word
By lengthening my return. From Gallia
I cross’d the seas on purpose, and on promise
To see your grace.

Imo. I thank you for your pains.
But not away to-morrow.

Iack. O! I must, madam.
Therefore, I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your lord with writing, do’t to-night
I have outstay’d my time, which is material
To the tender of our present.

Imo. I will write.

Send your trunk to me: It shall safe be kept,
And truly yielded you. You’re very welcome.

[Exeunt.

Act II.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
Iack. And himself. Not I,
Inclin’d to this intelligence, pronounce
The beggary of his change; but ’t is your graces
That, from my mutest conscience, to my tongue
Charm this report out.

Imo. Let me hear no more.
Iack. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike my heart
With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady
So fair, and fasten’d to an empery
Would make the great’st king double, to be partner’d
With tomboys, hir’d with that self exhibition
Which your own coffers yield! with diseases ventures,
That pay’ with all infirmities for gold
Which rottenness can lend nature! such boil’d stuff,
As well might poison poison! Be reveng’d,
Or she that bore you was no queen, and you
Recoil from your great stock.

Imo. Reveng’d!
How should I be reveng’d? If this be true,
(As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse) if it be true,
How should I be reveng’d?

Iack. Should he make me
Live, like Diana’s priest, betwixt cold sheets,
Whiles he is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse? Revenge it.
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure,
More noble than that runagate to your bed,
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close, as sure.

Imo. What ho, Pisanio!
Iack. Let me my service tender on your lips.
Imo. Away! I do contemn mine ears, that have
So long attended thee.—If thou wert honourable,
Thou would’st have told this tale for virtue, not
For such an end thou seek’st, as base, as strange.
Thou wrong’st a gentleman, who is as far
From thy report, as thou from honour; and Solicit’st here a lady, that disdain’s
Thee and the devil alike.—What ho, Pisanio!—
The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger, in his court, to mart
As in a Romish stew, and to expound
His beastly mind to us, he hath a court
He little cares for, and a daughter whom
He not respects at all.—What ho, Pisanio!—
Iack. O happy Leonatus! I may say;
The credit, that thy lady hath of thee,
Deserves thy trust; and thy most perfect goodness
Her saur’d credit.; Blessed live you long!
A lady to the worthiest sir, that ever
Country call’d his: and you his mistress, only
For the most worthiest fit. Give me your pardon.
I have spoke this, to know if your affiance
SCENE III.

Cymbeline.

2 Lord. [Aside.] If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have run all out.

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths, ha?

2 Lord. No, my lord; [Aside.] nor crop the ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog! — I give him satisfaction? Would he had been one of my rank!

2 Lord. [Aside.] To have smelt like a fool.

Clo. I am not vexed more at any thing in the earth.

—A pox on 't! I had rather not be so noble as I am: they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother. Every jack-slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that no body can match.

2 Lord. [Aside.] You are cock and capon too; and you crow, cock, with your comb on.

Clo. Sayest thou?

2 Lord. It is not fit your lordship should undertake every companion that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that; but it is fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger, that's come to court to-night?

2 Lord. Younger! and I know not on 't.

2 Lord. [Aside.] He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not.

1 Lord. There's an Italian come; and 't is thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in 't?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. [Aside.] You are a fool granted; therefore, your issues being foolish do not derogate.

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian. What have I lost to-day at bowls, I'll win to-night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

[Exit Clooten and first Lord.]

That such a crafty devil as is his mother
Should yield the world this ass! a woman, that Bears all down with her brain: and this her son
Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
 And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess!
Thou divine Imogen, what thou endurest,
Betwixt a father by thy step-dame govern'd;
A mother hourly coining plots; a wooer,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act
Of the divorce he'd make! The heavens hold firm
The walls of thy dear honour; keep unshak'd
That temple, thy fair mind; that thou may'st stand
't enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land! [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Bed-Chamber; in one part of it, a great Trunk.

Imogen reading in her Bed; Helen attending.

Imo. Who's there? my woman, Helen?
Lady. Please you, madam.
Imo. What hour is it?
Lady. Almost midnight, madam.
Imo. I have read three hours, then. Mine eyes are weak;
Fold down the leaf where I have left: to bed.

1 The covering of floors. 2 Not in f. o. 3 bare: in f. o.

Take not away the taper, leave it burning;
And if thou canst awake by four o' the clock.
I pr'ythee, call me. Sleep hast seiz'd me wholly.

[Exit Helen.]

To your protection I commend me, gods!
From fairies, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beseech ye!

[Sleeps. Enter Lachimo from the Trunk.

Lac. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labour'd sense
Repairs itself by rest: our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes, ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded. Cytherea,
How bravely thou comest at thy bed! fresh lily,
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!
But kiss; one kiss!—Rubies unparagon'd, [Kissing her.
How dearly they do 't.—'T is her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus: the flame of the taper
Rows toward her, and would under-peep her lids,
To see the enclosed lights, now canopied
Under the windows: white and azure, lace'd
With blue of heaven's own tint.—But my design,
To note the chamber: I will write all down:

[Takes out his tables.]

Such, and such, pictures:—there the window;—such
Th' adornment of her bed:—the arras, figures,
Why, such, and such:—and the contents o' the story.

Ah! but some natural notes about her body,
Above ten thousand meander moveables
Would testify, t' enrich mine inventory:
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her,
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off:—

[Taking off her Bracelet.]

As slipperly, as the Gordian knot was hard.
'T is mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord.—On her left breast
A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
I' the bottom of a cowslip: here's a voucher,
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I have pick'd the lock, and ta'en
The treasure of her honour. No more.—To what end?
Why should I write this down, that's riveted,
Screw'd to my memory? She hath been reading late
The tale of Tereus; here the leaf's turn'd down,
Where Philomel gave up,—I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning
May dare the raven's eye: I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

[Clock strikes.

One, two, three,—time, time! [Exit into the Trunk.

SCENE III.—An Ante-Chamber adjoining Imogen's Apartment.

Enter Clooten and Lords.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient, after the noble temper of your lordship. You are most hot, and furious, when you win.

Clo. Winning will put any man into courage. If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough. It's almost morning, is 't not?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come. I am advised to give her music o' mornings; they say, it will penetrate.
Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: if you can penetrate her with your fingerling; so; we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain; but I'll never give o'er. First, a very excellent good conceited thing: after, a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phæbus' gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chaste'd flowers that lies;
And twinkling Mary-buds begin
To spe their golden eyes;
With every thing that pretty is,
My lady sweet, arise;
Arise, arise!

So, get you gone. If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better: if it do not, it is a fault in her ears, which horse-hairs, and calves' gutes, nor the noise of an unpav'd eunuch to boast, can never amend.

[Exit Musicians.]

Enter Cymbeline and Queen.

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

C6. I am glad I was up so late, for that's the reason I was up so early: he cannot choose but take this service I have done, fatherly.—Good morrow to your majesty, and to my gracious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our sworn daughter? Will she not forth?

C6. I have assail'd her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her mision is too new; she hath not yet forgot him: some more time Must wear the print of his remembrance out, And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king; Who lets go by no vantages, that may Prefer you to his daughter. Frame yourself To orderly sollicits, and be friend'd With aptness of the season: make desertions Increase your services: so seen, as if You were inspir'd to do three duties which You tender to her; that you in all obey her, Save when command to your dismissal tends, And therein you are senseless.

C6. Enter a Messenger.

Senceless? not so.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome: The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow, albeit he comes on angry purpose now: But that's no fault of his: we must receive him According to the honour of his sender; And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us, We must extend our notice.—Our dear son, When you have given good morrow to your mistress, Attend the queen, and us: we shall have need To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Enter Cym., Queen, Lords, and Mess.

C6. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not, Let her lie still, and dream.—By your leave, ho!— I know her women are about her: what [Calls.

If I do line one of their hands? 'Tis gold Which buys admanance; oft doth, and makes Diana's rangers, false themselves, yield up Their deer to the stand o' the stealer; and 'tis gold Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves the thief; Nay, sometime, hangs both thief and true man: what Can it not do, and undo? I will make One of her women lawyer to me; for I yet not understand the case myself.

By your leave. [Knocks.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who's there, that knocks?

C6. A gentleman.

Lady. No more?

C6. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more Than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours,
Can justly boast of. What's your lordship's pleasure?

C6. Your lady's person: is she ready?

Lady. Ay, To keep her chamber.

C6. There's gold for you: sell me your good report.

Lady. How! my good name? or to report of you What I shall think is good?—the princess—

Enter Imogen.

C6. Good morrow, fairest: sister, your sweet hand.

Imo. Good morrow, sir. You lay out too much pain For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I give, Is telling you that I am poor of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

C6. Still, I swear, I love you. Imo. If you but said so, 't were as deep with me: If you swear still, your recompence is still That I regard it not.

C6. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say I yield, being silent, I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: faith, I shall unfold equal discourses To your great kindness. One of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

C6. To leave you in your madness? 't were my sin: I will not.

Imo. Fools are not mad folks.

C6. Do you call me fool?

Imo. As I am mad, I do:

If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad;
That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir,
You put me to forget a lady's manners,
By being so verbal: and learn now, for all,
That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce,
By the very truth of it, I care not for you;
And am so near the lack of charity,
(To accuse myself) I hate you; which I had rather
You felt than make 't my boast.

C6. You sin against

Obedience, which you owe your father. For The contract you pretend with that base wretch, (One, bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes, With scraps o' the court) it is no contract, none: And though it be allow'd in meaneer parties, (Yet who than he more mean?) to knit their souls (On whom there is no more dependency But brats and beggary) in self-figur'd knot, Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by The consequence o' the crown, and must not foil The precious note of it with a base slave, A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth, A pantler, not so eminent.

Imo. Profane fellow! Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more But what thou art besides, thou wert too base To be his groom: thou wert dignified enough, Even to the point of envy, if 't were made Comparative for your virtues, to be styl'd The under hangman of his kingdom, and head

SCENE IV.

CYNTHIA. 869

For being preserv'd so well.

Clo. The south-fog rot him!

Imo. He never can meet more miscience, than come
To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment,
That ever hath but clip'd his body, is dearer
In my respect than all the hairs above thee,
Were they all made such men.—How now, Pisania!

Enter Pisania.

Clo. His garment? Now, the devil—

Imo. To Dorothy my woman he is thee presently.—

Clo. His garment?

Imo. I am spirted with a fool;
Frighted, and anger'd worse.—Go, bid my woman
Search for a jewel, that too casually
Hath left mine arm: it was thy master's; 'shrew me,
If I would lose it for a revenue
Of any king's in Europe. I do think,
I saw't this morning: confident I am,
Last night 'twas on mine arm: I kiss'd it.
I hope, it be not gone to tell my lord
That I kiss'd: aught but he.

Pis. 'T will not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go, and search. [Exit Pis. Clo. You have abus'd me.—

His meanest garment?

Imo. Ay; I said so, sir.

If you will make 't an action, call witness to 't.

Clo. I will inform your father.

Imo. Your mother too:
She's my good lady; and will conceive, I hope,
But the worst of me. So I leave you, sir,
To the worst of discontent. [Exit.

Clo. I'll be reveng'd.—

His meanest garment.?—Well. [Exit.

Enter Posthumus and Philario.

Post. Fear it not, sir: I would, I were so sure
To win the king, as I am bold, her honour
Will remain hers.

Phi. What means do you make to him?

Post. Not any; but abide the change of time;
Quake in the present winter's state, and wish
That warmer days would come. In these fear'd hopes,
I barely gratify your love: they failing,
I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness, and your company,
O'erpays all I can do. By this, your king
Hath heard of great Augustus: Caius Lucius
Will do 's commission throughly; and, I think,
He'll grant the tribute, send the arraigners,
Or look upon our Romans, whose remembrance
Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe,

(Statist though I am none, nor like to be)
That this will prove a war; and you shall hear
The legion, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing Britain, than have tidings
Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen
Are men more order'd, than when Julius Cesar
Smould in their lack of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning at: their discipline
(Now mingled with their courage) will make known
To their approvers, they are people, such
That mend upon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phi. See! Iachimo?

Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by land.

And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,
To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir.

Post. I hope, the briefness of your answer made
The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady
Is one of the fairest that I have look'd upon.

Post. And, therewithal, the best; or let her beauty
Look through a casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post. Their tenor good, I trust.

Iach. 'T is very like.

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court,
When you were there?

Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet.—
Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I had lost; I should have lost the worth of it in gold.
I'll make a journey twice as far, t' enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortness, which
Was mine in Britain; for the ring is won.

Post. The stone's too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit,
Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, sir,
Your loss your sport: I hope, you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must,
If you keep covenant. Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home. I grant
We were to question farther: but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honour,
Together with your ring: and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your wills.

Post. If you can make 't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand
And ring are yours: if not, the foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or lose;
Your sword, or mine; or masterless leaves both
To whom shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances,
Being so near the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe: whose strength
I will confirm with oath; which, I doubt not,
You 'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find
You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bedchamber,
(Where, I confess, I slept not, but, profess,
Had that was well worth watching) it was hang'd
With tapestry of silk and silver; the story,
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or tor
The press of boats, or pride: a piece of work
So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive
In workmanship, and value; which, I wonder'd.
Could be so rarely and exactly wrought,
Since the true life on 't twas.

Post. Th' is most true;
And this you might have heard of here, by me,
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars
Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must.
Or do your honour injury.

Iack. The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste Dian, bathing: never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves: the cutter
Was as another nature, dumb; ou west her,
Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap,
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iack. The roof o’ the chamber
With golden cherubins is fretted: her andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winged Cupids
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands.

Post. This is her honour.—
Let it be granted, you have seen all this, (and praise
Be given to your remembrance) the description
Of what is in her chamber nothing saves
The wager you have laid.

Iack. Then, if you can,
Be pale: I beg but leave to air this jewel; see!—
[Producing the Bracelet.

And now ’tis up again: it must be married
To that your diamond; I’ll keep them.

Post. Jove!—
Once more let me behold it. Is it that
Which I left with her?

Iack. Sir, (I thank her) that:
She stripp’d it from her arm; I see, her yet;
Her pretty action did outwit her gift,
And yet enrich’d it too. She gave it me,
And said, she priz’d it once.

Post. May be, she pluck’d it off.

Iack. She writes so to you, doth she?
Post. O! no, no, no; ’tis true. Here, take this too;
[Giving the Ring.

It is a basilisk unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on ’t.—Let there be no honour,
Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance; love,
Where there’s another man: the vows of women
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues, which is nothing.—
O, above measure false!

Phi. Have patience, sir,
And take your ring again: ’tis not yet won:
It may be probable she lost it; or,
Who knows, if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stolen it from her?

Post. Very true;
And so, I hope, he came by ’t.—Back my ring.—
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this, for this was stolen.

Iack. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Bark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears.
’Tis true.—nay, keep the ring.—’Tis true. I am sure,
She would not lose it: her attendants are
All sworn, and honourable.—they induc’d to steal it!
And by a stranger.—No, he hath enjoy’d her:
The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this:—she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.—
There, take thy hire; and all the fiends of hell
Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient.
This is not strong enough to be believ’d
Of one persuaded well of.

Post. Never talk on’t;

Iack. She hath been coict by him.

Post. If you seek
For farther satisfying, under her breast
(Worthy the pressing) lies a mole, right proud
Of that most delicate lodging: by my life,
I kiss’d it, and it gave me present hunger
To feed again, though full. You do remember
This stain upon her?

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm
Another stain, as big as hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Iack. Will you hear more?

Post. Spare your arithmetic: never count the turns
Once, and a million!

Iack. I’ll be sworn,—

Post. No swearing.
If you will swear you have not done ’t, you lie;
And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny.
Thou ’st made me euckold.

Iack. I will deny nothing.

Post. O, that I had her here, to hear her limb-meal!
I will go there, and do ’t; ’tis the court; before
Her father.—I’ll do something. [Exit.

Phi. Quite besides
The government of patience!—You have won:
Let’s follow him, and pervert the present wrath
He hath against himself.

Iack. With all my heart. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women
Must be half-workers? We are all bastards;
And that most venerable man, which I Did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp’d; some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit: yet my mother seemed
The Dion of that time; so doth my wife
The nonpareil of this.—O vengeance, vengeance!
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain’d,
And pray’d me oft for forbearance; did it with
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on’t
Might well have warm’d bid Saturn; that I thought her
As chaste as unaunn’d snow:—O, all the devils!—
This yellow Iachimo, in an hour, wass’t not?—
Or less,—at first: perchance he spoke not, but,
Like a full-scour’d boar, a foaming’ one.
Cry’d “oh!” and mounted: found no opposition
But what he look’d for should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The woman’s part in me! For there’s no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman’s part: be it lying, note it,
The woman’s; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Lust and rank thoughts, hers, hers, hers; revenges, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longings, slanders, mutability,
All faults that may be nam’d; nay, that hell knows,
Why, hers, in part, or all: but, rather, all;
For even to vice
They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I’ll write against them,
Detest them, curse them.—Yet ’t is greater skill,
In a true hate, to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better. [Exit
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Britain. A Room of State in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter Cymeline, Queen, Cloven, and Lords, at one Door; at another, Caius Lucius, and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, now, what would Augustus Caesar with us? Luc. When Julius Caesar (whose remembrance yet lives in men's eyes, and will to ears, and tongues, be theme, and bearing ever) was in this Britain, And conquer'd it, Cassiabelen, thine uncle, (Famous in Caesar's praisers, no whit less Than in his feats deserving it) for him And his succession, granted Rome a tribute, Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately Is left untender'd. Queen. And, to kill the marvel, Shall be so ever. Clo. There be many Caesars, Ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay, For wearing our own noses. Queen. That opportunity, Which then they had to take from us, to resume We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege, The kings your ancestors, together with The natural bravery of your isle; which stands As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in With rocks unscaleable, and roaring waters: But send them up to the top-mast. A kind of conquest Caesar made here: but made not here his brag Of "came," and "saw," and "overawe:" with shame (The first that ever touch'd him) he was carried From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping, (Poor ignorant baubles!) on our terrible seas, Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surge, crack'd As easily 'gainst our rocks. For joy whereof The fam'd Cassiabelen, who was once at point (O. giglot fortune!) to master Caesar's sword, Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright, And Britons strut with courage. Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid. Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Caesars: other of them may have crooked noses; but, to owe such straight arms, none. Cym. Son, let your mother end. Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard As Cassiabelen: I do not say, I am one; but I have a hand.—Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Caesar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now. Cym. You must know, Till the injurious Romans did extort This tribute from us, we were free: Caesar's ambition, (Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch The sides of the world) against all colour, here Did put the yoke upon us; which to shake off, Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon Ourselves to be. Clo. We do. Cym. Say, then, to Caesar, Our ancestor was that Mulciumius, which Ordain'd our laws; whose use the sword of Caesar Hath too much mangled; whose repair, and franchise, Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, Though Rome be therefore angry. Mulciumius made our laws, Who was the first of Britain which did put His brows within a golden crown, and call'd Himself a king. Luc. I am sorry, Cymeline, That I am to pronounce Augustus Caesar (Caesar, that hath more kings his servants, than Thyself domestic officers) thine enemy. Receive it from me, then.—War, and confusion, In Caesar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look For fury not to be resisted.—Thus defied, I thank thee for myself. Cym. Thou art welcome, Caius. Thy Caesar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honour; Which he, to seek of me again, perforse, Behoves me keep at utterance. I am perfect, That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for Their liberties, are now in arms; a precedent Which not to read would show the Britons cold: So Caesar shall not find them. Luc. Let proof speak. Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day or two, or longer: if you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours. If you fall in the adventure, our crows shall fare the better for you; and there's an end. Luc. So, sir. Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and he mine: All the remain is, welcome [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter Pisanio.

Pis. How! of adultery? Wherefore write you not What monsters here accuse?—Leonatus! O. master! what a strange infection Is fallen into thy ear! What false Italian (As poisonous tongu'd, as handed) hath prevail'd On thy too ready hearing?—Disloyal? No: She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes, More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults As would take in some virtue.—O, my master! Thy mind to her is now as low, as were Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her? Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command?—I, her?—her blood? If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I, That I should seem to lack humanity, So much as this fact comes to? "Do't. The letter [Reading That I have sent her, by her own command Shall give thee opportunity."—O, damn'd paper! Black as the ink that's on thee. Senseless bauble, Art thou a foolsey for this act, and look'st So virgin-like without? Lo! here she comes. Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.
Act III.

Imo. How now, Pisanio!

Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.

Imo. Who? thy lord? that is my lord: Leonatus.

O! learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
That knew the stars, as I his characters;
He'd lay the future open. —You good gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
That we two are asunder,—let that grieve him:
Some griefs are medicable: that is one of them,
For it doth physick love;—of his content,
All but in that! —Good wax, thy leave. —Bless'd be,
You bees, that make these looks of counsell! Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike:
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clape young Cupid's tables. —Good news, gods!

[Reads.]

"Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, as you, O!
the dearest of creatures, would even renew me with your eyes. Take notice, that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven: what your own love will out of this advise you follow. So, he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love,

"LEONATUS POSTHUMUS."

O, for a horse with wings! —Hear'st thou, Pisanio? He is at Milford-Haven: read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I?

Glide thither in a day? —Then, true Pisanio,
(Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st,—
O, let me bate! —but not like me;—yet long'st,—
But in a fainter kind:—O! not like me,
For min's beyond beyond) say, and speak thick,1 (Love's counsellor should fill the bores of hearing,
To the smothering of the sense) how far it is
To this same blessed Milford: and, by the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
T' inherit such a haven: but, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and, for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going,
And our return, to excuse:—but first, how get hence.
Why should excuse be born, or e'er begot?
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

Pis. One score 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam, 's enough for you, and too much, too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to 's execution, man,
Could never go so slow: I have heard of riding wagers,
Where horses have been nimbler than the sands
That run i' the clocks by half. —But this is folly. —
Go, bid my woman feign a sickness; say
She'll come to her father; and provide me, presently,
A riding suit, no coeterer than would fit
A franklin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me, man: nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues, but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through. Away, I pr'ythee:
Do as I bid thee. There's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way.

[Exeunt.]

Scene III.—Wales. A mountainous Country, with a Cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such

Whose roof's as low as ours. Stoop, boys: this gate
Instructs you how t' adore the heavens, and bows you
To a morning's holy office: the gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet' through
And keep their impious turbands on, without
Good-morrow to the sun.—Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gui. Hai!

BEL. Now, for our mountain sport. Up to yon' hill:

Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Consider,
When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens and sets off;
And you may then revolve what tales I have told you,
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
That service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd: to apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit from all things we see;
And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O! this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a bob,
Prinder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk:
Such gain the cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keeps his book unrosed.² No life to ours.

Gui. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor un-fledg'd.

Have never wing'd from view o' the nest; nor know
not
What air's from home. Haply this life is best,
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known, well corresponding
With your stift age; but unto us it is
A cell of ignorance, travelling abed,
A prison for a debtor, that doth not dare
To strike a limit.

Bel. What should we speak of.
When we are old as you? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how
In this our pinching cave shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? —We have seen nothing:
We are beastly: subtle as the fox for prey;
Like warlike as the wolf for what we eat:
Our valour is to chase what flies; our case
We make a quire, as doth the prison'bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

BEL. How you speak!

Did you but know the city's usuries,
And felt them knowingly: the art o' the court,
As hard to leave, as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling: the toil of the war,
A pain that only seems to seek out danger
I' the name of fame, and honour; which dies i' the search,

And hath as oft a slanderous epitaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many times,
Doth ill deserve by doing well: what's worse,
Must courtly at the censure.—O, boys! this story
The world may read in me: my body's mark'd
With Roman swords, and my report was once
First with the best of note. Cymbeline lov'd me:
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: then, was I a tree,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit; but, in one night.

¹ Rep todavía: in f. e. ² Sleep: in folio. ³ Strut. ⁴ Sleep: in f. e. ⁵ An expression of contempt. ⁶ His accounts unpaid. ⁷ Or: in folio. ⁸ Pope made the change.
A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Slock down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.

Gui. Uncertain favour!
Bel. My fault being nothing (as I have told you oft)
But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd
Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline,
I was confederate with the Romans: so,
Follow'd my banishment; and this twenty years
This rock, and these desolations, have been my world;
Where I have liv'd at honest freedom, paid
More pious debts to heaven, than in all
The fore-end of my time.—But, up to the mountains!
This is not hunter's language. He that strikes
The venison first shall be the lord of the feast;
To him the other two shall minister,
And we will fear no poison, which attends
In place of greater state. I'll meet you in the valleys.

[Exeunt Guin. and Aes.
How hard it is, to hide the sparks of nature!
These boys know little, they are sons to the king;
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.
They think, they are mine; and, though train'd up thus meanly
I' the cave wherein they bow, ¹ their thoughts do hit
The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them,
In simple and low things, to prince it, much
Beyond the trick of others. This Polydore,—
The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, whom
The king his father call'd Guiderius,—Jove!
When on my three-foot stool I sit, and tell
The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out
Into my story: say,—Thus mine enemy fell;
And thus I set my foot on 's neck; ² even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture
That acts my words. The younger brother, Cadwal,
(Once Arviragus) in as like a vigour, ³
Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more
His own conceiving. Hark! the game is rous'd.—
[Horae wind. ⁴

O Cymbeline! heaven, and my conscience, knows,
You did unjustly banish me; whereas
At three, and two years-old, I stole those babes,
Thinking to bar thee of succession, as
Thou restitution of my lands. Euriphile,
Thou wast their nurse: they took thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to her grave:
Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd,
They take for natural father. [Horae.]—The game is up.

SCENE IV.—Near Milford-Haven.
Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from horse, the place
Was near at hand. —Ne'er long'd my mother so
To see me first, as I have now. Pisanio! Man!
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind
That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that shiegh
From thy inward thee? One, but painted thus,
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond self-explication: put thyself
Into a humour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my sadder senses. What's the matter?
Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with

[Ps. offers a Letter.*

A look unporter? If it be summer news,
Smile to't before; if wintery, thou need'st
But keep that countenance still.—My husband's hand!
That drug-damn'd Italy hath out-crafted him,
And he's at some hard point. —Speak, man: thy tongue
May take off some extremity, which to read
Would be even mortal to me.

Ps. Please you, read; [Giving it.*
And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing
The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.] "Thy mistres, Pisanio, hath played
The strumpet in my bed: the testimonies whereof bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak surprizes, but from proof as strong as my grief, and as certain
As I expect my revenge. That part, thou, Pisanio, must act for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers. Let thine own hands take away her life;
I shall give thee opportunity at Milford-Haven; she hath my letter for the purpose: where, if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal."

Ps. What shall I hence to draw my sword? the paper
Hath cut her throat already. —No; 'tis slander.
Whose edge is sharper than the sword: whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,
Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave
This vipersque slander enters. —What cheer, madam?

Imo. False to his bed! What is it to be false?
To lie in watch there, and to think on him?
To weep 'twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge nature,
To break it with a fearful dream of him,
And cry myself awake? that's false to his bed,
Is it?

Ps. Alas, good lady!

Imo. I false? Thy conscience witness.—Iachimo,
Thou didst accuse him of incontinency;
Thou then look'dst like a villain; now, methinks,
Thy favour's good enough. Some joy of Italy,
Whom smothers her with painting: ⁵ hath betray'd him.
Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion;
And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls,
I must be ripp'd — to pieces with me! —O!
Men's vows are women's traitors. All good seeming,
By thy revolt, O husband! shall be thought
Put on for villainy; not born where ¹t grows,
But worn a bait for ladies.

Ps. Good madam, hear me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false ⁶ennes
Were in his time thought false; and Simon's weeping
Did scandal many a holy tear; took pity
From most true wrought wisdom: so thou, Posthumus,
Wilt lay the leave on all proper men:
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false, and perfur'd,
From thy great fall. —Come, fellow, be thou honest:
Do thou thy master's bidding. When thou seest him,
A little witness my obedience: look!
I draw the sword myself: take it; and hit
The innocent mansion of my love, my heart.
Fear not; 'tis empty of all things, but grief:
Thy master is not wrapt up, where was, indeed,
The riches of it. Do his bidding; strike,
Thou may'st be valiant in a better cause,
But now thou seem'st a coward.

Ps. Hence, vile instrument!
Thou shalt not damn my hand.

* where on the bow: in folio. Warburton made the change. ² figure: in f. e. ³ ⁴ Not in f. e. ⁵ Whose mother was her painting:
Why, I must die;
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No servant of thy master's. Against self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That craven's weak hand. Come, here's my heart:
Something's aforesaid. Soft, soft! we'll no defence;
Obedient as the seaboard.—What is here?
The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus,
All turn'd to heresy? Away, away,
Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more
Be tormentors to my heart. Thus may poor fools
Believe false teachers: though those that are betray'd
Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of woe.
And thou, Posthumus, that didst set up
My disobedience 'gainst the king my father,
And make me put into contempt the suits
Of princely followers, shalt hereafter find
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rascality: and I grieve myself,
To think, when thou shalt be disreg'd by her
That now thou tir'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me.—Pr'ythee, despatch:
The lamb entreats the butcher: where's thy knife?
Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
When I desire it too.

Pis. O gracious lady! Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink.

Imo. Do't, and to bed, then.

Pis. I'll crack mine eye-balls first.4

Imo. And wherefore then, didst undertake it?
Why hast thou abus'd
So many miles with a pretence? this place?
Mine action, and thine own? our horses' labour?
The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For my being absent: whereunto I never Purpose return? Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent, when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th'elected deer before thee?

Pis. But to win time,
To lose so bad employment; in the which I have consider'd of a course. Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary; speak:
I have heard I am a strumpet, and mine ear,
Therein false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor lent to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.
Most like,
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be,
But that my master is abus'd:
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtezans.

Pis. No, on my life.
I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded
I should do so: you shall be mis'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? where abide? how live?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court—
Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple, empty nothing,
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
The sort in Britain must you bide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,
Are they not but in Britain? I the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it;
In a great pool, a swan's nest: pr'ythee, think
There's livers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. Th' ambassador,
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven
To-morrow: now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is, and but disguise
That, which 'tis appear itself, must not yet be,
But by self-danger, you should tread a course
Privy, yet full of view: yes, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus; so nigh, at least,
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means!
Though peril to my modesty, not death on 't,
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, here's the point
You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear, and niceness,
(The handmaids of all women, or more truly,
Woman it pretty self) into a wagish carriage.4
Ready in gibus, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the wasseal: nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it (but, O, the harder heart!) to
A hectic, no remedy! to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan; and forget
Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief; I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like me.
Forethinking this, I have already fit
(Tis in my cloak-bag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them: would you, in their serving,
And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, 'fore noble Lucius
Present yourself, desire his service, tell him
Wherein you are happy, (which you will make him know
If that his head have ear in music) doublet,
With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable.
And, doubting that, most holy. Your means abroad.
You have me, rich; and I will never fail
Beginning nor supplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with. Pr'ythee, away;
There's more to be consider'd, but we'll even
All that good time will give us. This attempt
I'm soldier to, and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I pr'ythee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell
Last, being mis'd, I be suspected of Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress.
Here is a box; I had it from the queen:
What's in it's precious; if you are sick at sea.5

SCENE V.—A Room in Cymbeline’s Palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords.

Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir.

My emperor hath wrote, I must from hence;
And am right sorry that I must report ye
My master’s enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke: and for ourself,
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs
Appear unliking.

Luc. So, sir. I desire of you
A conduct over land to Milford-Haven.—
Madam, all joy befall your grace, and you!

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office.
The due of honour in no point omit.
So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.

Clo. Receive it friendly; but from this time forth
I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner. Fare ye well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords,
Till he have cross’d the Severn.—Happiness!

[Exeunt Lucius and Lords.]

Queen. He goes hence frowning; but it honours us,
That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better:
Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor
How it goes here. It fits us, therefore, ripely,
Our chariots and our Lascmen be in readiness:
The powers that be already hatch in Gallia,
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves
His war for Britain.

Queen. 'T is not sleepy business,
But must be look’d to speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus Fath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter? She hath not appear’d
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender’d
The duty of the day. She looks us like
A thing more made of malice, than of duty:
We have noted it.—Call her before us, for
We have been too slight in suﬀerance. [Exit an Attendant.

Queen. Royal air,
since the exile of Posthumus, most retir’d
Fath her life been; the cure whereof, my lord,
’T is time must do. Beseech your majesty,
Forbear sharp speeches to her: she’s a lady
To tender of rebuke, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

[Re-enter an Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, air? How
Can her contempt be answer’d?

A ten. Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock’d; and there’s no answer
That will be given to the loud’st noise we make.

Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her,
He pray’d me to excuse her keeping close;
Wherein constrain’d by her infirmity,
He said that duty leave unpaid to you,
Which daily she was bound to proﬁt: this
She wish’d me to make known, but our great court
Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her doors lock’d?
Not seen of late? Grant, heavens, that which I Fear prove false! [Exit.

Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.

Clo. That man of hers, Pisanio, her old servant,
I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after. [Exit Cloten.

Pisanio, thou that stand’st so for Posthumus,
He hath a drug of mine: I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that, for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone? Haply, despair hath seiz’d her;
Or, wing’d with fervour of her love, she’s flown
To her dear Posthumus. Gaze she is to death, or to dishonour; and my end
Can make good use of either: she being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter Cloten.

How now, my son!

Clo. ’Tis certain, she is fled.
Go in, and cheer the king: he rage; none
Dare come about him.

Queen. All the better: may
This night forestal him of the coming day! [Exit
Clo. I love, and hate her, for she’s fair and royal;
And that she hath all courtly parts, more exquisite
Than lady, ladies, woman: from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Outsells them all. I love her therefore; but,
Disdaining me, and throwing favours on
The low Posthumus, wi’unders so her judgment,
That what’s else rare a chok’d; and in that point
I will conclude to hate her; nay, indeed,
To be reveng’d upon her: for, when foes shall—

Enter Pisanio.

Who is here?—What! are you packing, sirrah?
Come hither. Ah, you precious pandar! Villain,
Where is thy lady? In a word, or else
Thou art straightway with the ﬁends.

Pis. O, good my lord
Clo. Where is thy lady? or, by Jupiter—
I will not ask again. Close villain,
I’ll have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to ﬁnd it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whose so many weights of baseness cannot
A dranks of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord! How can she be with him? When was she miss’d?
He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, sir? Come nearer;
No farther halting: satisfy me home
What is become of her?

Pis. O, my all-worthy lord!

Clo. All-worthy villain! Discover where thy mistress is, at once,
At the next word.—No more of worthy lord,—
Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then sirs,
This paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight. [Presenting a Letter

Clo. Let’s see 't.—I will pursue her
Even to Augustus’ throne.

Pis. [Aside.] Or this, or perish.
She's far enough; and what he learns by this,
May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo. Humph!
Pis. [Aside.] I'll write to my lord she's dead. O Imogen,
Safe may'st thou wander, safe return again!
Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true?
Pis. Sir, as I think.
Clo. It is Posthumus' hand; I know 't. Sirrah, if thou wouldest not be a villain, but do me true service, undergo those employments, wherein I should have cause to use thee, with a serious industry,—that is, what villainy so e I bid thee do, to perform it directly and truly, I would think thee an honest man: thou shouldst neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preferment.
Pis. Well, my good lord.
Clo. Wilt thou serve me? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not, in the course of gratitude, but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?
Pis. Sir, I will.
Clo. Give me thy hand: here's my purse. Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?
Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.
Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service; go.
Pis. I shall, my lord. [Exit.

CLO. Meet thee at Milford-Haven,—I forgot to ask him one thing: I'll remember 't anon.—Even there thou villain, Posthumus, will I kill thee,—I would, these garments were come. She said upon a time (the bitterness of it now belch from my heart) that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, will I ravish her: first kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,—and when my lust had dined, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised) to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter PISANIO, with the Clothes.

Be those the garments?
Pis. Ay, my noble lord.
Clo. How long is's since she went to Milford-Haven?
Pis. She can scarce be there yet.
Clo. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee; the third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary mute to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferment shall tender itself to thee.—My revenge is now at Milford: would I had wings to follow it.—Come, and be true. [Exit.
Pis. Thou bidd'st me to thy lose: for true to thee Were to prove false, which I will never be To him that is most true.—To Milford go, And find not her whom thou pursuest. Flow, flow, You heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's speed Be cross'd with slowness: labour be his need! [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Before the Cave of BELARIUS.

Enter IMOGEN, attired like a Boy.

IMO. I see a man's life is a tedious one:
I have 'irld' myself, and for two nights together Have made the ground my bed: I should be sick, But that my resolution helps me.—Milford,
When from the mountain-top Pisanio sh'd be gone,

Thou wast within a ken. O Jove! I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be relev'd. Two beggars told me
I could not miss my way: will poor folks lie,
That have affections on them, knowing 't is
A punishment, or trial? Yes; no wonder,
When rich ones scarce tell true: to lapse in fullness
Is sorrier, than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings, than beggars.—My dear lord!
Thou art one of the false ones: now I think on thee,
My hunger's gone; but even before, I was
At point to sink for food.—But what is this?

[Seeing the Cave.

Here is a path to it: 't is some savage hold:
I were best not call; I dare not call; yet famine,
Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant.
Plenty, and peace, breed coarsers; hardness ever
Of hardness is mother.—Ho! Who's here?
If any thing that 's civil, speak; if savage,
Take, or lend. Ho!—No answer? then, I'll enter.
Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy
But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on 't.
Such a foe, good heavens!

[Enter into the Cave.

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIGAUD.

Bel. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman, and
Are master of the feast: Cadwal, and I,
Will play the cook and servant; 't is our match.
The sweat of industry would dry, and die,
But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs
Will make what's homely, savoury: weariness
Can snore upon the fient, when resty cloth
Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be here,
Poor house, that keepst thyself!

Gui. I am thoroughly weary.

Arv. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite

Gui. There is cold meat i' the cave: we'll browns

Bel. Stay: come not in. [Looking in

But that it sits our victuals, I should think
Here were a fairy.

Gui. 's the matter, sir?—Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness
No elder than a boy! [Enter Imogen.

IMO. Good masters, harm me not:
Before I enter 'd here, I call'd: and thought
To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took. Good troth,
I have stolen nought; nor would not, though I had

Gold strew'd i' the floor. Here's money for my mea:
I would have left it on the board, so soon
As I had made my meal, and parted
With prayers for the provider.

Gui. Money, youth?

Arv. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt;
As 't is no better reckon'd, but of those
Who worship dirty gods.

IMO. I see, you are angry.

Bel. Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should Have died, had I not made it.

IMO. To Milford-Haven.

Bel. What is your name?

IMO. Fidele, sir. I have a kineman, who
Is bound for Italy: he embark'd at Milford;
To whom being going, almost spelt with hunger.
I am fallen in this offends—

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Forest, near the Cave.

Enter Cloten.

Cl. I am near to the place where they should meet. Pisanio have mapp'd it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistresse, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather saving reverence of the word) for 't is said, a woman's face comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself; (for it is not vainly for a man and his glass to confer in his own bawdy!) I mean, the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less you, more strong, not beneath fortune in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the me, above him in birth. alike conversant in general graces, and more remarkable in single oppositions: at this perverse errant thing loves him in my despitethat mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour off, thy mistress enforced, thy garments cut to pieces before thy face; and all this done, spurn her me to her father, who may, haply, be a little angry with so rough usage, but my mother, having power to his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe: out, sword, and to a sore purpose. Fortune, put them into my hand! This is a very description of their meeting-place, and the how darest not deceive me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Before the Cave.

Enter, from the Cave, Belarius, guidierius, Arviragus, and Imogen.

Bel. You are not well: [To Imogen.] remain here in the cave:

We'll come to you after hunting.

Arv. Brother, stay here: [To Imogen.] Are we not brothers? Imo. So man and man should be. But clay and clay differs in dignity, whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gui. Go you to hunting; I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not,—yet I am not well; But not so citizen a wanton as to seem to die, ere sick. So please you, leave me, Stick to your journal course: the breach of custom is breach of all. I am ill; but your being by me, Cannot amend me: society is no comfort To one not sociable. I am very sick. Since I can reason of it: pray you, trust me here. I'll rob none but myself, and let me die, stealing so poorly.

Gui. I love thee; I have space it: How much the quantity, the weight so much, As I do love my father.

Bel. What! how? how? Arv. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me In my good brother's faults: I know not why

---

1 Discordant.
2 The rest of this direction is not in f. a. 3 this impertinent thing: in f. a.
I love this youth; and I have heard you say,
Love’s reason without reason: the bier at door,
And a demand who is’t shall die, I’d say,
My father, not this youth.

Bel.

[Aside.] O noble strain!
O worthiness of nature! breed of greatness!
Cowards father cowards, and base things sire base:
Nature hath meal and bran: contempt and grace.
I am not their father; yet who this should be Doth miracle itself, lov’d before me.—
’T is the ninth hour o’ the morn.

Arv. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arv. You health.—So please you, sir.

Imo. [Aside.] These are kind creatures. Gods, what lies I have heard!
Our courtiers say, all’s savage but at court:
Experience, O! thou disprove’st me.
Th’ imperious seas breed monsters; for the dish,
Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish.
I am sick still; heart-sick.—Pisario,
I’ll now taste of thy drug.

Gui. I could not stir him:
He said, he was gentle, but unfortunate;
Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arv. Thus did he answer me; yet said, hereafter
I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field!—
We’ll leave you for this time; go in, and rest.

Arv. We’ll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick,
For you must be our house-wife.

Imo. Well, or ill,
I am bound to you.

Bel. And shalt be ever. [Exit Imogen.

This youth, howe’er distress’d, appears he hath had Good ancestors.

Arv. How angel-like he sings. [Characters;
Gui. But his neat cookery: he cut our roots in
And sauc’d our broths, as Juno had been sick,
And he dider. Nobly he yokes
A smiling with a sigh, as if the sigh
Was that it was, for not being such a smile;
The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly
From so divine a temple, to commix
With winds that sailors rail at.

Gui. I do note,
That grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together.

Arv. Grow, patience! And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine
His perishing root with the increasing vine!

Bel. It is great morning. Come; away!—Who’s there?

[They stand back.

Enter Cloen.

Clo. I cannot find those runagates: that villain
Hath mock’d me.—I am faint.

Bel. Those runagates! Means he not us? I partly know him; ’t is Cloten, the son o’ the queen. I fear some ambush.
I saw him not these many years, and yet
I know ’tis he.—We are held as outlaws: hence!

Gui. He is but one. You and my brother search
What companies are near: pray you, away;
Let me alone with him.

[Exeunt Belarius and Arviragus.

Clo. Soft! what are you
That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers?

I have heard of such.—What slave art thou?

Gui. A thing
More savish did I know, than answering
A slave without a knock.

Clo. Thou art a robber,
A law-breaker, a villain. Yield thee, thief.

Gui. To whom? to whom? What art thou? Have An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?

Bel. Thy words, I grant, are bigger; for I wear not My dagger in my mouth. Say, what thou art,
Why I should yield to thee.

Clo. Thou villain base,
Know’st me not by my clothes?

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal
Who is thy grandfather: he made those clothes,
Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clo. Thou precious rascal,
My tailor made them not.

Gui. Hence then, and thank
The man that gave them thee. Thou art some fool;
I am loath to beat thee.

Clo. Thou injurious thief,
Hast but my name, and tremble.

Gui. What’s thy name?

Clo. Cloten, thou villain.

Gui. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it: were it toad, or adder, spile,
’T would move me sooner.

Clo. To thy farther fear,
Nay, to thy more confusion, thou shalt know
I’m son to the queen.

Gui. I am sorry for’t, not seeming
So worthy as thy birth.

Arv. Art not afraid?

 Gui. Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wise:
At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clo. Die the death.
When I have slain thee with my proper hand,
I’ll follow those that even now fled hence,

And on the gates of Jud’s town set your heads.
Yield, rustic, mountaineer.

Gui. Enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No company’s abroad.

Arv. None in the world. You did mistake him, sir.

Bel. I cannot tell: long is it since I saw him.
But time hath nothing blurr’d those lines of favor
Which then he wore: the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. I am absolute
’T was very Cloten.

Arv. In this place we left them:
I wish my brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up,
I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors: for th’ effects of judgment
Is oft the cause of fear. But see, thy brother.

Gui. This Cloten was a fool, an empty purse.

Bel. There was no money in’t. Not Hercules
Could have knock’d out his brains, for he had none:
Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head, as I do his.

Gui. What hast thou done?

Bel. I am perfect what: cut off one Cloten’s best
Son to the queen after his own report;
Who call’d me traitor, mountaineer: and swore,
With his own single hand he’d take us in,
Displace our heads, where (thank the gods!) they grew
And set them on Jud’s town.

As if it had been sow'd! Yet still it's strange,
What Cloten's being here to us portends,
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter Guiderius.

Gu. Where's my brother? I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream
In embassy to his mother: his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn Music.

Bel. My ingenuous instrument!
Hark, Polydore, it sounds; but what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion? Hark!

Gu. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gu. What does he mean? since death of my dear'st mother
It did not speak before. All solemn things
Should answer solemn accidents. The matter?
Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys,
Is jollity for aces, and grief for boys.
Is Cadwal mad?
Re-enter Arviragus, bearing in his Arms Iomger, as dead.

Bel. Look! here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms
Of what we blame him for.

Arv. The bird is dead,
That we have made so much on. I had rather
Have skipp'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,
To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch,
Than have seen this.

Gu. O sweetest, fairest lily!
My brother wears thee not the one half so well,
As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O, melancholy!
Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? find
The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish cranes
Might easiest harbour in?—Thou blesséd thing!
Jove knows what man thou mightst have made; but I,
Thou diest a most rare boy, of melancholy.—
How found you him?

Arv. Stark, as you see:
Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled stubber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at; his right cheek
Reposing on a cushion.

Gu. Where?

Arv. Of the floor;
His arms thus leagu'd: I thought he slept, and pr'ythee
My clouted brogues* from off my feet, whose rudeness
Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gu. Why, he but sleeps;
If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed:
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.

Arv. With fairest flowers
Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: thou shalt not lack
The flower, that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The azur'd hare-bell, like thy veins; no, nor
The leasy eglantine, 7 whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock* would,
With charitable bill (O bill, sore-shaming
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!)) bring thee all this;
Yes, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are none,
To winter-guard' thy core.

Gu. Pr'ythee, have done.
And do not play in wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,

1 honour: in folio. Theobald made the change.  2 thou: in folio.  3 Thos.: in folio.  4 Malone made the change.  5 A small vessel.  6 Irish, brog.  7 a shoe of eglantine: in f. o.  8 Rood-dock.  9 winter-ground: in f. o.
And not protract with admiration what is now due debt.—To the grave!

Av. Say, where shall 's lay him?
Gui. By good Euriphiile, our mother.
Av. Bo't so:
And let us, Polydore, though now our voices have got the manniish crack, sing him to the ground, as once our mother: use like note, and words, to save that Euriphiile be Fidele.
Gui. Cadwal, I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee; for notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse than priests and fanes that lie.
Av. We'll speak it, then.
Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less; for Cloten is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys; and, though he came our enemy, remember, he was paid for that: though mean and mighty, robbing together, have one dust, yet reverence, (That angel of the world) doth make distinction of place 'twixt high and low. Our foe was princely, and though you took his life, as being our foe, yet bury him as a prince.
Gui. Pray you, fetch him hither. Thersites' body is as good as Ajax, when neither is alive.
Av. If you'll go fetch him, we'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.
Ezil Belarius. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east; my father hath a reason for 't.
Av. 'Tis true.
Gui. Come on then, and remove him.
Av. So.—Begin.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heat of the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rage;
Thou worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and taken thy wages:
Golden lads and lasses must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.
Av. Fear no more the frown of the great,
Thou past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe, and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.
Gui. Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Fear not slander, censure rash;
Thou hast finish'd joy and moon:
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.
Gui. No exorcist harm thee!
Nor witchcraft charm thee!
Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Nothing ill come near thee!
Both. Quiet consumption have,
And renowned by thy grave!

Re-enter Belarius, with the Body of Cloten.
Gui. We have done our obsequies. Come, lay him down. [They place him beside Imogen.]

Bel. Here's a few flowers, but about midnight more: The herbs that have on them cold dew 'o' the night, Are strewings fit's for graves.—Upon their faces, You were as flowers, now withered: even so These herb's leaves shall, which we upon you strewn.

---

Come on, away; apart upon our knees. The ground that gave them first has them again: Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

[Exeunt Belarius, Guinea, and Arviragus.]

I'mo. [At evening.] Yes, sir, to Milford-Haven; which is the way?—I thank you.—By yond' bush?—Pray, how far this?—'Ods pittikins!—can it be six miles yet?—I have gone all night:—faith, I'll lie down and sleep. But, soft! no bedfellows.—O, gods and goddesses!—

[Seeing the Body.] These flowers are like the pleasures of the world; This bloody man, the care on't:—I hope I dream, for lo! I thought I was a cave-keeper, and cook to honest creatures; but it is not so: 'T was but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing, Which the brain makes of fumes. Our very eyes Are sometimes like our judgments, blind. Good faith, I tremble still with fear; but if there be Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it! The dream 's here still:—even when I wake, it is Without me, as within me; not imagin'd, felt. A heedless man!—The garment of Posthumus! I know the shape of 's leg: this is his hand; His foot Mercuial; his Martial thigh; The brawns of Hercules: but his Jovial face— Murder in heaven!—How?—'T is gone.—Pisanio, All curses madded Heebub gave the Greeks, And mine to boot, be darted on thee! Thou, Consip'd with that irregular devil, Cloten, Hast here cut off my lord.—To write, and read, Be henceforth treacherous!—Damn'd Pisanio Hath with his forged letters,—damn'd Pisanio— From this most bravest vessel of the world Struck the main-top!—O, Posthumus! alas! Where is thy head? where 's that? Ah me! where 's that? Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart, And left thy head on.—How should this be? Pisanio! 'T is he, and Cloten: malice and lucre in them Have hait this woe here. O! 'tis pregnant, pregnant. The drug he gave me, which, he said, was precious And cordial to me, have I not found it Murderous to the senses? That confirms it home: This is Pisanio's deed, and Cloten's: 0!—Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood, That we the horridr may seem to those Which chance to find us. O, my lord, my lord!

Enter Lucius, a Captain, and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them the legions garrison'd in Gallia, After your will, have cross'd the sea; attending You, here at Milford-Haven, with your ships: They are in readiness.

Luc. Be what from Rome?
Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners, And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits, That promise noble service, and they come Under the conduct of bold Iachino, Sienna's brother.
Luc. When expect you them?
Cap. With the next benefit of the wind.

Luc. This forwardness makes our hopes fair. Command, our present numbers be muster'd: bid the captains look to 't. Now, sir, What have you dream'd of late of this war's purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very gods show'd me a vision, (I fast, and pray'd, for their intelligence) thus:—I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd

---
From the spungy south to this part of the west,
There vanish’d in the sunbeams: which portends,
(Unless my sins abuse my divination)
Success to the Roman host.

Luc. Dream often so,
And never false.—Soft, ho? what trunk is here,
Without his top? The ruin speaks, that sometime
It was a worthy building.—How? a page!—
Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead rather;
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—
Let’s see the boy’s face.

Cap. He is alive, my lord.

Luc. He’ll then instruct us of this body.—Young one,
Inform us of thy fortunes: for, it seems,
They crave to be demanded. Who is this,
Thou makest thy bloody pillow? Or who was he,
That, otherwise than noble nature did,
Hath alter’d that good picture? What’s thy interest
In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be were better. This was my master,
A very valiant Briton, and a good,
That here by mountaineers lies slain.—Alas!—
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From case to occident, cry out for service,
Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc. ’Lack, good youth!
Thou mov’st no less with thy complaining, than Thy master in bleeding. Say his name, good friend.

Imo. Richard du Champ [Aside.] If I do lie, and do
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope
They’ll pardon.—Say you, sir?

Luc. Thy name?

Imo. Fidele, sir.

Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same:
Thy name well fits thy faith; thy faith, thy name.
Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say,
Thou shalt be so well master’d, but, be sure,
No less belov’d. The Roman emperor’s letters,
Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner,
Than thine own worth, prefer thee: go with me.

Imo. I’ll follow, sir. But first, an’t please the gods,
I’ll hide my master from the flies, as deep
As these poor pickaxes can dig: and when
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strew’d his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o’er, I’ll weep, and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me.

Luc. Ay, good youth;
And rather father thee, than master thee.—My friends,
The boy hath taught us many duties: let us
Find out the prettiest daizied plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave: come, arm him.—Boy, he is prefer’d
By thee to us, and he shall be inter’d,
As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:
Some falls are means the happier to arise. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Before the Cave.

Enter Belarius, Giderius, and Arviragus.

Gui. The noise is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it.

Arc. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to look it
From action and adventure?

Gui. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us? this way the Romans
Must or for Britons slay us, or receive us
For barbarous and unnatural revolts
During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. Sons,
We’ll higher to the mountains; there secure us.
To the king’s party there’s no going: newness
Of Cloten’s death (we being not known, not master’d Among the bands) may drive us to a render
Where we have liv’d; and so extort from ’s that Which we have done, whose answer would be death
Drawn on with torture.
This is, sir, a doubt,
In such a time nothing becoming you,
Nor satisfying us.

It is not likely,
That when they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes
And ears so cloy'd important as now,
That they will waste their time upon our note,
To know from whence we are.

Bel. p'r'sh. O ! I am known
Of many in the army: many years,
Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore him
From my remembrance: and, besides, the king
Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves,
Who find in my exile the want of breeding,
The certainty of this hard life; eye, hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promised,
But to be still hot summer's taillings, and
The shrinking slavers of winter.

Gui. Than be so,
Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army:
I and my brother are not known; yourself,
So out of thought, and thereto so o'ergrown,
Cannot be question'd.

Gui. By this sun that shines,
I'll thither. What thing is't, that I never Did see man die? scarce ever look'd on blood
But that of coward hares, hot goats, and venison?
Never braid a horse, save one that had
A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel,
Nor, iron, on his heel! I am ashamed
To look upon the holy sun, to have
The benefit of his bless'd beams, remaining
So long a poor unknown.

Gui. By heavens, I'll go.
If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave,
I'll take the better care; but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me by
The hands of Romans.

Bel. No reason I, since of your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you, boys,
If in your country wars you chance to die,
That is my bed too, lads, and there I'll lie:
Lead, lead! The time seems long; their blood thus soorn,
Till it fly out, and show them princes born. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Field between the British and Roman Camps.

Enter Posthumus, with a bloody Handkerchief.

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I'll keep thee; for I wish'd
Thou shouldst be colour'd thus. You married ones,
If each of you should take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves,
For wrying but a little?—O, Pisanio!
Every good servant does not all commands;
No bond, but to do just ones.—Gods! if you
Should have ta'en vengeance on my faults, I never Had liv'd to put on this: so had you saved
The noble Imogen to repent, and struck
Me, wretch, more worth thy vengeance. But, slack!
You snatch some hence for little faults; that's love,
To have them fall no more: you some permit
To second ills with ills, each later worse,
And make men dread it, to the doer's thrift.
But Imogen is your own: do your best wills,
And make me bless'd to obey!—I am brought hither
Among the Italian gentry, and to fight
Against my lady's kingdom: 'tis enough
That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress; peace!
I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens,
Have patiently my purpose. I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight
Against the part I come with; so I'll die
For thee, O Imogen! even for whom my life
Is, every breath, a death: and thus unknown,
Pitied nor hated, to the face of peril
Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know
More valour in me, than my habits show.
Gods, put the strength o' the Leonati in me!
To shame the guise o' the world, I will begin
The fashion, less without, and more within.

[Exit.

[their: in folio. 2 am wish'd: in folio. Pope made the change. 3 instigate. 4 elder: in f. o. 5 them: in f. o. 6 Chast.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Trumpets and Drums. Enter at one Side, Lucius, Lachimo, and the Roman Army; at the other Side,
the British Army; Leonatus Posthumus follows like a poor Soldier. They march over and go out.

Alarums. Then enter again in skirmish, Lachimo and Posthumus: he vanquisheth and dismembreth
Lachimo, and then leaves him. Alarums on both side

Luc. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom
Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady,
The princess of this country, and the air on't
Revengeingly enfeebles me; or could this earl,
A very drudge of nature's, have subdu'd me
In my profession? Knighthoods and honours, born
As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn.
If that thy gentry, Britain, go before
This lout, as he exceeds our lords, the odds
Is, that we scare are men, and you are gods. [Exit.

Alarums. The Battle continues: the Britons fly;
Cymbeline is taken: then enter, to his rescue, Belchilius, Guidericus, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground.

The lane is guarded: nothing routs us, but
The villany of our fears.

Gui. Are. Stand, stand, and fight! Alarums. Enter Posthumus, and seconds the Britons, they rescue Cymbeline, and extant: then, enter Lucius, Lachimo, and Imogen.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save thyself.
For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such
As war were hood-wink'd.

Jack. 'Tis their fresh supplies
Luc. It is a day turn'd straggity: or becomes
Let's re-enforce, or fly. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Posthumus and a Briton Lord.

Lord. Canst thou from where they made the stand?
Post. I do.

Though yet it seems, come from the fiers.

Lord. I did.

Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost,
But that the heavens fought. The king himself
Of his wings destitute, the army broken,
And but the backs of Britons seen, all dying
Through a strait lane: the enemy full-hearted,
Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having work
More plentiful than tools to do’t, struck down
Some mortally, some slightly touch’d, some falling
Merely through fear; that the strait pass was damm’d
With dead men hurt behind, and cowards living
To die with lengthen’d shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?
Post. Close by the battle, ditch’d, and wall’d with turf;
Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier,
An honest one, I warrant; who descriv’d
So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
In doing this for a country: ahardt the lane,
He, with two striplings, (lads more like to run
The country base,) than to commit such slaughter;
With faces fit for masks, or, rather, fairer
Than those for preservation one’d, or shame)
Made good the passage; cried to those that fled,
“Our Britain’s harts die flying, not our men:
To darkness fleet souls that fly backwards! Stand;
Or we are Romans, and will give you that
Like beast, which you shun beastly, and may save,
But to look back in frown: stand, stand!”—These three.
Three thousand confident, in set as many,
(For three performers are the file, when all
The rest do nothing) with this word, “stand, stand!”
Accommodated by the place, more charming
With their own nobleness (which could have turn’d
A distaff to a lance) gilded pale looks,
Part shame, part spirit renew’d; that some, turn’d coward
But by example (O, a sin in war, Damm’d in the first beginning!) gain to look
The way that they did, and to grin like lions
Upon the pikes o’ the hunters. Then began
A stop i’ the chaser, a retire; anon
A rout, confusion thick: for what they fly,
Chickens, the way which they stopp’d eagles: slaves,
The strides they victors made. And now our cowards (Like fragments in hard voyages) become
The life o’ the need: having found the back-door open
Of the unguarded hearts, Heavens, how they wound!
Some slain before; some dying; some, their friends
O’er-borne i’ the former wave: ten chariot’d by one,
Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty:
Those that would die or else resist are grown
The mortal bugs o’ the field.

Lord. This was strange chance:
A narrow lane, an old man, and two boys?
Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: you are made
Rather to wonder at the things you hear
Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon’t?
And vent it for a mockery? Here is one:
“Two boys, an old man twice a boy, a lane
Preserv’d the Britons, was the Romans’ bane.”

Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.

Post. ’Look! to what end?

Who dares not stand his foe, I’ll be his friend;
For if he’ll do, as he is made to do,
I know, he’ll quickly fly my friendship too.
You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell; you are angry. [Exit.
Post. Still going?—This is a lord. O noble misery!
To be i’ the field, and ask, what news of me.
To-day, how many would have given their honours
To have sav’d their carcasses? took heel to do’t,
And yet died too? I, in mine own woe charm’d,
Could not find death where I did hear him groan,
Nor feel him where he struck: being an army monster,
’Tis strange he hides him in fresh cups, soft beds,
Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we
That draw his knives i’ the war.—Well, I will find him;
For being now a favourer to the Briton,
No more a Briton, I have resum’d again
The part I came in. Fight I will no more,
But yield me to the veriest hind, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman; great the answer be Britons must take; for me, my ransom’s death:
On either side I come to spend my breath,
Which neither here I’ll keep, nor bear again,
But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter two Briton Captains, and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter be prais’d! Lucius is taken.
’Tis thought, the old man and his sons were angels.

2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,
That gave th’ affront with them.

1 Cap. So ’tis reported;
But none of them can be found.—Stand! who is there?
Post. A Roman,
Who had not now been drooping here, if seconds
Had answer’d him.

2 Cap. Lay hands on him; a dog!
A leg of Rome shall not return to tell
What crows have peck’d them here. He brags his service,
As if he were of note. Bring him to the king.

Enter Cymbeline, attended: Belarius, Guidediers, Arvileagus, Pisanioc, and Roman Captives. The Captains present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Jailer; after which, all go out.

SCENE IV.—A Prison.

Enter Posthumus, and Two Jailors.

1 Jail. You shall not now be stolen; you have locks
Upon you.

So, graze as you find pasture.

2 Jail. Ay, or a stomach. [Exeunt Jailors.
Post. Most welcome, bondage, for thou art a way,
I think, to liberty. Yet am I better
Than one that’s sick o’ the gout; since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity, than be cure’d
By the sure physician, death, who is the key
’T unbar these locks. My conscience, thou art fatter’d
More than my shanks, and wrists: you good gods, give me
The penitent instrument to pick that bolt,
Then, free for ever! Is ’t estomach, I am sorry?
So children temporal fathers do appease;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in gyves,
Desir’d, more than constrain’d: to satisfy,
If of my freedom ’t is the main part. take
No stricter render of me than my all.
Then I know, you are more element than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their abatement: that's not my desire.
For Imogen's dear life, take mine; and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life: you coin'd it:
'Twixt man and man they weigh not every stamp,
Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, being yours: and so, great powers,
If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence. [He sleeps.

Solemn Music. Enter, as an Apparition, Sicilis
Leonatus, Father to Posthumus, an old Man attired
Like a Warrior: leading in his Hand an ancient Matron, his Wife and Mother to Posthumus, with Music before them: then, after other Music, follow
The two young Leonats. Brothers to Posthumus, with Wounds as they died in the Wars. They circle
Posthumus round as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder-mastcr, show
Thy spite on mortal flies:
With Mars fall out. With Juno chide,
That thy adulatory
Rates and revenges.
Hath my poor boy done ought but well?
Whose face I never saw?
I died, whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending nature's law.
Whose father, then, (as men report,
Thou orphans' father art)
Thou shouldst have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vezing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her aid,
But took me in thine arms;
That from me was Posthumus rapt,
Came, crying 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity.

Sici. Great nature, like his ancestry,
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he should've the praise of the world,
As great Sicilis' heir.

1 Bro. When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he,
That could stand up his parallel,
Or fruitful object be
In eye of Imogen, that best
Could deem his dignity?

Moth. With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To be exild', and thrown
From Leonati's seat, and cast
From her he dearest one,
Sweet Imogen?

Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his nobler heart and brain
With needless jealousy;
And to become the gek' and scorn
O' the other's villainy?

2 Bro. For this from stiffer seats we came,
Our parents, and we twain,
That striking in our country's cause
Fell bravely, and were slain;
Our fealty, and Tenantius' right,
With honour to maintain.

1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hath
To Cymbeline perform'd:
Then, Jupiter, thou kind of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd

The graces for his merits due,
Being all to colours turn'd?
Sici. Thy crystal window ope; look out.
No longer exercise.
Upon a valiant race, thy harsh
And potent injuries.

Moth. Since, Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.

Sici. Peep through thy marble mansion; help!
Or we poor ghosts will cry,
To the shining synod of the rest,
Against thy deity.

2 Bro. Help, Jupiter! or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

Jupiter descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting upon an Eagle: he throws a Thunderbolt; the Ghosts fall on their Knees.

Jup. No more, you petty spirits of regions low,
Offend our hearing: hush!—How dare you ghosts
Accuse our Thunderer, whose bolt you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts?
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence; and rest
Upon your never-withering banks of flowers:
Be not with mortal accidents oppress;
No care of yours it is; you know, 'tis ours.
Whom best I love, I cross; to make my gift,
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content;
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.
Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in
Our temple was he married.—Rise, and fade!—
He shall be lord of lady Imogen,
And happier much by his affection made.
This tablet lay upon his breast, wherein
Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine;
And so, away: no farther with your din
Express impatience. lest you stir up mine.
Mount, eagle, to my palace crystaline.

Sici. He came in thunder: his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle
Swoop'd, as to foot us: his ascension is
More sweet than our blest'd fields. His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd.

All. Thanks, Jupiter.
Sici. The marble pavement closes: he is enter'd
His radiant roof.—Away! and, to be blest,
Let us with sure performance his great behest. [Ghost \n revisits Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grandeur,
And begot
A father to me; and thou hast created
A mother, and two brothers. But (O scorn !)
Given! they went hence so soon as they were born,
And so I am awake.—Poor wretches, that depend
On greatness' favour, dream as I have done:
Wake, and find nothing.—But, alas, I swerve:
Many dream not to find. neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favour; so am I;
That have this golden chance, and know not why.

Finding the Tablet.
What fairies haunt this ground? A book? O, rare one!
Be not, as in our fangled world, a garment
No blether than that it covers: let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,
As good as promise.

[Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cede shall be lopp'd branches, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow, then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty?"

Tis still a dream, or else such stuff as madmen Tongue, and brain not; either both, or nothing: Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such As sense cannot unite. Be what it is, The act of my life is like it, which I'll keep, if but for sympathy. Re-enter Jailors.

Jail. Hanging is the word, sir: if you be ready for that you are well cooked.

Post. So, if I prove a good repeat to the spectators, the dish pays the shot.

Jail. A heavy reckoning for you, sir; but the comfort is, you shall be called to no more payments, nor any more tavern bills, which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth. You come in fault for want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink; sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much; purse and brain both empty: the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness. O! of this contradiction you shall now be quit.—O, the charity of a penny card! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debitor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge.—Your neck, sir, is pen, book, and counters; so the acquittance follows.

Post. I am merrier to die, than thou art to live.

Jail. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-sheathe; but a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think, he would change places with his officer; for, look, look, sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes, indeed I do, follow.

Jail. Your death has eyes in 's head, then; I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or take upon yourself that, which I am sure you do not know, or jump the after-inquiry on your own peril: and how you shall spend in your journey's end, I think, you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going; but such as wink, and will not use them.

Jail. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes to see the way of blindness! I am sure, hanging's the way of winking. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Knock off his manacles: bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bring'st good news. I am called to be made free.

Jail. I'll be hang'd, then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a jailor: no bolts for the dead. [Exit Posthumus and Messenger.

Jail. Unless a man would marry a galloway, and begot young giblets, I never saw one so prone. Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desire to live. For all he be a Roman; and there be some of them too, that die against their wills: so should I, if I were one. If we were all of one mind, and one mind good: O, then were desolation of jailors, and gallowsees! I speak against my present profit, but my wish hath a preterment in 't. [Exit.

1 Risk. 2 Pretended.
(When she had fitted you with her craft) to work
Her son into th’ adoption of the crown;
But failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless-desperate; open’d, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposed; repented
The evils she hatch’d were not effected; so,
Despairing dier.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?
Lady. We did so, please your highness.
Cym. Mine eyes were in fault, for she was beautiful;
Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming: it had been vicious,
To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was folly in me, thou may’st say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us,
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten’d
Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call’d ransom; let it come: suffeth,
A Roman with a Roman’s heart can suffer.
Augustus lives to think on’t; and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat: my boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom’d: never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So feart, so nurse-like. Let his virtue join
With my request, which, I’ll make bold, your highness
Cannot deny: he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have serv’d a Roman. Save him, sir,
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him:
His favour* is familiar to me.—Boy,
Thou hast look’d thyself into my grace,
And art mine own. —I know not why, nor why
To say, live, boy: ne’er thank thy master; live,
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty and thy state, I’ll give it;
Yea, though thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest ta’en.

Imo. I humbly thank your highness.
Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad,
And yet I know thou wilt.

Imo. No, no; alack!
There’s other work in hand.—I see a thing
Bitter to me as death.—Your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

Luc. The boy disdains me,
He leaves me, scorn’s me: briefly die their joys,
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.—
Why stands he so perplex’d?

Cym. What wouldst thou, boy?
I love thee more and more: think more and more
What’s best to ask. Know’st thou him thou look’st on?

Imo. Speak.

Luc. Wilt have a ransom live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?
Imo. He is a Roman; no more kin to me,
Than I to your highness, who, being born your vassal,
Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore ey’st him so?
Imo. I’ll tell you, sir, in private, if you please.
To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. What’s thy name?
Imo. Fidole, sir.

Cym. Thou art my good youth, my page
I’ll be thy master: walk with me; speak freely

Bel. Is not this boy reviv’d from death?

Act. One sand another.
Not more resembles: that sweet rosy lad,
Who died, and was Fidole.—What think you?

Gu. The same dead thing alive.
Bel. Peace, peace! see farther; he eyes us not forbear.
Creatures may be alike: were’t he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Gu. But we saw him dead.
Bel. Be silent; let’s see farther.

Pis. [Aside.] It is my mistress!
Since she is living, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side:
Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [To Iachimo.] say you forth;
Give answer to this boy, and do it freely,
Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it,
Which is our honour, bitter torture shall
Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to him.

Imo. My boon is, that this gentleman may render
Of whom he had this ring.

Post. [Aside.] What’s that to him?

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say,
How came it yours?

Iach. Thou’lt torture me to leave unspoken that
Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How! me?

Iach. I am glad to be constrain’d to utter that, what Torments me to conceive. By villainy
I got this ring: ’twas Leonatus’ jewel;
Whom thou didst banish; and (which more may grieve thee,
As it doth me) a nobler air ne’er liv’d
‘Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more, my lord?

All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter.
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spine
Quail to remember,—Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? renew thy strength:
I had rather thou shouldst live while nature will,
Than die ere I hear more. Strive, man, and speak.

Iach. Upon a time, (unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour) it was in Rome, (accurs’d
The mansion where) ’twas at a feast, (O! would
Our viands had been poison’d, or at least
Those which I heav’d to head) the good Posthumus,
(What should I say?) he was too good to be
Where ill men were, and was the best of all
Amongst the rest of good ones) sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy
For beauty, that made barren the swelling boast
Of him that best could speak; for feature, lashing
The shrine of Venus, or straight-right’s Minerva;
Postures beyond brief nature; for condition,
a shop of all the qualities that man loves woman for; besides, that book of wiving, 198 airness, which strikes the eye. ——

Cym. I stand on fire.

Some to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall,

115
unless thou wouldst grieve quickly. — This Posthumus,
Most like a noble lord in love, and one
That had a royal lover took his hint;

and, not disposing whom we praise'd, (therein he was calm as virtue) he began his mistress' picture; which by his tongue being made,
and then a mind put in't, either our brags
Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description v'ry'd us unspeaking sorts.

Cym. Nay, nay, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter's chastity—there it begins.

To speak of her as Diana had hot dreams,
And she alone were cold: whereat, I, wretch,

Dread scruple of his praise; and wager'd with him
A score of gold 'gainst this, which then he wore.

Upon his honour's finger, to attain
Him suit the place of his bed, and win this ring
By hers and mine adultery. He, true knight,

So lesser of her honour confound
Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring;
And would so, had it been a carbuncle
Phoebus' wheel; and might so safely, had it been
All the worth of his heart. A ways to Britain
I cast in this design: well may you, sir,
Remember me at court, where I was taught
Your chaste daughter the wide difference
Twixt amourous and villainous. Being thus qunoch'd
Hope, not longing, mine Italian brain
Gain in your diller Britain operate
Most vilely; for my vantage, excellent;
And, to be brief, my practice so prevail'd,
That I return'd with similar proof, enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his belief in her renown
With tokens thus, and thus; averring notes
In chamber-hanging, pictures, her bracelet,
Cunning, how I got it! nay, some marks
Secret on her person, that he could not
But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd,
Having ta'en the forfeit. Whereupon—

Fethinks, I see him now,—

Post. Ay, so thou dost.

[Climbing forward.

Italian fiend!—Ah me! most credulous fool,
Groggous murderer, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villains past, in being,
Come!—O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,
Court justice! Thou, king, sent out
Or torturors ingenious: it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend,
Be ing worse than they. I am Posthumus,
Hast kill'd thy daughter,—villain-like, I lie;
Hast caus'd a lesser villain than myself,
Sacred thieves, to do it. — The temple
'S virtue was she:—yes, and she herself
Pit, and throw stones, cast mine upon me; set
He dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Call'd Posthumus Leonatus, and
A villainy less than 't was!—O Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O Imogen,
Ne'er my Imogen!

Emo. Peace, my lord! hear, hear!—

Post. Shall's have a play of this? Thou scornful page,

There lie thy part. [Striking her: she falls

Pis. O, gentleman! help

Mine, and your mistress.—O, my lord Posthumus!—
You never kill'd Imogen till now.—Help, help!—

Mine honour'd lady!

Cym. Does the world go round?

Post. How come these stags on me?

Pis. Wake, my mistress!—

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me
To death with mortal joy.

Pis. How fares my mistress?

Imo. O! get thee from my sight;
Thou gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen!

Pis. Lady,
The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing: I had it from the queen.

Cym. New matter still?

Imo. It poison'd me. O gods!

I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
Which must approve thee honest: if Pisania
Have, said she, given his mistress that confection
Which I gave him for a cordial, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?

Cor. The queen, sir, very oft import'me
To temper poison's for her; still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs
Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being t'au'en, would cease
The present power of life: but, in short time,
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions.—Have you ta'en of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My boys,

There was our error.

Gui. This is, sure, Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from you?

Think, that you are upon a rock; and now
Throw me again. [Embracing Posthumus.

Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die!

Cym. How now! my flesh, my child?
What! mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me?

Imo. Your blessing, sir. [Kneeling.

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not;
You had a motive for't. [To GUIDERIUS and ARVIRAGUS.

Cym. My tears that fall,

Prove holy water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my lord.

Cym. O! she was taught; and 'long of her it was,
That we meet here so strangely: but her son
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pis. My lord,

Now fear is from me, I'll speak truth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn: 'foam'd at the mouth, and swore
If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death. By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket, which directed him
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford.

Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments
Which he infore'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My lady's honour: what became of him,
I farther know not.

Gus. Let me end the story.
I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forefend!
I would not thy good deeds should from my lips
Pluck a hard sentence: pr'ythee, valiant youth,
Deny't again.

Gus. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a prince.
Gus. A most uncivil one. The wrongs he did me
Were nothing prince-like: for he did provoke me
With language that would make me spurn the sea,
If it could so roar to me. I cut off's head;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee:
By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law. Thou art dead.

Joe. That headless man
I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,
And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, sir king.
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself; and hath
More of thee merited, than a band of Cloten's
Had ever scar for.—Let his arms alone:

[To the Guard.
They were not born for bondage.

Cym. Why, old soldier,
Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we?

Avr. In that he spake too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three,
But I will prove that two on's are as good
As I have given out him.—My sons, I must
For mine own part unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Avr. Your danger's ours.

Gus. And our good his.

Bel. Have it at, then, by leave.

Thou hadst, great king, a subject, who was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? he is
A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He it is that hath
Assum'd this ago: indeed, a banish'd man;
I know not how, a traitor.

Cym. Take him hence.
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot:
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
And let it be confiscate all, so soon
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons?
Bel. I am too blunt, and saucy; here's my knee:
Here I arise, I will prefer my sons;
Then, spare not the old father. Mighty sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father,
And think they are my sons, are none of mine:
They are the issue of your loins, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How! my issue?

Bel. So sure as you your father's. I, old Morgan,

Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:
Your pleasure was my mere offence; my punishment
Itself, and all my treason; that I suffered
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty years
Have I train'd up; those arts they have, as I Could put into them: my breeding was, sir, as
Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile,
Whom for the theft I wedded stole these children
Upon my banishment: I mov'd her to't;
Having receiv'd the punishment before,
For that which I did then: beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason. Their dear loss,
The more of you 't was felt, the more it shap'd
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweetest companions in the world.—
The benediction of these covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st
The service, that you through have done, is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st; I lost my children.
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Be pleas'd a while.—
This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as yours is true Guiderius:
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son: he, sir, was lappid
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother, which, for more probatian,
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderius had
Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star:
It was a mark of wonder.

Bel. This is he,
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp.
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be his evidence now.

Cym. O! what am I
A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother
Rejoic'd deliverance more.—Bless'd pray you be,
That after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may reign in them now.—O Imogen!
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Imo. No, my lord;
I have got two worlds by 't.—O, my gentle brothers!
Have we thus met? O! never say hereafter.
But I am truest speaker; you call'd me brother,
When I was but your sister; I you brothers,
When you're were so indeed.

Cym. Did you e'er meet?

Arv. Ay, my good lord.

Gui. And at first meeting lov'd

Continued so, until we thought he died.

Cor. By the queen's dram she swallowed.

Cym. O rare instinct.
When shall I hear all through? This fierce abridgment Hath it to circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.—Where? how liv'd you?
And when came you to serve our Roman captive?
How parted with your brothers? how first met them?
Why fled you from the court, and whither? These,
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more, should be demanded,
And all the other by-dependencies.
From chance to chance; but not the time, nor place.
Will serve our long intergatories. See,
Posthumus anchors upon Imogen;
And she, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master, hitting
Each object with a joy: the counterchange
Is severally in all. Let’s quit this ground,
And smoke the temple with our sacrifices.—
Thou art my brother: so we’ll hold thee ever.

Imo. You are my father, too; and did relieve me,
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All o’erjoy’d,
Save these in bonds: let them be joyful too,
For they shall taste our comfort.

Imo. My good master,
I will yet do you service.

Luc. Happy be you!

Cym. The forlorn soldier, that so nobly fought,
He would have well become this place, and grace’d
The thankings of a king.

Post. I am, sir,
The soldier that did company these three
In poor beseeing: it was a fitment for
The purpose I then follow’d.—That I was he,
Speak, Iachimo: I had you down, and might
Have made you finish.

Jack. I am down again; [Kneeling.
But now my heavy conscience sinks my knee.
As then your force did. Take that life, beseech you,
Which I so often owe; but your ring first,
And here the bracelet of the trusty princess
That ever swore her faith.

Post. Kneel not to me:
The power that I have on you is to spare you;
The malice towards you to forgive you. Live,
And deal with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom’d.
We’ll learn our freeness of a son-in-law:
Pardon’s the word to all.

Arr. You holp us, sir,
As you did mean indeed to be our brother;
Joy’d are we, that you are.

Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord of Rome.

Call forth your soothsayer. As I slept, methought,
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back’d,
Appear’d to me, with other spiritely shows
Of mine own kindred: when I wak’d, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it: let him show
His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmonous!

Sooth. Here, my good lord. [Coming forward.

Luc Read, and declare the meaning.

Soth. [Reads.] “When as a lion’s whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches, which being dead many years shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshely grow, then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.”

Thou, Leonatus, art the lion’s whelp;
The fit and apt construction of thy name,
Being Leo-natus, doth import so much.
The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,
[To Cymbeline.

Which we call mollis aeras; and mollis aer
We term it mulier: which mulier, I divine,
Is this most constant wife; who, even now,
Answering the letter of the oracle,
Unknown to you, unsought, were clipp’d about
With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Soth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline
Personates thee; and thy lop’d branches point
Thy two sons forth; who, by Belarius stolen,
For many years though dead, are now reviv’d,
To the majestic cedar join’d, whose issue
Promises Britain peace and plenty.

Cym. Well, My peace we will begin.—And, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Caesar,
And to the Roman empire: promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen;
Whom heavens, in justice, both on her and hers
Have laid most heavy hand.

Soth. The fingers of the powers above do tyme
The harmony of this peace. The vision,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is fully accomplish’d; for the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen’d herself, and in the beams o’ the sun
So vanish’d: which foresaw’d our princely eagle,
Th’ imperial Caesar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.

Cym. Laud we the gods,
And let our crooked smokes climb to their nostrils
From our bless’d altars. Publish we this peace
To all our subjects. Set we forward. Let
A Roman and a British ensign wave
Friendly together; so through Lud’s town march,
And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we’ll ratify; seal it with feasts.—
Set on there!—Never was a war did cease,
Ere bloody hands were wash’d, with such a peace.

[Exeunt]

ACT I.

Enter Gower.

Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song that old was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.

It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eyes, and holy ales, 1
And lords and ladies in their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
The purpose 2 is to make men glorious;
Et bonum quo antiquius, eo melius.
If you, born in these later times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring;
I life would wish, and that I might Waste it for you, like taper-light.—

This Antioch, then: ANTIOCHUS the great
Built up this city for his chiefest seat,
The fairest in all Syria;
I tell you what my authors say:
This king unto him took a feere, 3
Who died and left a female heir,
So buxom, blithe, and full of face,
As heaven had lent her all his grace;
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke,
Bad child, worse father, to entice his own
To evil, should be done by none.
By custom what they did begin
Was with long use account no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,
To seek her as a bad-follow,
In marriage pleasures play-follow:
Which to prevent he made a law.

1 Particularly: days: in old copies. Former made the change. 2 purchase: in old copies. 3 Mate: But: in old copies. 4 Of the decrepit heads over the city gate: in old copies. 5[decrep] 6: in old copies. 7 Boundless: in old copies. Nowe made the change.
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard;
Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view
Her countless glory, which desert must gain;
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
Yond' sometime famous princes, like thyself,
Drawn by report, adventurous by desire,
Tell thee with speechless tongue, and semblance pale,
That, without covering, save yond' field of stars,
They here stand martyrs, slain in Ophicius' war;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist,
For going on death's nest, whom none resist.
Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hast taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must:
For death remember'd should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath; to trust it, error.
I'll make my will, then; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling woo,
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did:
So, I beseech a happy peace to you,
And all good men, as every prince should do:
My riches to the earth from whence they came,
But my unspar'd fire of love to you.
To the Daughter of Antiochus.
Thus, ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow.
Ant. Soothing advice, read the conclusion, then;
Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee, thou thyself shalt bleed.
Daught. Of all, 'tis yet, may'st thou prove prosperous!
Of all, 'tis yet, I wish thee happiness.
Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness, and courage.
The Riddle.
I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh, which did me breed;
I sought a husband, in which labour,
I found that kindness in a father:
He's father, son, and husband mild,
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve it you.
Sharp physic is the last: but, O! you powers,
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,
Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still,
Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill;
But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt,
For he's no man on whom perfections wait,
That, knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings,
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down and all the gods to hearken,
But being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only dance to so harsh a chime.
Good sooth, I care not for you.
Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd:
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.
Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
I would brand yourself too near for me to tell it.

Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shown;
For vice repeated is like the wandering wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts
Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell the earth is throng'd
By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth die for 't
Kings are earth's gods; in vice their law's their will
And if it goay, who dare say we two doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,
What being more known grows worse, to smother it.
All love the womb that their first beings bred,
Then, give my tongue like leave to love my head.
Ant. [Aside.] Heaven, that I had thy head! he has found the meaning;
But I will glose with him. [To him.] Young prince of Tyre,
Though by the tenor of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days;
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise.
Forty days longer we do repose you;
If by which time our secret be undone,
This mercy shows, we'll joy in such a son:
And until then your entertain shall be,
As doth befit our honour, and your worth.
Exeunt Antiochus, his Daughter, and Attendants.
Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin,
When what is done is like an hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,
Then were it certain, you were not so bad,
As with foul incest to abuse your soul;
Where now you're both a father and a son,
By your untimely claspings with your child,
(Which pleasure fills a husband, not a father)
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night,
Will shun no course to keep them from the light:
One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
Murther's as near to lust, as flame to smoke.
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
And, and the targets, to put off the shame:
Then, lest my life be crop'd to keep you clear,
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear.
[Exit.
Re-enter Antiochus.
Ant. He hath found the meaning, for the which we mean
To have his head.
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the world, Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner:
And therefore instantly this prince must die;
For by his fall my honour must keep high
Who attends us there?
Enter Thaliard.
Thal. Dost your highness call?
Ant. Thaliard,
You're of our chamber, and our mind partakes
Her private actions to your secrecy;
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold;
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

ACT I.

We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him:
It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done?
Thal. My lord, 'T is done.

Enter a Messenger.

Ant. Enough—
Let your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.

Mess. My lord, prince Pericles is fled.

Ant. [Exit Messenger.]

As thou Wilt live, fly after: and, as an arrow, shot
From a well-experienced archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so 'er re turn, unless thou say Prince Pericles is dead.
Thal. My lord, if I can get him once within my pistol's length,
I'll make him sure: so, farewell to your highness. [Exit.
Ant. Thaliard, adieu—Till Pericles be dead,
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Tyre. A Room in the Palace.

Enter PERICLES, HELICANUS, and other Lords.

Per. Let none disturb us: why should this change of thoughts?
The same companions, dull-eyed melancholy,
By me so 'd a guest is, not an hour,
In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,
The tomb where grief should sleep, can brood me quiet.
Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun them,
And danger, which I fear'd, is at Antioch,
Whose arm seems too short to hit me here;
Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other's distance comfort me.
Then, it is thus: that passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by mis-dread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care;
And what was first but fear what might be done,
Grows elder now, and cares it be not done:
And so with me:—the great Antiochus
(Gainst whom I am too little to contend,
Since he's so great, can make his will his act)
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence:
Nor boots it me to say, I honour,
If he suspect I may disown him:
And what may make him blush in being known,
He'll stop the course by which it might be known.
With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,
And with the content of war will look so huge,
Amazement shall drive courage from the state;
Our men be vanquish'd ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd that never thought offence:
Which care of them, not pity of myself,
(Who am no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them)
Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,
And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast.

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,
Peaceful and comfortable.

Hel. Peace, peace! and give experience tongue.
They do abuse the king, that flatter him:
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin;
The thing which is flatter'd, but a spark,
To which that blast gives heat and stronger glowing:
Whereas reproof, obedient and in order,
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err:

When signior Sooth, here, does proclaim a peace,
He flatters you, makes war upon your life.
Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please;
I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else; but let your cares o'er-look
What shipping, and what lading 'a in our haven,
And then return to us. [Exeunt Lords.] Helicanus, thou
Hast moved us: what seest thou in our looks?

Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in prince's frowns,
How durst thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from whence
They have their nourishment?

Per. Thou know'st I have power to take thy life from thee.

Hel. I have ground the axe myself;
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, prince rise.

Sit down; thou art no flatterer:
I thank thee for it; and heaven forbid,
That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid
Fit councilor, and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant,
What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. To bear with patience
Soch griefs as you yourself do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speakest like a physician, Helicanus,
That ministers a potion unto me,
That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me, then: I went to Antioch,
Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Are arms to prince, and bring joys to subjects.
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder;
The rest (hark in thine ear) as black as incest:
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth; but thou know'st this,
'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss.
Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector; and being here,
Bothought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants' fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than the years.
And should he doubt it, (as no doubt he doth)
That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unaided ope,
To stop that doubt he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him;
When all, for mine, if I may call 't, offence,
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:
Which love to all, of which thyself art one,
Who now reprov'st me for it—

Hel. Alas, sir!

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,
Musings into my mind, a thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,
Freely will I speak. Antiochus you fear,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
SCENE IV. — Tharsus. A Room in the Governor’s House.

Enter Cleon, Dionyzas, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyzas, shall we rest us here, And by relating tales of other’s griefs, See if I ‘ll teach us to forget our own? Dio. That were to blow at fire in hope to quench it For who digs hills because they do aspire, Throws down one mountain to cast up a higher. O my distressed lord! even such our griefs; Here they’re but felt, and seen with mischief’s eyes, But like to groves, being topp’d, they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyzas, Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it, Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish? Our tongues and sorrow do sound deep Our woes into the air; our eyes do weep, Till tongues fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; That if heaven slumber, while their creatures want, They may awake their help to comfort them. I’ll then discourse our woes, felt several years, And, wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I’ll do my best, air.

Cle. This Tharsus, o’er which I have the government, A city, on whom plenty held full hand, For riches strived herself even in the streets, Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss’d the clouds, And strangers meeter beheld, but wonder’d at; Whose men and dames so jetted* and adorn’d, Like one another’s glass to trim them by: Their tables were stor’d full to glad the sight, And not so much to feed on as delight; All poverty was scar’d, and pride so great, The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. O! ’tis too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our change These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air, Were all too little to content and please, Although they gave their creatures in abundance, As houses are defil’d for want of use, They are now starv’d for want of exercise: Those palates, who not yet two summers* younger, Must have inventions to delight the taste, Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it: Those mothers who to nouse up their babes Thought nought too curious, are ready now To eat those little darlings whom they lov’d, So sharp are hunger’s teeth, that man and wife Draw lots, who shall first die to lengthen life. Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping; Here many sink, yet those which see them fall, Have scarce strength left to give them burial. Is not this true?

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.

Cle. O! let those cities, that of plenty’s cup And her prosperities so largely taste, With their superfluous riots, hear these tears: The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where’s the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring’st in haste. For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring shore, A portly sail of ships make lattierward.

Cle. I thought as much. One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours. Some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery,
Hath' stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,
Whereas no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear; for by the semblance
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace,
And come to us as favourers, not as foes.

Cle. Thou speak'st like him's untutor'd to repeat;
Who makes the fairest show means most deceit.
But bring they what they will, and what they can,
What need we fear?
The ground's the low'st, and we are half way there.
Go, tell their general we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes,
And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord. [Exit.

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist;
If war, we are unable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hope you are,
Let not our ships and number of our men,
Be, like a beacon fir'd, to amaze your eyes.

We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets;
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load:
And these our ships you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse, was stuff'd within
With bloody veins, expecting overthow,
Are store'd with corn to make your needy bread,
And give them life whom hunger starv'd half dead.

All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Arise, I pray you, arise:
We do not look for reverence, but for love,
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any snail not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succede their evils!
Till when, (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen)
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept; feast here a while,
Until our stars that frown lend us a smile. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I wis, to incest bring;
A better prince, and benign lord,
That will prove woful both in deed and word.
Be quiet, then, as men should be,
Till he hath past'd necessity.
I'll show you those in trouble's reign,
Loosing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation
(To whom I give my benizon)
Is still at Tharsus, where each man
Thinks all is writ he spoken can:
And to remember what he does,
Build his statute to make him glorious:
But tiding to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb show.

Enter at one door PERICLES, talking with CLEON; all the Train with them. Enter at another door, a Gentleman, with a Letter to PERICLES: PERICLES shows the Letter to CLEON; then gives the Messenger a reward, and knights him. Exeunt PERICLES, CLEON, &c. severally.

Gow. Good Helican hath stayed at home,
Not to eat honey like a drone,
From others' labours: for though he strive
To kill benad, keep good alive;
And, to fulfill his prince's desire,
Sends word of all that hap in Tyre:
How Thalaiad came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was not best
Longer for him to make his rest.
He knowing so, put forth to seas,
Where when men been, there's seldom ease.
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,

SCENE I.—Pentapolis. An open Place by the Sea-side.

Enter PERICLES, &c.

Per. Yet cease your ire, you angry stars of heav'n!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas! the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your watery grave,
Here to have death in peace is all he'll crave.

Enter three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilch! 2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.
3 Fish. What, Patch-breech, I say! 3 Fish. What say you, master?
1 Fish. Look how thou stirrest now. Come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wampion.
3 Fish. 'Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men, that were cast away before us even now.
1 Fish. Alas, poor souls! it grieved my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us to help them, when,
well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.
3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus, how he bounced and tumbled? they say,

[That : in old copies. Him who is. | Stand. * that : in old copies. doing so : in old copies. Strevenus made the ab age they are half fish, half flesh: a plague on them! they ne'er come, but I look to be washed. Master, I marvel how the fishers live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why as men do a-land: the great ones eat up the little ones. I can compare our rich miser to nothing so fitly as to a whale; s'plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on the land, who never leave gaping, till they've swallowed the whole parish, church, steeple, bells and all.

Per. A pretty moral.

1 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man?

3 Fish. Because he should have swallowed me too; and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind.

Per. Simonides?

3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject of the sea
These fishers tell the infirmities of men;
And from their watery empire recollect
All that may men approve, or men detect—
Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

3 Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? if it be a day fits you, search out of the calendar, and no body look after it.

Per. 'Y may see, the sea hath cast me upon your coast—

2 Fish. What a drunken knife was the sea, to cast thee in our way.

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind,
In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball
For them to play upon, entreats you pity him;
He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece, gets more with begging, than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes, then?

Per. I never practis'd it.

3 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve, sure; for here's nothing to be got now a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What have I been have I forgot to know,
But what I am want teaches me to think on;
A man th'ngd up with cold: my veins are chill,
And have no more of life, than may suffice
To give my tongue that heat to ask thy help;
Which if thou shall refuse, when I am dead,
For that I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die quoth-a? Now, gods forbid it! I have a gown here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and morsel puddings and flap-jacks; and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did but crave.

2 Fish. But crave? Then I'll turn crafer too, and I shall 'scape whistling.

Per. Why, are all your beggers whipped, then?

4 Fish. O! not all, my friend, not all; for if all your beggers were whipped, I wish no better office than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net.

Per. Well. These honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, sir; do you know where you are?

Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis,
And our king the good Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?

1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be so called, for his peaceable reign, and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since he gains from his subjects the name of good by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey: and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to joust and tourney for her love.

Per. Were my fortunes equal to my desires. I could wish to make them.

1 Fish. O, sir! things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully do for.

His wife's soul—

Re-enter the Two Fishermen, drawing up a Net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help! here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 'twill hardly come out. Ha! bots on 't; 't is come at last, and 't is turned to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.

Thanks, fortune, yet, that after all crosses
Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself:
And though it was mine own, part of mine heritage,
Which my dear father did bequeath to me,
With this strict charge (even as he left his life)
"Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield
'Twixt me and death;? (and pointed to this brace)
"For that it sav'd me, keep it; in like necessity,
The which the gods protect thee from, it may defend thee."

It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it,
Till the rough sea, that spare not any man,
Took it in rage, though calm'd, have given 't again.
I thank thee for 't: my shipwreck now's no ill,
Since I have here my father's gift in 'e will.

1 Fish. What mean you, sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this cost of worth,
For it was sometime target to a king;
I know it by this mark. 'He lov'd me dearly,
And for his sake I wish the having of it;
And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court,
Where with it I may appear a gentleman:
And if that ever my low fortunes better,
I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest your debtor.

1 Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady?

Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms.

1 Fish. Why, do ye take it; and the gods give thee good on't!

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend; it was we that made up this garment through the rough seas of the waters: there are certain condiments, certain vails.

I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe it, I will.

By your furtherance I am cloth'd in steel;
And spite of all the rapture of the sea,
This jewel holds his biding on my arm:
Unto thy value will I mount myself
Upon a coursers, whose delightful steps

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

ACT II.

Shall make the gazer joy to see him tread.—
Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided
Of a pair of bases.¹

2 Fish. We'll sure provide: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair, and I'll bring thee to the work myself.

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will!
This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Platform leading to the Lists. A Pavilion near it, for the reception of the King, Princess, Ladies, Lords, &c.

Enter Simonides, Theseus, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?

1 Lord. They are, my liege;
And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them, we are ready; and our daughter,
In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat
For men to see, and seeing wonder at. [Exit a Lord.

Thais. It pleaseth you, my royal father, to express
My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are
A model, which heaven makes like to itself:
As jewels lose their glory if neglected.
So princes their renown, if not respected.
'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain
The labour of each knight in his device.

Thais. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight: he passes over the Stage, and his Squire presents his Shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

Thais. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Ethiopian, reaching at the sun;
The word, Luz fua esta mala.

Sim. He loves you well that holds his life of you.

[The second Knight passes over.

Who is the second that presents himself?

Thais. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:
The motto thus, in Spanish, Piu per dultura que per fuerza.

[The third Knight passes over.

Sim. And what the third?

Thais. The third of Antioch;
And his device, a wreath of chivalry:
The word, Me pompe proexit apex.

[The fourth Knight passes over.

Sim. What is the fourth?

Thais. A burning torch, that's turned upside down;
The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.

Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his power and will,
Which can as well inflame, as it can kill.

[The fifth Knight passes over.

Thais. The fifth, a hand environed with clouds,
Holding out gold that's by the touchstone tried;
The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.

[The sixth Knight passes over.

Sim. And what's the sixth and last, the which the knight himself
With such a graceful courtesy delivered?

Thais. He seems to be a stranger; but his present is
A wither'd branch, that's only green at top:
The motto, In hac spes vivo.

Sim. A pretty moral:
From the dejected state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.

1 Lord. He had need mean better, than his outward show
Can any way speak in his just commend;
For by his rusty outside he appears
To have practis'd more the whipstock,² than the lance.

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes
To an honour'd triumph strangely furnish'd.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust
Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan
The outward habit by the inward man.
But stay, the knights are coming: we'll withdraw
Into the gallery. [Exeunt.

[Great Shouts, and all cry, The mean knight!

SCENE III.—The Same. A Hall of State. A Banquet prepared.

Enter Simonides, Theseus, Ladies, Lords, Knights,
and Attendants.

Sim. Knights,
To say you are welcome were superfluous.
To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Were more than you expect, or more than's fit,
Since every worth in show commendeth itself.
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are princes, and my guests.

Thais. But you, [To Feb.] my knight and guest;
To whom this wreath of victory I give,
And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will. the day is yours:
And here, I hope, is none that envies it.
In framing an artist art hath thus decreed,
To make some good. but others to exceed;
And you're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen o' the feast,
(For, daughter, so you are) here take your place:
Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides.
Sim. Your presence glades our days: honour we love,
For who hates honour hates the gods above.

Per. Some other is more fit.

1 Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen,
That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,
Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.
Sim. Sit, sir; sit.

By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,
These cates resist me, he not thought upon.

Thais. By Juno, that is queen
Of marriage, all the viands that I eat
Do seem unsavoury, wishing him my meat.
Sure, he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but a country gentleman:
He has done no more than other knights have done,
He has broken a staff, or so; so, let it pass.

Thais. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. Yond' king's to me like to my father's picture
Which tells me in that glory once he was;
Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne,
And he the sun for them to reverence.

None that beheld him, but like lesser lights
Did veil their crowns to his supremacy;
Where now his son, like a glow-worm in the morn,
Which hath fire in darkness, pone in light:
Whereby I see that Time's the king of men;
He's both their parent, and he is their grave,

¹ A mansite, hanging from the middle to the knoes. ² entertain : in old copies. Stevens made the change. ² Whip handle.
And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What! are you merry, knights?

1 Knight. Who can be other, in this royal presence?

Sim. Here, with a cup that 's stord'nt unto the brim,

(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lipes)

We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause a while;

Yond' knight doth sit too melancholy,

As if the entertainment in our court,

Had not a show might countervail his worth.

Note it not you, Thaisa?

Thais. What is it

To me, my father?

Sim. O! attend, my daughter:

Princes, in this, should live like gods above,

Whoe'er give to every one that comes
To honour them; and princes, not doing so,

Are like to gnats, which make a sound, but kill'd

Are wonder'd at. Therefore,

To make his entrance more sweet, here say,

We drink this standing-bowl of wine to him.

Thais. Alas, my father! it besits not me

Unto a stranger knight to be so bold:

He may my proffer take for an offence,

Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How! do as I bid you, or you 'll move me else.

Thais. [Aside.] Now, by the gods, he would not please me better.

Sim. And farther tell him, we desire to know,

Of whence he is, his name, and parentage.

Thais. The king my father, sir, has drunk to you.

Per. I thank him.

Thais. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thais. And, farther, he desires to know of you,

Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre (my name, Pericles,

My education been in arts and arms)

Who looking for adventures in the world,

Was by the rough seas rest of ships and men,

And after shipwreck driven upon this shore.

Thais. He thanks your grace; names himself Pericles,

A gentleman of Tyre,

Who only by misfortune of the seas

Breasted of ships and men, cast on the shore.

Sim. Now by the gods, I pity his misfortune,

And will awake him from his melancholy.

Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles,

And waste the time which looks for other revels.

Even in your armours, as you are address'd,

Will very well become a soldier's dance.

I will not have excuse, with saying, this

Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads,

Since they love men in armes, as well as beds.

[The Knights dance.]

So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd.

Come, sir;

Here is a lady that wants breathing too:

And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre

Are excellent in making ladies trip,

And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my lord.

Sim. O! that's as much, as you would be deny'd

[The Knights and Ladies dance.]

Of your fair courtesy.—Uncaslap, unclaslap:

Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well, [dact

But you the best. [To Pericles.] Pages and lights, to con-

These knights unto their several lodgings!—Yours, sir:

We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love,

And that's the mark I know you level at:

Therefore, each one betake him to his rest;

To-morrow all for speeding do their best. [Exeunt Sim. and Per.]

SCENE IV.—Tyre. A Room in the Governor's House.

Enter Helicanus and Escanes.

Hel. No, Escanes; know this of me,

Antiochus from incest liv'd not free:

For which the most high gods, not minding longer

To withhold the vengeance, that they had in store,

Due to this heinous capital offence,

Even in the height and pride of all his glory,

When he was seated, and his daughter with him,

In a chariot of inestimable value,

A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up

Those bodies, even to loathing: for they so stunk,

That all those eyes ador'd them ere their fall,

Soon now their hand should give them burial.

Ecsa. 'T was very strange.

Hel. And yet but just; for though

This king were great, his greatness was no guard

To bar heaven's shaft, but sin had his reward.

Ecsa. 'T is very true.

1. Lord. See! not a man, in private conference

Or council, has respect with him but he.

2. Lord. It shall no longer grieve without reproof

3. Lord. And ours'be he that will not second it

1. Lord. Follow me, then.—Lord Helicanus, a word.

Hel. With me? and welcome.—Happy day, my lord.

1. Lord. Know, that our griefs are risen to the top,

And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your griefs! for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1. Lord. Wrong not yourself, then, noble Helican;

But if the prince do live, let us salute him,

Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.

If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;

If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there;

And be resolved, he lives to govern us,

Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,

And leaves us to our free election.

2. Lord. Whose death 's, indeed, the strongest in our censure:

And knowing this kingdom is without a head,

Like goodly buildings left without a roof,

Soon fall to ruin. your noble self,

That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign,

We thus submit unto, our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helican!

Hel. Try! honour's cause; forbear your suffrages

If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.

Take I your wish, I leap into the seas,

Where's hourly trouble for a minute's ease.

A twelvemonth longer, let me entreat you

To forbear the absence of your king;

If in time which expir'd he not return,

I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.

But if I cannot win you to this love,

Go search like nobles, like noble subjects,

And in your search spend your adventurous worth.

Whom if you find, and win unto return,

You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

1. Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield

And since lord Helican enjoineth us,
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

ACT III.

We with our travels will endeavour.

Hel. Then, you love us, we you, and we’ll clasp hands?
When peers thus knit a kingdom ever stands. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Pentapolis. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Simonides, reading a Letter: the Knights meet him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.
Sim. My friends, from my daughter this I let you know:
That for this twelvemonth she’ll not undertake
A married life.
Her reason to herself is only known,
Which yet from her by no means can I get.

2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my lord?
Sim. By faith, by no means: she hath so strictly tied her
To her chamber, that it is impossible.
One twelve moons more she’ll wear Diana’s livery;
This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow’d,
And on her virgin honour will not break it.

3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Exeunt.

Sim. So, they’re well despatch’d; now to my daughter’s letter.
She tells me here, she’ll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.
’Tis well, mistress; your choice agrees with mine;
I like that well:—nay, how absolute she’s in’t,
Not minding whether I dislike or no.
Well, I commend her choice,
And will no longer have it delay’d.

Soft! here he comes: I must dissemble it.

Enter Pericles.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!
Sim. To you as much, sir. I am beholding to you
For your sweet music this last night: I do
Protest, my ears were never better fed
With such delightful pleasing harmony.

Per. It is your grace’s pleasure to commend,
Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music’s master.

Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord.
Sim. Let me ask one thing.
What do you think of my daughter, sir?

Per. As of a most virtuous princess.
Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?
Per. As a fair day in summer; wondrous fair.
Sim. My daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;
Ay, so well, sir, that you must be her master,
And she’ll your scholar be: therefore, look to it.

Per. I am unworthy for her schoolmaster.
Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing else.

Per. [Aside.] What’s here?
A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre?
’Tis the king’s subtilty, to have my life.

[To him.] O! seek not to entrap me, gracious lord,
A stranger and distressed gentleman.
That never aim’d so high to love your daughter,
But sent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch’d my daughter, and too art
A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not,
Never did thought of mine levy offence;
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.

Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor! Ay, traitor.

Sim. Even in his threat, unless it be the king,
That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. [Aside.] Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish’d of a base descent.
I came unto your court for honour’s cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove he’s honour’s enemy.
Sim. No!—Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter Thaisa.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did o’er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you?

Thaisa. Why, sir, if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?—

Thaisa. [Aside.] I am glad on’t with all my heart.

To her.] I’ll tame you; I’ll bring you in subject;
Will you, not having my consent,
Bestow your love and your affections
Upon a stranger? [Aside.] who, for aught I know,
May be, (nor can I think the contrary)
As great in blood as I myself.

[To her.] Therefore, hear you, mistress; either frame
Your will to mine; and you, sir, hear you,
Either be rul’d by me, or I will make you—
Man and wife.—Nay, come; your hands,
And lips must seal it too;
And being join’d, I’ll thus your hopes destroy;
And for farther grief.—God give you joy!—
What, are you both pleas’d?

Thaisa. Yes, if you love me, so.

Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.
Sim. What? are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, if’t please your majesty.
Sim. It pleaseth me so well, I’ll see you wed;
Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Now sleep yoked hath the rout;
No din but smores the house about,
Made louder by the d’er-fed breast
Of this most pompous marriage feast.
The cat with eyne of burning coal,
Now couches ’fore the mouse’s hole;

And crickets sing at the oven’s mouth,
Are the blither for their drouth.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulded.—Be attend,
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quixantly oets;
What’s dumb in show, I’ll plain with speech.
PEERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

Dumb Show.

Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with Attendants; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a Letter: PERICLES shews it to SIMONIDES; then the Lords kneel to PERICLES. Then, enter THAITH, with child, and Lycorida; SIMONIDES shows his Daughter the Letter: she rejoices: she and PERICLES take leave of her Father, and all depart.

God. By many a dec. and painful perch
Of Pericles the careful search
By the four opposing coigns,
Which the world together joins,
Is made, with all due diligence,
That horse, and sail, and high expence,
Can stand the quest. At last from Tyre
(Fame answering the most straige inquiry),
To the court of king Simonides
Are letters brought, the tenor these:—
Antiochus and his daughter dead:
The men of Tyros on the head
Of Helicanus would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
The mutiny he there hates v' oppress;
Says to them, if king Pericles
Come not home in twice six moons,
He, obedient to their dooms,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought bither to Pentapolis,
Yravished the regions round,
And every one with claps 'gan sound,
"Our heir apparent is a king!
Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?"
Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre: His queen, with child, makes her desire (Which who shall cross?) along to go.
Omit us all their dole and woe:
Lycorida, her nurse, she takes,
And so to sea. Then, vessel shakes
On Neptune's billow: half the flood
Hath their keel cut; but fortune's mood
Varies again: the grizzly north
Disgorge some such a tempest forth
That, as a duck for life that dives,
So up and down the poor ship drives.
The lady shrieks, and well-near
Drown fall in travail with her fear;
And what ensues in this self storm
Shall for itself itself perform.
I will relate, action may Conveniently the rest convey,
Which might not what by me is told.
In your imagination hold
This stage the ship, upon whose deck
The sea-lost Pericles appears to speak. [Exit.

SCENE I.

Enter PERICLES, on shipboard.

Per. Thou God of this great vast, rebuke these surges,
Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou, that hast
Upon the winds command, bind them in brass,
Having call'd them from the deep. O! still Thy deafening, dreadful thunders; duly' quench
Thy nimble, sulphurous flames!—O! how, Lycorida!
How does my queen?—Thou storm, venomously
Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard.—Lycorida!—Lucina, O!

Divinest patroness and midwife, gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
Aboard our dear departing boat; make swift the pangs
Of my queen's travails!—Now, Lycorida—

Enter LYCORIDA, with an Infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing too young for such a place,
Who, if it had conceit, would die as I Am like to do. Take in your arms this piece
Of your dead queen.

Per. How! how, Lycorida?

Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left living of your queen,
A little daughter: for the sake of it,
Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods!
Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
Recall not what we give, and therein may Use honour with you.

Lyc. Patience, good sir,
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life;
For a more bust'rous birth had never babe:
Quiet and gentle thy conditions;
For thou 'rt the rudestest welcome to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding a nativity,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first,
Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit,
With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter Two Sailors.

1 SAIL. What, courage, sir! God save you.

Per. Courage enough. I do not fear the flaw*;
It hath done to me the worst: yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh new sea-farer,
I would it would be quiet.

2 SAIL. Slack the bowlines there; thou wilt not,
Wilt thou?—Blow, and split thyself.

Per. But enough, as the brine and cloudy billow
Kiss the moon, I care not.

1 SAIL. Sir. your queen must overboard; the sea
Works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till
The ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.

2 SAIL. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it hath been still observed, and we are strong in earnest.* There fore briefly yield her, for she must overboard straight.

Per. As you think meet.—Most wretched queen!
Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible child-bed hast thou had, my dear;
No light, no fire: the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time
To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ozeo;
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And ayre-remaining lamps, the belching whale,
And humm'ning water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Lying with simple shell:—O Lycorida!
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Nicander
Bring me the satin coffers:* lay the babe
Upon the pillow. Hie thee, whiles I say
A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit LyCORIDA.

2 SAIL. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caut'ld and bitumen ready.
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

Such strong renown as time shall never—

Enter Two Servants with a Chest.

Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even not

Did the sea toss upon our shores this chest:

'7 is of some wreck.

Cer. Set it down; let 's look upon 't.

2 Gent. '7 is like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate'er it be,

'7 is wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight:

If the sea's stomach be o'ergorg'd with gold,

'7 is a good constraint of fortune it belches upon us.

2 Gent. '7 is so, my lord.

Cer. How close '7 is caul'kd and bitum'd.

Did the sea cast it up?

Serv. I never saw so huge a bilow, sir,

As tos'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open.

Soft, soft! it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Serv. As ever hit my nostril. So, up with it,

O, you most potent gods! what 's here? as a corpse?

1 Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and embalmed

With full bags of spices! A passport too:

Apollo, perfect me! the characters! [Unfolds a Scroll.

"Here I give to understand,"

[Reads.

(If e'er this coffin drive a-land)

I, king Pericles, have lost

This queen, worth all our mundane cost.

Who finds her, give her burying;

She was the daughter of a king:

Besides this treasure for a fee,

The gods requite his charity!!"

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a threat.

That even cracks for woe!—This chanc'd to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;

For look, how fresh she looks. They were too rough,

That threw her in the sea. Make fire within:

Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,

And yet the fire of life kindle again.

The overpressed spirits. I heard

Of an Egyptian, that had nine hours lien dead,

Who was by good appliance recovered.

Enter a Servant, with Boxes, Napkins, and Fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths,—

The rough and woful music that we have,

Cause it to sound, 'beseach you.

The vial once more:—how thou stir'st, thou block!—

The music there!—I pray you, give her air.

Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes a warm

Breath out of her: she hath not been entr'ed

Above five hours. See, how she 'gins to blow

Into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The heavens

Through you increase our wonder, and set up

Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive! behold,

Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels

Which Pericles hath lost,

Begin to part their fringes of bright gold:

The diamonds of a most praised water

Do appear to make the word twice rich. Live,

And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
Rare as you seem to be! [She moves. Thus.] O dear Diana!
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?
2 Gent. Is not this strange?
1 Gent. Most rare.
Cr. Hush, gentle neighbours!
Lend me your hands; to the next chamber bear her.
Get linen: now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come;
And Escalus prince guide us!

[Exeunt, carrying Thaisa out.]

SCENE III.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.
Enter Pericles, Cleon, Dionysa, Lychorida, and Marina.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone:
My twelve months are expir'd, and Tybus stands
In a litigious thankfulness. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness; the gods
Make up the rest upon you!
Cle. Your shafts' of fortune, though they hurt you
Yet glance full wond'ringly on us. [mortality.
Dion. O, your sweet queen!
Thas the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her
To have bless'd mine eyes! [hither.
Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end
Must be as 'tis. My gentle babe Marina (whom,
For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so here)
I charge your charity withal, and leave her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may
Be manner'd as she is born.
Cle. Fear not, my lord, but think
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
(For which the people's prayers still fall upon you)
Must in your child be thought on. If negligence
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty;
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation.

Enter Gower.

Goe. Imagine Pericles arriv'd at Tyre,
Welcom'd and settled to his own desire:
His woful queen we leave at Ephesus,
Unto Diana there a votaries.
Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast-growing scene must find
At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters; who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,
Which makes her both the heart and place
Of general wonder. But slack!
That monster envy, oft the wrack
Of earnest praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife.
And in this kind hath our Cleon
One daughter, a wench fully grown,
Even ripe for marriage rite: this maid
Hight Philoten; and it is said
For certain in our story, she

[Scene IV.]

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

I believe you;
Your honour and your goodness teach me to't,
Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Uncessar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will in't. So I take my leave.
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Who shall not be more dear to my respect,
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers
Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge o' the shore;
Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune, and
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dear'st madam.—O! no tears,
Lychorida, no tears:
Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Ephesus. A Room in Cermium's House.
Enter Cermium and Thaisa.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,
Lay with you in your coffers, which are
At your command. Know you the character?
Thais. It is my lord's.
That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,
Even en my yearning time; but whether there
Delivered or no, by the holy gods,
I cannot rightly say. But since king Pericles,
My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again,
A vestal livery will I take me to,
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as you speak,
Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may abide till your date expire.
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thais. My recompense is thanks, that's all;
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Would ever with Marins be:
Be't when she weav'd the sleaved* silk
With fingers, long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp needle wound
The cymbal, which she made more sound
By hurting it: or when to the lute
She sung, and made the night-bird mute,
That still records with moan; or when
She would with rich and constant pen
Vail to her mistress Dian; still
This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute Marins: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Vie feathers white. Marins gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marins, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter.

The sooner her vile thoughts to steady,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead:
And cursed Dionyzas hath
The pregnant instrument of wrath
Prest* for this blow. The unborn event
I do commend to your content:
Only I carried winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;
Which never could I so convey,
Unlesse your thoughts went on my way.—
Dionyzas doth appear.
With Leone, a murderer. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Tharsus. An open place near the seaside.

Enter Dionyzas and Leone.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do't: 'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing 'tis the world so soon,
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflame thy bosom,
Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee; but be
A soldier to thy purpose.
Leon. I'll do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.
Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her. Here she comes weeping for her old nurse's death.
Thou art resolv'd? I am resolv'd.
Leon. Enter Mariska, with a Basket of Flowers.
Mar. No, I will rob Tellus of her weed,
To strew thy grave* with flowers: the yellows, blues,
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall, as a carpet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer doth last. Ah me, poor maid!
Born in a tempest, when my mother died,
This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring me from my friends.
Dion. How now, Mariska! why do you weep* alone? How chance my daughter is not with you? Do not consume your blood with sorrowing: you have no more of me. Lord! how your favour* chang'd
With this Unprofitful woe. Come, come;
Give me your flowers, ere the sea mar it.
Walk with Leone; the air is quick there,
And it pierces and sharpens the stomach. Come, Leone, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you;
I'll not bereave you of your servant.
Dion. Come, come; I love the king your father, and yourself,
With more than foreign heart. We every day
Expect him here: when he shall come, and find
Our paragon to all reports thus blazoned,
He will repent the breadth of his great voyage;
Blame both my lord and me, that we have taken
No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you;
Walk, and be cheerful once again: reserve
That excellent complexion, which did steal
The eyes of young and old. Care not for me;
I can go home alone.
Mar. But I will go;
But yet I have no desire to it.
Dion. Come, come, I know 'tis good for you.—
Walk half an hour, Leone, at least.
Remember what I have said.
Leon. I warrant you, madam.
Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while.
Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood:

What! I must have care of you.

Mar. Thanks, sweet madam.—[Exit Dionyzas.

Leon. South-west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.
Leon. Was't so? Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear,
But cry'd "good seamen!" to the sailors, galling
His kindly hands hauling ropes;
And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea
That almost burst the deck.
Leon. When was this?

Mar. When I was born:
Never were waves nor wind more violent;
And from the ladder-tackle washes off
A canvas-climber. "Ha!" says one, "will out?"
And with a dropping industry they skip
From stem to stern: the boatswain whistles, and
The master calls, and trembles their confusion.
Leon. Come; say your prayers.

Mar. What mean you?
Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,
I grant it. Pray; but be not tedious,
For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?
Leon. To satisfy my lady.
Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?
Now as I can remember, by my troth,
I never did her hurt in all my life.
I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn
To any living creature: believe me, I,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wept for it. How have I offended,
Wherein my death might yield her profit, or
My life imply her any danger?

Leon. My commission
Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.
You are well favour'd, and your looks foreshow
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,
When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:
Good sooth, it show'd well in you: do so now:
Your lady seeks my life; come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,
And will despatch.

Enter Pirates, whilst Mariska is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain! [Leone runs away
2 Pirate. A prize! a prize! [Enter Leona.
3 Pirate. Half-part, mate; half-part, Come, let's have her aboard suddenly. [Enter Leona.

SCENE II.—Near the Same.

Enter Leona.

Leon. These roguing thieves serve the great pirate Valdes;
And they have seiz'd Mariska. Let her go:
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear she's dead,
And thrown into the sea.—But I'll see farther:
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd must by me be slain. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Mitylene. A Room in a Brothel.

Enter Pandar, Bard, and Boult.

Pand. Boult.
Boult. Sir.
Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants: we lost too much money this mart, by being too wenchless.

Baud. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and they with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore, let 's have fresh ones, what'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Baud. Thou say'st true: 'tis not the bringing up of poor bastards, as I think, I have brought up some eleven—

Boul. Ay, to eleven; and brought them down again.
But shall I search the market?

Baud. What else, man? 'Tis stuff which makes us rave, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sudden.

Pand. Thou say'st true: they're too unworthy of conscience. The poor Transilvanian is dead, they lay with the little baggage.

Boul. Ay, she quickly pooped him; she made him roast-meat for worms. But I'll go search the market.

[Exit BOUL.

Pand. Three or four thousand chequers were as prettily a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.

Baud. Why, to give over, I pray you? is it a shame to get when we are old?

Pand. Of our credit comes not in like the commodity; nor the commodity wags not with the danger:
therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 't were not amiss to keep our door hatched.
Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods will be strong with us for giving over.

Baud. Come; other sorts offend as we do. We Pand. As well as we? ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; 't's no calling. But here comes Boul.

Enter Boul, and the Pirates with MARINA.

Boul. Come your ways. My masters, you say she's a virgin?
1 Pirat. O, sir! we doubt it not.

Baud. Master, I have gone thorough for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Baud. Boul, has she any qualities?

Boul. She has a good face, speaks well, and has exceptional good clothes; there's no farther necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

Baud. What's her price, Boul?

Boul. I cannot be bated one dolt of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters, you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in: instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment.

[Exeunt Pander and Pirates.

Baud. Boul, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, her age, with warrant of her virginity, and cry, "He that will give most, shall have her first." Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boul. Performance shall follow. [Exit BOUL.

Mar. Alack, that Leonine was so slack, so slow!

He should have struck, not spoke; or that these pirates,
(Not enough barbarous) had not o'erboard thrown me.

For to seek my mother.

Baud. Why languish you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Baud. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Baud. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault; to escape his hands where I was like to die.

Baud. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Baud. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well: you shall have the difference of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Baud. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Baud. Marry, whip thee, goosing: I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Baud. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men stir you up.—Boul's returned.

Re-enter BOUL.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?

Boul. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs: I have drawn her picture with my voice.

Baud. And I pr'ynth, tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boul. Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.

Baud. We shall have him here to-morrow with his beat ruff on.

Boul. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers i' the hams?

Baud. Who? monsieur Verole?

Boul. Ay: he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Baud. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it. I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Boul. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller,
we should lodge them with this sign.

Baud. Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me: you must seem to do that fearfully, which you commit willingly; tc despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do makes pity in your lovers:
seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Baud. O! take her home, mistress, take her home:
these blushing of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Baud. Thou say'st true, i' faith, so they must; for your bride goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boul. Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint,—

Baud. Thou may'st cut a morsel off the spit.

Boul. I may so?

Baud. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boul. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Baud. Boul, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have; you’ll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore, say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Boul. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels, as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly inclined. I’ll bring home some to-night.

Baud. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, Unite I still my virgin knot will keep.

Dian, aid my purpose.

Baud. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us?

SCENE IV.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon’s House.

Enter Cleon and Dionyza.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O Dionyza! such a piece of slaughter
The sun and moon ne’er look’d upon.

Dion. I think, you’ll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all this spacious world, I’d give it to undo the deed. O lady! Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess To equal any single crown o’ the earth, I’ the justice of compare! O villain Leoniue! Whom thou hast poison’d too. If thou hadst drunk to him, it had been a kindness Becoming well thy face: what canst thou say, When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates, To foster it, nor ever to preserve.

She died at night, I’ll say so. Who can cross it, Unless you play the pious innocent, And for an honest attribute, cry out, "She died by foul play?"

Cle. O! go to. Well, well;

Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think The pretty wrens of Tharsus will fly hence, And open this to Pericles. I do shame To think of what a noble strain you are, And of how coward a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding

Who ever but his approbation added,

Though not his pre-screen, he did not flow From honourable courses.

Dion. Be it so, then;

Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead, Nor none can know, Leoniue being gone. She did disdain* my child, and stood between Her and her fortunes: none would look on her, But cast their gazes on Marina’s face; Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a mockin. Not worth the time of day. It pierc’d me thorough; And though you call my course unnatural, You not your child well loving, yet I find, It greets me as an enterprise of kindness, Perform’d to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion.

And as for Pericles, What should he say? We wept after her hearse, And even yet we mourn: her monument Is almost finish’d, and her epitaphs In glittering golden characters express A general praise to her, and care in us At whose expense ‘tis done.

---

Cle. Thou art like the happy
Which, to betray, doth with thine angel’s face,
Seize with thine eagle’s talons.

Dion. You are like one, that superstitiously

Swell o’er the gods, that winter kills the flies:

But yet, I know, you’ll do as I advise.

Enter Gower, before the Monument of Marina at Tharsus.6

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leaguers make short;

Sail seas in cockles, have, and wish but for’t;

Making (to take your imagination)

From bourn to bourn, region to region.

By you being pardon’d, we commit no crime To use one language, in each several clime, Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you, To learn of me, who stand ’t the gaps to teach you, The stages of our story. Pericles

Is now again thwarting the wayward seas, Attended on by many a lord and knight, To see his daughter, all his life’s delight.

Old Escaenes, whom Heliacus late

Advanc’d in time to great and high estate, Is left to govern. Bears you it in mind, Old Heliacus goes along behind.

Well-sailing ships, and bounteous winds, have brought

This king to Tharsus, (think this pilot thought, So with his steersage shall your thoughts grow on)

To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.

Like mores and shadows see them move awhile;

Your ears unto your eyes I’ll reconcile.

Dumb show.

Enter Pericles with his Train, at one door; Cleon and Dionyza at the other. Cleon shows Pericles the Tomb of Marina; whereat Pericles makes lamentation, puts on Sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs.

Gow. See, how belief may suffer by foul show.

The borrow’d passion stands for true old woe;

And Pericles, in sorrow all devout’d,

With sighs and groans, through and through, and biggest tears o’er-show’d,

Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears

Never to wash his face, nor cut his hair;

He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears

A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears,

And yet he rides it out. Now, please you, wit

The epistle is for Marina writ

By wicked Dionyza.

"The fairest, sweetest, and best, lies here,

Who wisther’d in her spring of weal;

She was of Tyros, the king’s daughter,

On whom foul death hath made this slaughter.

Marina was she call’d; and at her birth,

Thetis, being proud, swallow’d some part of the earth.

Therefore the earth, fearing to be o’erflow’d,

Hath Thetis’ birth-child on the heavens bestow’d;

Wherefore she does (and swears she’ll never sinn!)

Make raging battery upon shores of flint."

No visor does become black villany,

So well as soft and tender flattery.

Let Pericles believe his daughter’s dead,

And bear his courses to be ordered

By lady fortune; while our scene must play

His daughter’s woe and heavy well-a-day,

In her unholy service. Patience them,

And think you now you’re all in Mitylen

---

1 Dyce reads: fast. 2 prince: in old copies. 3 Steevens reads: dissaint. (Fully by contrast.—Dyce.) 4 A low renown. 5 In folio, 1634 in which the Acts are first marked, Act IV. commences.
SCENE V.—Mitylene. A Street before the Brothel.

Enter from the Brothel, two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Did you ever hear the like?

2 Gent. No; nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.

1 Gent. But to have divinity preach'd there, did you ever hear of such a thing?

2 Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdy-houses. Shall we go hear the vestals sing?

1 Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous; but I am out of the road of rutting for ever. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The Same. A Room in the Brothel.

Enter Pandar, Baud, and Boult.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her; she had never come here.

Baud. Fie, fie upon her! she is able to freeze the god Priapus, and unde a whole generation: we must either get her ravished, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fitment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master reasons, her prayers, her knees, that she would make a puritan of the devil, if she should cheapen a kiss of her.

Boult. Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll disfigure us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swearers priests.

Pand. Now, the posx upon her green-sickness for me!

Baud. Faith, there's no way to be rid on 't, but by the way to the posx. Here comes the lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and lown, if the peevish begged would but give way to customers.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now! How a dozen of virginities?

Baud. Now, the gods to bless your honour!

Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 't is the better for you that your ressorters stand upon sound legs. How now, who's some iniquity! have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Baud. We have here one, sir, if she would—but there never came her like in Mitylene.

Lys. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou wouldest say.

Baud. Your honour knows what 't is to say, well enough.

Lys. Well, call forth, call forth.

Boult. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, p'rythee?

Boult. O, sir! I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Baud. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;—never plush'd yet, I can assure you.—Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you; leave us.

Baud. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Baud. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [To MARINA. Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Baud. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not. Baud. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Baud. My lord, she's not paced yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together. Go thy ways.

[Exeunt Baud, Pander, and Boult.

Lys. Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. Why, I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamaster at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seed and roots of shame and iniquity. O! you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else, look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place: come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now; If put upon you, make the judgment good That thought you worthy of it.

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—be sage.

Mar. For me,

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune Hath plac'd me in this sty, where, since I came, Diseases have been sold dearer than physic,— That the gods

Wold set me free from this unhallow'd place, Though they did change me to the meanest bird That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think Thou couldst have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou couldst.

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind, Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee: Persevere in that clear way thou goest, And the gods strengthen thee.

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughten That I came with no ill intent; for to me The very doors and windows savour vilely. Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue, and I doubt not but thy training hath been noble. Hold, here's more gold for thee. A curse upon him, he like a thief, That robs thee of thy goodness! If thou dost hate From me, it shall be for thy good.

[Enter Boult.

Boult. I beseech your honour, one piece for me
Lys. A vaunt, thou damned door-keeper! Your house, but for this virgin that doth prop it, would Sink, and overwhelm you. Away! [Exit LYSIMACHUS.

Boul. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope, shall, under a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

Boul. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman execute it. Come your way.  We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Baud.

Baud. How now! what's the matter?

Boul. Worse and worse, mistress: she has here spoken holy words to the lord Lysimachus.

Baud. O, abominable!

Boul. She makes our profession as it were to stink afore the face of the gods.

Baud. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boul. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snow-ball; saying his prayers, too.

Baud. Boul, take her away; use her at thy pleasure: crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.

Boul. An if she were a thorny piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Baud. She conjures: away with her. Would she had never come within my doors.—Marry, hang you!—She's born to undo us.—Will you not go the way of women-kind? Marry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bay! [Exit Baud.

Boul. Come, mistress; come your way with me.

Mar. Whither wilt thou have me?

Boul. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pry'thee, tell me one thing first.

Boul. Come now, your one thing.

Mar. What casst thou wish thine enemy to be?

Boul. Why, I could wish him to be my master; or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are so bad as thou art, Since they do better thee in their command. Thou hold'st a place, for which the pained'st fiend Of hell would not in reputation change:

Thou 'rt the damned door-keeper to every eystral That hither comes inquiring for his Tib; To the choleric fasting of each rogue thy ear Is liable; thy food is such

As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.

Boul. What would you have me do? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou dost. Empty Old receptacles, or common sewers, of filth; Serve by indenture to the common hangman: Any of these ways are yet better than this; For what thou professest, a baboon, could he speak, Would own a name too dear. That the gods Would safely deliver me from this place!

Here, here's gold for thee.

If that thy master would gain by me, Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance, With other virtues, which I'll keep from boost; And I will undertake all these to teach.

I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boul. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again, And prostitute me to the basest groom

That doth frequent your house.

Boul. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But, amongst honest women?

Boul. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent; therefore, I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come; I'll do for thee what I can: come your ways. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter Gower.

Gowe. Marina thus the brothel scapes, and chances into an honest house, our story.

She sings like one immortal, and she dances,

As goddess-like, to her admired lays.

Deep clerks she dumbs, and with her needle composes

Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry,

That even her art sisters the natural roses;

Her inkle, silk, twin with the rubied cherry:

That pupils lacks she none of noble race,

Who pour their bounty on her; and her gain

She gives the cursed bawd. Here we her place,

And to her father turn our thoughts again,

Where we left him on the sea, tumbled and lost:

And, driven before the winds, he is arriv'd

Here where his daughter dwells: and on this coast

Suppose him now at anchor. The city striv'd

God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence

Lysimachus our Tyrian ship eplies,

His banners sable, trimm'd with rich expense;

1 Cape, or covering of the sky 2 Low grooms. — Dyn. 3 Thread.

And to him in his barge with fervour hies.

In your supposing ones more put your sight;

Of heavy Pericles think this the bark:

Where, what is done in action, more, if might,

Shall be discover'd; please you, sit, and hark. [Exeunt.

SCENE I.—On board PERICLES' Ship, off Mitylene.

A Pavilion on deck, with a Curtain before it; Par- cuss within it, reclining on a Couch. A Barge lying beside the Tyrian Vessel.

Enter Two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian Vessel; the other to the Barge; to them HELICANUS.

Tyr. Sail. Where's the lord Helicanus? he can re- solve you. [To the Sailor of Mitylene.

O here he is.—

Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene,

And in it is Lysimachus, the governor,

Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?

Hel. That he have his. Call up some gentlemen

Tyr. Sail. Ho! gentlemen! may my lord calls.
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

SCENE I.

Enter Two or Three Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Doth your lordship call?

Hel. Gentlemen,

There is some of worth would come aboard: I pray
Greet them fairly.

[Guards and Sailors descend, and go on board the Barge.

Enter, from hence, Lydias and Lords; the Tyrian
Gentlemen, and the Two Sailors.

Tyr. Said. Sir,

This is the man that can in aught you would Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! The gods preserve you!

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,

And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.

Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,

Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,

I made it to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, what is your place?

Lys. I am the governor of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir,

Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;

A man, who for this three months hath not spoken
To any one, nor taken sustenance,

But to prorogue his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemper?

Hel. It would be too tedious to repeat;

But the main grief of all springs from the loss

Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then?

Hel. You may,

But bootless is your sight; he will not speak

To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him. [Pericles discovered.] This was a goodly person,

Till the disaster that one mortal night

Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir king, all hail! the gods preserve you!

Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

1 Lord. Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I durst wager,

Would win some words of him.

Lys. 'Tis well betithought.

She, questionless, with her sweet harmony,

And other choice attractions, would allure,

And make a battery through his deafer'd parts,

Which now are midway stopp'd:

She is all happy as the fairest of all,

And with her fellow maids is now upon

The leafy shelter that abuts against

The island's side.

[He whispers one of the attendant Lords.—Exit Lord.

Hel. Sure, all effectless; yet nothing we'll omit,

That bears recovery's name.

But, since your kindness we have stretched thus far,

Let us beseech you,

That for our gold we may provision have,

Wherein we are not destitute for want,

But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O, sir! a courtesy,

Which, if we should deny, the most just God

For every gruff would send a caterpillar,

And so afflict our province.—Yet once more

Let me entreat to know at large the cause

Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sit; I will recount it to you.—

But see, I am prevented.

[Enter Lord, Marina, and a young Lady.

Lys. O! here is

The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!

Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. She's a gallant lady.

Lys. She's such a one, that were I well assured she came
Of gentle kind, and noble stock; I'd wish

No better choice, and think me rarely good.—

Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty

Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:

If that thy prosperous and artificial feat

Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,

Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay

As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use

My utmost skill in his recovery,

Provided none but I and my companion

Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her;

And the gods make her prosperous! [Marina sings.

Lys. Mark'd he your music?

Mar. No, nor look'd on us

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear.—

Per. Hum! ha!

Mar. I am a maid,

My lord, that never before invited eyes,

But have been gaz'd on like a comet: she speaks,

My lord, that may be, hath endur'd a grief

Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.

Though wayward fortune did malign my state,

My derivation was from ancestors

Who stood equivalent with mighty kings;

But time hath rooted out my parentage,

And to the world and awkward casualties

Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;

But there is something grows upon my cheek,

And whispers in mine ear, "Go not till he speak."

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—

To equal mine!—was it not thus? what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,

You would not do me violence.

Per. I do think so.

I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me.—

You are like something that—What countrywoman?

Here of these shores?

Mar. No, nor of any shores;

Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am

No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver weeping.

My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one

My daughter might have been: my queen's square

brows;

Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;

As silver-voiced; her eyes as jewel-like,

And cas'd as richly: in pace another June;

Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hungry.

The more she gives them speech.—Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck

You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?

And how achiev'd you these endowments, which

You make more rich to owe.

Mar. Should I tell my history?

"T would seem like lies, disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Pr'ythee, speak:

Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
You think me an impostor: no, good faith; I am the daughter to king Pericles, If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus! Hel. Calls my gracious lord? Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor, Most wise in general: tell me, if thou canst, What this maid is, or what is like to be, That thus hath made me weep? Hel. I know not: but Here is the regent, sir, of Mitylene, Speaks nobly of her. Lys. She would never tell Her parentage; being demanded that, She would sit still and weep. Per. O Helicanus! strike me, honour’d sir; Give me a gush, put me to present pain, Let this great sea of joys rising upon me, O’erbear the shores of my mortality, And drown me with their sweetness. O! come hither, Thou that beglist’st him that did thee beget; Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus, And found at sea again.—O! Helicanus! Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods as loud As thunder threatens us: this is Marina!— What was thy mother’s name? tell me but that, For truth can never be confirmed enough, Though double did ever sleep.

Mar. First, sir, I pray, What is your title? Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me, now. My drownd’st queen’s name, (as in the rest you said Thou hast been godlike perfect) the heir of kingdoms, And another like to Pericles thy father. Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter, than To say, my mother’s name was Thaisa? Thaisa was my mother, who did end The minute I began. Per. Now, blessing on thee! rise; thou art my child.

Give me fresh garments! Mine own, Helicanus, She is not dead at Tharsus, as she should have been. By savage Cleon: she shall tell thee all; When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge, She is thy very princess.—Who is this? Hel. Sir, ’tis the governor of Mitylene, Who, hearing of your melancholy state, Did come to see you. Per. I embrace you, Give me my robes! I am wild in my beholding. O heavens, bless my girl! But hark! what music?— Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him O’er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt, How sure you are my daughter.—But what music? Hel. My lord I hear none. Per. None? The music of the spheres! list, my Marina. Lys. It is not good to cross him: give him way. Per. Rarest sounds! Do ye not hear? Lys. Music? My lord, I hear— Per. Most heavenly music: It wipes me unto list’ning, and thick slumber Hangs upon mine eyes: let me rest. [He sleep. Lys. A pillow for his head. [The Curtain before the Position of Pericles is closed So leave him all.—Well, my companion-friends, If this but answer to my just belief, I’ll well remember you.

[Exeunt Lythimachus, Helicanus, Marina, and Lady.
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

SCENE III.

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Pericles on the Deck asleep; Diana appearing to him in a vision.

Dian. My temple stands in Ephesus: hie thee thither; And do upon mine altar sacrifice.

Here, when my maiden priests are met together, Before the people all,

Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:

To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's call, And give them repetition to the life.

Or perform my bidding, or thou liv'lt in woe:

Do 1, and be 2 happy, by my silver bow.

Awake, and tell thy dream. [Diana disappears.

Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentine,

I will obey thee.—Heliacanus!

Enter Lyriamachus, Heliacanus, and Mariana.

Hel. Sir.

Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike The inhospitable Clean; but I am

For other service first: toward Ephesus Turn our blown sails; else soon 1'll tell thee why.

Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,

And give you gold for such provision As our intents will need?

Lyri. Sir, with all my heart, and when you come ashore, I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail,

Were it to woo my daughter; for, it seems,

You have been noble towards her.

Lyri. Sir, lend your arm.

Per. Come, my Mariana. [Exeunt.

Enter Gower, before the Temple of Diana at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;

More a little, and then dumb.

This, as my last boon, give me,

For such kindness must relieve me,

That you aptly will suppose

What pageantry, what feats, what shows,

What minstrelsy, and pretty din,

The regent made in Mitylen;

To greet the king. So be thriv'd,

That he is promis'd to be wiv'd

To fair Mariana; but in no wise

Till he had done his sacrifice,

As Dian bade: whereeto being bound,

The interim, pray you, all confound.

In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd,

And wishes fall out as they're will'd.

At Ephesus, the temple see,

Our king, and all his company.

That he can hither come so soon, Is by your fancy's thankful doom.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Temple of Diana at Ephesus;

Thaisa standing near the Altar, as high Priestess;

a number of Virgins on each side: Cerimon and other Inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter Pericles, with his Train; Lyriamachus, Heliacanus, Mariana, and a Lady.

Per. Hail Dian! to perform thy just command, I here confess myself the king of Tyre;

Who, frightened from my country, did wed At Pentapolis, the fair Thaisa.

At sea in childhood died she, but brought forth A maid-child call'd Mariana; who, O goddess! Wears yet thy silver livery. She at Tharsus Was nurs'd with Clean, whom at fourteen years

He sought to murder, but her better stars Brought her to Mitylen; against whose shore Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us, Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thais. [Voice and favour.] — You are, you are—O royal Pericles!— [She faints.

Per. What means the woman? she dies; help, gentlemen!

Cer. Noble sir,

If you have told Diana's altar true,

This is your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no.

I threw her overboard with these arms

Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.

Per. 'Tis most certain

Cer. Look to the lady.—O! she's but o'erjoy'd. Early in bliss't ring morn this lady was Thrown on this shore. I op'd the coffin, Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and place'd her, Here, in Diana's temple.

Per. May we see them?

Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house, Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is recover'd.

Thais. O! let me look.

If he be none of mine, my sanctity

Will to my sense bend no licentious ear,

But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord!

Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,

Like him you are. Did you not name a tempest, A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!

Thais. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead, and drown'd. Per. Immortal Dian!

Thais. Now I know you better.—

When we with tears parted Pentapolis,

The king, my father, gave you such a ring.

[Show a Ring.

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness

Makes my past miseries sports: you shall do well,

That on the touching of her lips I may Melt, and no more be seen. O! come, be buried A second time within these arms.

Mar. My heart

Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

[Kneels to Thaisa.

Per. Look, who kneels here. Flesh of thy flesh

Thaisa;

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Mariana,

For she was yield'd there.

Thaisa. Bless'd, and mine own!

Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

[They kneel. I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre, I left behind an ancient substitute:

Can you remember what I call'd the man?

I have nam'd him off.

Thais. 'T was Heliacanus, then.

Per. Still confirmation!

Embrace him, dear Thaisa; this is he.

Now do I long to hear how you were found, How possibly recover'd, and whom to thank.

Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thais. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man

Through whom the gods have shown their power

Can From first to last resolve you.

Per. Reverend sir,
The gods can have no mortal officer
More like a god than you. Will you deliver
How this dead queen re-lives?

Cer. I will, my lord:
Beseach you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with her;
How she came placed here in the temple,
No needless thing omitted.

Per. Pure Dian! bless thee for thy vision,
I will offer night oblations to thee. Thaisa,
This prince, the fair-betrothed of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,
This ornament,
Makes me look dismal, will I clip to form;
And what this fourteen years no razor touch’d,
To grace thy marriage-day, I’ll beautify.

Thais. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit:
Sir, my father’s dead.

Per. Heavens, make a star of him! Yet there, my queen,
We’ll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days:
Our son and daughter shall in Tyrus reign.

Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead’s the way.

[Exeunt.

Enter Gower.

Gow. In Antiochus, and his daughter, you have heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:
In Pericles, his queen, and daughter, seen,
Although assail’d with fortune fierce and keen,
Virtue preserv’d from fell destruction’s blast,
Lod on by heaven, and crown’d with joy at last.
In Heliæanus may you well desery
A figure of truth, of faith, and loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears,
The worth that learned charity e’er wears.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their cursed deed, the honour’d name
Of Pericles, to rage the city burn;
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them;* although not done, but meant
So on your patience evermore attending,
Now joy wait on you! Here our play has ending.

END OF THE PLAY.
POEMS

VENUS AND ADONIS.

INTRODUCTION.

We are told by Shakespeare, in his dedication of this poem to the Earl of Southampton, in 1593, that it was "the first beir of his invention;" and as it was the earliest printed, so probably, it was the earliest written of his known productions. At what time it is likely that he commenced the composition of it, is a question which we have considered in the biography of the poet.

The popularity of it is indisputable: having been originally printed by Richard Field, in 1592, 4to, that edition seems to have been soon exhausted, and it was reprinted by the same printer in 1594, 4to, before 25th June, because on that day, according to the Stationers' Registers, he assigned over his interest in it to John Harrison, for whom Field printed an octavo impression in 1594. Field's second edition of 1594 was unknown to Malone and his contemporaries; and as it was not a re-issue of some remaining copies of 1592 with a new title-page, but a distinct re-impression, it affords some various readings, but not a few important confirmations of the correctness of the older text, corrupted more or less in all subsequent editions. Harrison published his second edition in 1594, which was the fourth time "Venus and Adonis" had been printed in seven years. It had been entered at Stationers' Hall by W. Leake in 1594. After this date it was printed many times, and copies in 1609, 1616, 1629, &c., are known: in 1627 it was printed by John Weeton, at Edinburgh.

The popularity of "Venus and Adonis" is established also by the frequent mention of it in early writers. It is probable that Peele died in 1597, and very soon afterwards his "Merry Conceited Jest" must have been published, although no edition of them is known older than that of 1607. In one of these, a tapster, "much given to poetry," is represented as having in his possession the "Knight of the Sun, Venus and Adonis, and other pamphlets." Thomas Heywood's "Fair Maid of the Exchange," was printed in 1607, but written some years before, and there a young lover is recommended to court his mistress by the aid of "Venus and Adonis." How long this reputation, and for the same purpose, was maintained, may be judged from a passage in Lewis Sharpe's "Noble Stranger," 1640, where Papilus exclaims, "Oh, for the book of Venus and Adonis, to court my mistress by!" Thomas Greenwood, in his "Amanda," 1633, makes "Venus and Adonis" a part of the library of a counsellor:—

   "Amorous pamphlete, that best like thine eyes,
   And songs of love, and sonnets exquisite;
   Among these Venus and Adonis lies,
   With Salmacis and her Hermaphrodite.
   Fyrgamion's there with his transfrom'd delight." (1)

"Salmacis and her Hermaphrodite" refers to the poem imputed (perhaps falsely) to Beaumont, printed in 1604; and the third poem is "Fyrgamion's Image," by Marston, published in 1598.

S. Nicholson, in his "Acadusis His Afterwrit," 1600, committed the most impudent plagiarism from "Venus and Adonis;" and R. S., the author of "Phillis and Floria," 1595, did not scruple to copy, almost with verbal exactness, part of the description Shakespeare gives of the horse of Adonis: we extract the following lines, that the reader may be able to make a comparison (See p. 556):—

   "His mayes thin hair'd, his neck high crested,
   Small ears, short head, and burlly breathed
   Stout legg'd, large thigh'd, and hollow hooved,
   All nature's skill in him was prov'd." (2)

Our text of "Venus and Adonis," is that of the earliest quarto, 1594, which, for the time, is very correctly printed, and we will illustrate by a single quotation the importance of resorting to it: the line which there stands;

   "He cheers the morn, and all the earth relieveth,
   Is misprinted in all modern editions,
   "He cheers the morn, and all the world relieveth."

The corruption was introduced in the quarto, 1594, and it has ever since been repeated. The same remark will apply to other changes; such as "as all swimm with chasting," instead of "chasing;" "to love's adown," instead of "adown;" "from morn to night," instead of "till night." &c.; all which show strange carelessness of collation, but it is not necessary here to dwell upon them, as they are pointed out in the notes.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

HENRY Wriothesly,

EARL OF Southampton, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

RIGHT HONORABLE,

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will conceive me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden: only, if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first hair of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a god-father, and never after ear so barren a land, for 'tis all I yield me still so good a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish, and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your honour's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Even as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Hunting he lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn:
Sick-thought Venus makes amain unto him,
And being a bold-faced suitor 'gins to woo him.

Thrice fairer than myself, (thus she began)
The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are;
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith, that the world hath ending with thy life.

1 The memorandum of it in the Stationers' Registers runs thus:— "19 April 1593.
   'Richard Field' Entered as his Copy, licensed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Wardens, a book intituled Venus and Adonis." (3)

2 Malone adjoins to Richard Barnfield's notice of "Venus and Adonis," and "Locrine," in 1595, (reprinted in 1596; see Bridgewater Catalogue, 4to. 1597, p. 25) as well as to William Barlow's allusion to it in 1597, in his "Myrrha the Mother of Adonis." To these may be added the praise of Shakespeare, and of his "Venus and Adonis," and "Locrine," in the play of "The Return from Par-nassus," which was certainly produced before the 24th of Queen Elizabeth.

Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
Or thou wilt deign this favour, for thy meed?
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know:
Here come and sit, where never serpent hisses,
And being set, I'll smother thee with kisses:

And yet not cloy thy lips with loath'd satiety,
But rather famish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety;
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty.
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of both and livelihood,
And, trembling in her passion, calls it balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good:
Being so enraged, desire doth lend her force
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
She red and hot as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frothy in desire.

The studded bridle on arag'd bough
Nimbly she fastens; (O, how quick is love!)
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove:
Backward she push'd him, as she would be trust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon she was along, as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips:
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And 'tis to chide, but soon she stops his lips;
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open.

He burns with bashful shame, she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs,
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
He saith she is immodest, blames her 'miss,'
What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone;
Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Ford to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies, and breatheth in her face;
She feedeth on the steam, as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace,
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and awe'd resistance made him fret,
Which broke his beauty in his angry eyes:
Rain added to a river that is dry,
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he lowers and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame, and anger sahy-pale;
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Still he be true to her containing tears.
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive-dapper peering through a wave,
Who being look'd on ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave,
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winces, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat,
More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn.
O, pity, 'gan she cry, flint-hearted boy!
'T is but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?

I have been woo'd as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war,
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes, in every jar;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg'd for that which thou unsaw'd shalt have.

Over my altars he hath hung his lance,
His barded shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learnt to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest;
Scorning his churlish drum, and ensign red,
Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

Thus he that over-ruled, I overway'd,
Leading him prisoner in a red rose chain:
Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obey'd,
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
O! be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foild he god of light.

Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,
Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red,
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine.
What seest thou in the ground? hold up thy head,
Look in mine eye-balls, there thy beauty lies;
Then, why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?

Art thou asham'd to kiss? then, wink again,
And I will wink; so shall the day seem night;
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain.
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean,
Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee unripe, yet may'st thou well be tasted
Make use of time, let not advantage slip:
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Beauty flowers that are not gather'd in their prime,
Rot and consume themselves in little time.

VENUS AND ADONIS.

Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled old,
Ill-nurtur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
Oft warn'd, despis'd, revil'd, and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice,
Then mightst thou pause, for then I were not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are grey¹ and bright, and quick in turning:
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning:
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or like a fairy trip upon the green,
Or like a nymph with long dishevelled hair,
Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit, all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.

Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie;
These forlorn flowers like sturdy trees support me;
Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky,
From morn till night, even where I list to sport me:
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee.

Is thine own heart to thine own face affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steal thine own freedom, and complain on theft.
Narcissus so himself himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use;
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear;
Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse:
Seeds spring from seeds, and beauty broodeth beauty;
Thou wert begot, to get it is thy duty.

Upon the earth's increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless the earth in thy increase be fed?
By law of nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live, when thou thyself art dead;
And so in spite of death thou dost survive,
In that thy likeness still is left alive.

By this, the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For where they lay the shadow had forsok them,
And Titan, 'tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him, and by Venus' side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy sprite,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His lowering brows o'er-whelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours, when they blot the sky,
Souring his cheeks, cries, Fie! no more of love:
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove.

Ah me! (quoth Venus,) young, and so unkind?
What bare excuses mak'st thou to be gone!
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun:
I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears.

The sun that shines from heaven shines but warm
And lo! I lie between that sun and thee:
The heat I have from thee doth little harm.
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me;
And were I not immortal, life were done,
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel?
Nay more than flint, for stone at rain relenteth;
Art thou a woman's son, and canst not feel,
What 't is to love? how want of love tormenteth?
O! had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

What am I, that thou shouldst contemn me this?
Or what great danger dwells upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak fair; but speak fair words. or else be mute:
Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again,
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

Fie! lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-painted idol, image dull and dead,
Statue, contenting but the eye alone,
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred:
Thou art no man, though of a man's complexion,
For men will kiss even by their own direction.

This said, impatience chokes her pleasing tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong:
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause:
And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak.
And now her sobs do her intentions break.

Sometimes she shakes her head, and then his hand;
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms infold him like a band:
She would, he will not in her arms be bound;
And when from those he struggles to be gone,
She locks her lily fingers one in one.

Fondling, she saith, since I have humm'd thee here,
Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer;
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale:
Graze on my lips, and if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

Within this limit is relief enough,
Sweet bottom-grass, and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest, and from rain:
Then, be my deer, since I am such a park;
No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark.

At this Adonis smiles, as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple:
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Fore-knowing well, if there he came to lie,
Why, there Love liv'd, and there he could not die

These lovely caves, the round enchanting pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking.
Being mad before, how doth she now for wite?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second striking?
Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn.

¹ Blue eyes were sometimes called gray.

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say? Her words are done, her woes the more increasing; The time is spent, her object will away, And from her twining arms doth urge releasing.

Pity! she cries, some favour, some remorse! Away he springs, and hasteth to his horse!

But lo! from forth a cope a neighbours by, A brooding jennet, lusty, young, and proud, Adonis' trampling courser doth espy, And forth she rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud: The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree, Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds, And now his woven girths he breaks saunter; The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds, Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thunder: The iron bit he crusheth 'tween his teeth, Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up prick'd, his braided hanging mane Upon his compass'd crest now stands on end; His nostrils drink the air, and forth again, As from a furnace, vapours doth he send: His eye, which sorrowfully glitters like fire, Shows his hot courage, and his high desire. Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps With gentle majesty, and modest pride; Anon he rears upright, curves and leaps, As who should say, lo! thus my strength is tried; And this I do, to captivate the eye Of the fair breaster that is standing by.

What recketh he his rider's angry stir, His flattering holl, or his "Stand, I say?" What cares he now for curbs, or pricking spur, For rich caparisons, or trapping gay? He sees his love, and nothing else he sees, For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life, In limning out a well-proportion'd steed, His art with nature's workmanship at strife, As if the dead the living should exceed; So did his horse excel a common one, In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, the fetlocks shag and long, Broad breast, full eye, small head, and nostril wide, High crest, short ears, straight legs, and passing strong, Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock. Tender hide: Look, what a horse should have he did not lack, Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometime he scuds far off, and there he stares; Anon he starts at stirring of a feather: To bid the wind a base he now prepares, And who'er he run, or fly, they know not whether; For through his mane and tail the high wind sings, Fanning the hair, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love, and neighs unto her; She answers him, as if she knew his mind: Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her, She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind; Spurns at his love, and scorches the heat he feels, Beating his kind embraces with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malcontent, He vails his tail, that, like a falling plume, Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent: He stamps, and bites the poor flies in his fume. His love, perceiving how he is enraged, Grew kinder, and his fury was assuaged.

His testy master goeth about to take him, When lo! the unback'd breeder, full of fear, Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him With her he horse, and left Adonis there. As they were mad, unto the wood they his then Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly the flying

All swoln with chafing, down Adonis sits, Banning his boisterous and unruly beast:

And now the happy season once more fits, That love-sick love by pleading may be blest; For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong, When it is bare't the aidance of the tongue. An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd, Burneth more hotly, sweeleth with more rage: So of concealed sorrow may be said,

Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage; But when the heart's attorney once is mute, The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow, Even as a dying coal revives with wind, And with his bonnet hides his angry brow; Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind, Taking no notice that she is so nigh, For all askance he holds her in his eye.

O! what a sight it was, wistly to view How she came stealing to the wayward boy; To note the fighting conflict of her hue, How white and red each other did destroy: But now her cheek was pale, and by and by It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat, And like a lovely lover down she knelt; With one fair hand she heaves up his hat, Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels: His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's print As apt as new-fall'n snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between them! Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes suing; His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them; Her eyes wo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the woing And all this dumb play had his acts made plain With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain

Full gently now she takes him by the hand, A lily prison'd in a jail of snow, Or ivory in an alabaster band; So white a friend engirts so white a foe: This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling. Show'd like two silver doves that sit a billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began: O fairest mover on this mortal round, Would thou were as I am, and I a man, My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee. Though nothing but my body's bane would cure the—

Venus and Adonis. 915

Give me my hand, saith he, why dost thou feel it?
Give me my heart, saith she, and thou shalt have it;
O! give it me, lest thy hard heart do steel it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:
Then, love's deep groans I can never regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.

For shame! he cries, let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so:
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.

Thus she replies: thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomest the warm approach of sweet desire:
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suff'ring, it will set the heart on fire.
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none:
Therefore, no marvel though thy horse be gone.

How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely mastered with a leathern rein;
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

Who sees his true-love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy,
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings thee:
O! learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And once made perfect, never lost again.

I know not love, quoth he, nor will not know it:
Unless it be a bear, and then I chase it;
To quench to borrow, and I will not own it;
4, love to love is love but to disgrace it;
Po! I have heard it is a life in death,
Tha! laughs, and weeps, and all but with a breath.

Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinished?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be not jot diminisht,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth:
The colt hath 's back'd and burden'd being young,
Loseth his -vile, and never waxes strong.

You saw my hand with wringing, let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat:
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart;
To love's alarms it will not ope the gate:
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery,
For where a heart is hard, they make no task.

What! cannot thou talk? (quoth she,) hast thou a tongue?
O, would thou hast not, or I had no hearing!
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double wrong!
I had my load before, now press'd with bearing;
Melodious discord, heavenly tune harsh-sounding,
Ear's deep sweet music, and heart's deep sore wounding.

Had I no eyes, but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible;
Or, were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible:
Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
Yet should I be in love by touching thee.

Say, that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much:
For from the stillitory of thy face excelling
Comes breath perfum'd, that breedeth love by smell-

But O! what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four:
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid suspicion double look the door,
Lest jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
Should by his stealings in disturb the feast?

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal opened,
Which to his speech did honey-passage yield;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the man, tempest to the field,
Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
Gusts and foul flaws to herdsmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisedly she marketh:
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth;
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it staineth;
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her ere his words begun.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks kill love, and love by looks reviveth:
A smile recures the wounding of a frown;
But blessed bankrupt that by love so thriveth!
The silly boy, believing she is dead,
Clnps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red;

And all amaz'd brake off his late intent,
For sharply he did think to reprehend her,
Which cunning love did wittyly prevent:
Fair fall the wrath that can so well defend her!
For on the grass she lies, as she were slain,
Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends his fingers, holds her pulse hard,
He chases her lips: a thousand ways he seeks
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd:
He kisses her; and she, by her good will,
Will never rise, so he will kiss her still.

The sight of sorrow now is turn'd to day:
Her -wo blue windows faintly she up-heaveth,
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
He cheers the morn, and all the earth's reliefeth:
And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
So is her face illumin'd with her eye;

Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his brow's repine;
But hers, which through the crystal tears gave light,
Shone like the moon in water seen by night.
O! where am I? quoth she, in earth or heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire?
What hour is this? or morn or weary even?
Do I delight to die, or life desire?
But now I liv'd, and life was death's annoy;
But now I die, and death was lively joy.

O! thou didst kill me; kill me once again:
Thy eye's shrewed tutor, that hard heart of thine,
Hath taught them scornful tricks, and such disdain,
That they have murdered this poor heart of mine;
And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

Long may they kiss each other for this cure!
O! never let their crimson livers wear,
And as they last, their verdure still endure,
To drive infection1 from the dangerous year!
That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
May say, the plague is banish'd by thy breath.

Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
What bargains may I make, still to be sealing?
To sell myself I can be well contented,
So thou wilt buy, and pay, and use good dealing;
Which purchase if you make, for fear of slips
Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

A thousand kisses buys my heart from me,
And pay them at thy leisure, one by one.
What is ten hundred touches unto thee?
Are they not quickly told, and quickly gone?
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?

Fair queen, quoth he, if any love you owe me,
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years:
Before I know myself, seek not to know me;
No fisher but the ungrawed fry forbears:
The mellow plum doth fall, the green sticks fast,
Or being early pluck'd is sour to taste.

Look, the world's comforter, with weary gait,
His day's hot task hath ended in the west:
The owl, night's herald. shrieks, 't is very late;
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest,
And coal-black clouds that shadow heaven's light,
Do summon us to part, and bid good night.

Now let me say good night; and so say you;
If you will say so, you shall have a kiss.
Good night, quoth she; and, ere he says adieu,
The honey-feet of parting tender'd is:
Her arms so send his neck a sweet embrace;
Incorporate then they seem, face grows to face.

Tell breathless he disjoind'd, and backward drew
The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
Wherewith they surfeit, yet complain on drought:
He with her plentiful press'd, she faint with dearth,
Their lips together glued, fail to the earth.

Now quick desire hath ought the yielding prey,
And glutton-like she feeds, yet never filleth;
Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey;
Paying what ransom the insolent0 will offer;
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so high,
That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
With blindfold fury she begins to forage;
Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
Forgetting shame's pure blush, and honour's wack.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tamed with too much handling,
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tir'd with chasing,
Like the froward infant still'd with dandling;
He now obeys, and now no more resists;
While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What wax so frozen but dissolves with tempering,
And yields at last to every light impression?
Things out of hope are compass'd off with venturing,
Chiefly in love, whose leaves exceed commission:
Affection faints not like a pale-fuck'd coward;
But then woe best, when most his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O! had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover;
What though the rose have prickles, yet 't is pluck'd:
Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through, and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him,
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart,
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence incag'd in his breast.

Sweet boy, she says, this night I'll waste in sorrow,
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
Tell me, love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we? shall we? wilt thou make the match?
He tells her, no; to-morrow he intends
To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

The boar! (quoth she) whereast a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blushing rose,
Usurp her cheek: she trembles at his tale,
And on his neck her yoking arms she throws;
She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
He will not manage her, although he mount her;
That worse than Tantalus' is her annoy,
To clip0 Elysium, and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, desecv'd with painted grapes,
Do surfeit by the eye, and pine the maw,
Even so she languished in her mishaps,
As those poor birds that helpless berries saw.
The warm effects which she in him finds maturing,
She seeks to kindle with continual kissing:
But all in vain; good queen, it will not be:
She hath assayed as much as may be prov'd;
Her pleading hath deserv'd a greater fee:
She's love, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd.
Fie, fie! he says, you cruel me; let me go:
You have no reason to withhold me so.

VENUS AND ADONIS. 917

Thou hadst been gone, quoth she, sweet boy, ere this,
But that thou told’st me, thou wouldst hunt the boar.
O! be advis’d; thou know’st not what it is
With Javelin’s point a cherub swine to gore,
Whose teeth never sheath’d he whettest still,
Like to a mortal butcher, bent to kill.

On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes;
His eye like glow-worms shine when he doth fret;
His nostril diggs sepulchres where’er he goes;
Being mov’d, he strikes what’er is in his way,
And whom he strikes his cruel tusks slay.

His brawny sides, with hairy bristles armed,
Are better proof than thy spear’s point can pierce;
His short thick neck cannot be easily harmed;
Being ireful on the lion he will venture;
The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
As fearfu of him, part; through whom he rushes.

Ails! how he esteems that face of thine,
To which love’s eye pays tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eyes,
Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
But having thee at vantage, (wondrous dread!) Would root these beauties, as he roots the mead.

O! let him keep his loathsome cabin still;
Beauty hath nought to do with such foul flends:
Come not within his danger by thy will;
They that thrive well take counsel of their friends.
When thou didst name the boar, not to dissemble,
I fear’d thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

Didst thou not mark my face? Was it not white?
Sawst thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? and fell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no rest,
But like an earthquake shakes thee on my breast.

For where love reigns, disturbing jealousy
Doth call himself affection’s sentinel;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, "kill, kill;"
Distempering gentle love in his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy,
This canker that eats up love’s tender spring,
This carry-tale, dissentious jealousy,
That sometime true news, sometime false doth bring,
Knocks at my heart, and whispers in mine ear,
That if I love thee, I thy death should fear:

And more than so, presenteth to mine eye
The picture of an angry chasing boar,
Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image like thyself, all stain’d with gore:
Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed,
Doth make them droop with grief, and hang the head.

What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble at thy imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

But if thou needs wilt hunt, be rul’d by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox, which lives by subtlety,
Or at the roe, which no encounter dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures o’er the downs,
And on thy well-breath’d horse keep with thy hounds.

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot his troubles,
How he out-runs the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles;
The many musets through the which he goes,
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Sometimes he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell;
And sometime where earth-delving conies keep,
To stop the loud purrsers in their yell;
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer.

Devise shifty shifts; wit waits on fear:
For there his smell, with others being mingled,
The hot scent-snuffing hounds are driven to doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry, till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out:
Then do they spend their mouths: echo replies,
As if another chase were in the skies.

By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To harken if his foes pursue him still;
Anon their loud alarms he doth hear
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick, that hears the passing bell.

Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch,
Turn, and return, indenting with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur stay
For misery is trodden on by many,
And being low, never relied’ by any.

Lie quietly, and hear a little more;
Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise:
To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
Unlike myself thou hear’st me moralize,
Applying this to that, and so to so;
For love can comment upon every woe.

Where did I leave?—No matter where, quoth he;
Leave me, and then the story aply ends:
The night is spent. Why, what of that? quoth she
I am, quoth he, expected of my friends:
And now ’tis dark, and going I shall fall.
In night, quoth she, desire sees best of all

But if thou fall, O! then imagine this,
The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
Rich presys make true-men thieves; so do thy lips
Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
Lest she should steal a kiss, and disforsworn.

Now, of this dark night I perceive the reason:
Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
Till forging Nature be condemn’d of treason,
For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine,
Wherein she fram’d thee, in high heaven’s despite,
To shame the sun by day, and her by night.

1 In his power. 2 Contention. 3 Steevens reads: overshoot. 4 Winds. 5 The aperture in a hedge made by the hare in its frequent passages through it. 6 Consisterh.
And therefore hath she bril’d the Destinies,
To cross the curious workmanship of nature;
To mingle beauty with infirmities,
And pure perfection with impure dejecture;
Making it subject to the tyranny
Of mad mischances, and much misery;

As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence, and frenzies wood;
The narrow-eating sickness, whose attaint
Disorder breeds by heating of the blood;
Surfeits, impostumes, grief, and dam’d despair,
Swear nature’s death for framing thee so fair.

And not the least of all these maladies
But in one minute’s fight brings beauty under:
Both favour, savour, hue, and qualities,
Whereat th’ impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, shaw’d, and done,
As mountain snow melts with the middle sun.

Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-lacking vestals, and self-loving nuns,
That on the earth would breed a scarcity,
And barren death of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night.
Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity;
If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is alain.

So in thyself thyself art made away,
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
Or butcher sire that reaves his son of life.
Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that’s past to use more gold begets.

Nay then, quoth Adon, you will fall again
Into your idle over-handled theme:
The kiss I gave you is bestow’d in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream;
For by this black-fae’d night, desire’s soul nurse,
Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse.

If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Bewitching like the wanton mermaid’s songs,
Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown;
For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there;

Lest the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast,
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bedchamber to be bare’d of rest.
No, lady, no; my heart longs not to groan,
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

What have you urg’d that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger;
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embraces unto every stranger.
You do it for increase: O strange excuse!
When reason is the bawd to lust’s abuse.

Call it not love, for love to heaven is fled,
Since sweating lust on earth usurp’d his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame;
Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But lust’s effect is tempest after sun;
Love’s gentle spring doth always fresh remains,
Lust’s winter comes ere summer half be done:
Love surfeits not, lust like a glution dies;
Love is all truth, lust full of forged lies.

More I could tell, but more I dare not say;
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away;
My face is full of shame, my heart of tone;
Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended.

With this he breaketh from the sweet embrace
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast
And homeward through the dark lawn runs asleep.
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress’d.
Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus’ eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more,
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend:
So did the merciless and pitchy night
Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amaz’d, as one that unaware
Hath dropp’d a precious jewel in the flood,
Or ‘stonish’d as night wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood;
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour-ears, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her moans:
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled.
Ah me! she cries, and twenty times, woe, woe!
And twenty echo twenty times cry so.

She marking them, begins a wailing note,
And sings extemporally a woeful ditty;
How love makes young men thrill, and old men love;
How love is wise in folly, foolish witty;
Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
And still the choir of echoes answer so.

Her song was tedious, and outwore the night,
For lovers’ hours are long, though seeming short.
If pleas’d themselves, others, they think, delight
In such like circumstance, with such like spurs:
Their copious stories, oftentimes begun,
End without audience, and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal,
But idle sounds resembling parasites.
Like shrill-tongued’t tapsters answering every call,
Soothings the humour of fantastic wits?
She says, ‘t is so: they answer all, ‘t is so;
And would say after her, if she said no.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

Here Kennel'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary caitiff for his master;
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster.
And here she meets another sadly howling,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceased his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the weikin vollies out his voice;
Another and another answer him.
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gazed,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on death.

Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love, (thus chides she death)
Grim grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean,
To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath,
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set
Gloes on the rose, small to the violet?

If he be dead,—O no! it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it.
O yes! it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age; but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart.

Hast thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And hearing him thy power had lost his power.
The destinies will curse thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'vet a flower.
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not death's eben dart, to strike him dead.

Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weeping?
What may a heavy groan advantage thee?
Whys hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She vail'd her eye-lids, who, like sluces, stopped
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropped;
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow,
Sorrow that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions through her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief
But none is best; then, join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather

Lo! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so graciously behold,
That cedar-topes and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow.
0 thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow.
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other.

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'er-worn;
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens, for his hounds, and for his horn:
Anoi she hears them chault it lustily,
And all in haste she coasteeth to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twirl'd about her thigh to make her stay.
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a rough doe, whose swelling dugs do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

By this she hears the hounds are at a bay,
Whereas she starts, like one that spies an adder
Wreath'd up in fatal folds, just in his way,
The fear wheroof doth make him shake and shudder:
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appeals her senses, and her spirit confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclameth aloud;
Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain courtesy who shall ope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart;
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly, and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling extasy,
Till cheering up her sense all's dismay'd,
She tell's them, 'tis a causeless fantasy,
And childish error that they are afraid;
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more:
And with that word she spied the hunted boar;

Whose frothy mouth bepared all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires to rate the boar for mutrher.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she unwinds again;
Her more than haste is mated with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain;
Full of respect, yet nought at all respecting,
In hand with all things, nought at all affecting.
By this far off she hears some huntsman hollow;
A nurse's song ne'er pleas'd her babe so well:
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as sorrowing it should pass
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken, when she seemeth drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes;
Despair and hope make thee ridiculous:
The one doth flutter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unwraps the web that she hath wrought;
Adonis lives, and Death is not to blame:
It was not she that call'd him all to nought;
Now she adds honours to his hateful name;
She eleps him king of graves, and grave for kings,
Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

No, no, quoth she, sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me, I felt a kind of fear,
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then, gentle shadow, (truth I must confess)
I rall'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

'T is not my fault: the boar provok'd my tongue;
Be wra'k'd on him, invisible commander;
'T is he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
I did but act, he's author of thy slander.
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could rule them both, without ten women's wit.

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With death she humbly doth insinuate:
 Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and stories,
His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

O Jove! quoth she, how much a fool was I,
To be of such a weak and silly mind,
To wail his death, who lives, and must not die,
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind:
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

Fie, fie, fond love! thou art so full of fear,
As one with treasure laden. hemm'd with thieves:
Trifles, unwitnessed with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false beholding grievest.
Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereas she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcons* to the lure, away she flies:
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight:
Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there all smother'd up in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again:
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep-dark cabins of her head.

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain;
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes;
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound:
This mutiny each part doth so surprise,
That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank: whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd:
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head,
Dumbly she passions, frantically she doteth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead:
Her voice is stopp'd, her joints forget to bow,
Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so stedfastly,
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three
And then she reprehends her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be:
His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled;
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

My tongue cannot express my grief for one.
And yet, quoth she, behold two Adonis dead!
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead:
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire!
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost!
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing?
Whose tongue is music now? what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or any thing ensuing?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim:
But true sweet beauty liv'd and died with him.

Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear;
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you:
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear;
The sun doth scorn you, and the wind doth hush you:
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair:

And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep,
The wind would blow it off, and, being gone,
Play with his locks: then, would Adonis weep,
And straight in pily of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

* falcons: in ed. 1600.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

To see his face, the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear'd him;
To recreate himself when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame, and gently hear him;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills:
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took,
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Witness the entertainment that he gave:
If he did see his face, why then, I know,
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'T is true, 't is true: thus was Adonis slain.
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheath'd, unaware, the tusk in his soft groin.

Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first:
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his, the more am I accurst.
With this she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woful words she told:
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where to! two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies:

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd,
And every beauty robb'd of his effect:
Wonder of time, quoth she, this is my spite,
'That, thou' being dead, the day should yet be light.

Since thou art dead, lo! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend:
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end;
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low,
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud;
End and be blasted in a breathing-while;
The bottom poison, and the top 0'er-straw'd

With sweets, that shall the truest sight beguile:
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

It shall be sparing, and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures;
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures
It shall be raging mad, and silly mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

It shall suspect, where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear, where it should most mistrust;
It shall be merciful, and too severe,
And most deceiving, when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be, where it allows most toward;
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

It shall be cause of war, and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire;
Subject and servile to all discontent,
As dry combustious matter is to fire:
Sith in his prime death doth my love destroy,
They that love best, their loves shall not enjoy.

By this the boy, that by her side lay kill'd,
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood, that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white;
Resembling well his pale cheeks, and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She bows her head the new-sprung flower to small,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath;
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is rest from her by death:
She crows the stali, and in the breach appears
Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

Poor flower, quoth she, this was thy father's guise,
Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire,
For every little grief to wet his eyes:
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 't is thine; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast, as in his blood.

Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 't is thy right:
Lo! in this hollow cradle take thy rest,
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night
There shall not be one minute in an hour,
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift aid
Their mistress mounted through the empty skies
In her light chariot quickly is convey'd;
Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen
Means to immure herself and not be seen.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

INTRODUCTION.

"Lyccece. London. Printed by Richard Field, for John Harrison, and are to be sold at the sign of the white Greyhound in Pauls Church-yard. 1594." 4to. 47 leaves.

"Lyccece, As it is merely called in the earlier impressions, came out in the year following "Venus and Adonis," and it was printed for John Harrison, the publisher of the edition of "Venus and Adonis," in 1596. It had been previously entered, under a more expository title, in the Stationers' Register of the year 1584.

"9 May 1594.

Mr. Harrison, sen.] A books intituled the Envyshamen of Lynccece."

"Like, "Venus and Adonis," it was dedicated to the Earl of Southampton, but in a more confident and assured spirit. This second production was, probably, not quite so popular as the first, but was printed until 1596, for the same bookseller, who put forth a third edition of it in 1600: the fourth edition was issued in 1607: these are not so rare, and Malowe tells us that he had heard of impressions in 1586 and 1602, but they have not since come to light; and our belief is, that "Luccece" was only printed four times between 1594 and 1607. An edition in 1616 purports to have been "newly revised and corrected;" but, as Malowe truly states, "it is the most inaccurate and corrupt of the ancient copies;" and he adds that "most of the alterations seem to have been made, because the reviser did not understand the poet's meaning." That Shakespeare having nothing to do with the revision and correction of this edition requires no proof; and so little was it esteemed, that it was not followed in its changes in the edition of 1624, which also professes to have been "newly revised." This last is accompanied by marginal notes, prosaically explanatory of the incidents postically narrated.

The earliest mention of "Luccece" occurs in the year in which it made its first appearance. Michael Drayton published his "Matilda," (a poem in seven-stanza stanzas, like "Luccece") in 1589, and there we meet with the following passage:

"Luccece, of whom proud Rome hath boasted long,
Lately reviv'd to live another age.
And here arriv'd to tell of Tullia's wrong,
Her chaste denial, and the tyrant's rage,
Acting her passion on our stately stage:
She is remember'd, all forgetting her.
Yet is she fair and chaste as ever she was.

A difficulty here may arise out of the fifth line, as if Drayton were referring to a play upon the story of Luccece, and it is very possible that one was then in existence. Thomas Heywood's tragedy, "The Rape of Luccece," did not appear in print until 1608, and he could hardly have been old enough to have been the author of such a drama in 1594: he may, nevertheless, have availed himself of an older play, and, according to the practice of the time, he may have felt warranted in publishing it as his own. It is likely, however, that Drayton's expressions are not to be taken literally, and that his meaning merely was, that the story of Luccece had lately been revived, and brought upon the stage of the world; if this opinion be correct, the stanza we have above quoted contains a clear allusion to Shakespeare's drama, and a question then presents itself, why Drayton entirely omitted it in the after impressions of his "Matilda." He was a poet who, as we have shown in the Introduction to "Julius Caesar," was in the habit of making extensive alterations in his productions, as they were severely reprinted, and the suppression of this stanza must have proceeded from many other causes than repentances of the praise he had bestowed upon a rival.

The edition of "Luccece" we have taken as our text is the first, which, like "Venus and Adonis," was printed by Richard Field, though not on his own account. It may be stated on the whole to be an extremely creditable specimen of his typography: as the sheets were going through the press, some material errors were, however, observed in them, and they are therefore in several places corrected. This fact has hitherto escaped remark, but the variations are explained in our notes.

Modern editors have performed their task without due care, but of their want of attention we shall only here adduce two specimens. In one of the speeches in which Luccece endeavours to dissuade Tarquin from his purpose, she tells him,

"Then book't reproach against long-living land.
Which every modern editor misprints,

"Then book't reproach against long-living land."

Our second proof is from a later portion of the poem, just after Collante has returned home, and meets his dishonored wife: the true text, speaking of Collante and Lucretia, is,

"So staid stood old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance."

Malone, and all editors after him, make nonsense of the couplet, by printing,

"Staid stood old acquaintance in a trance," depriving the verb of its nominative, and destroying the whole force of the figure. It would be easy to add other instances of the same kind, but we refer for them to our notes.

TO THE EIGHT HONOURABLE
HENRY WROTHESELY,
EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

The love I dedicate to your lordship is without end; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moity. You have my honor of your optional disposition, not the worth of my untuned lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours; what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater; mean time, as it is, is bound to your lordship, to whom I wish long life, still strengthened with all happiness.

Your lordship's in all duty,
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE ARGUMENT.

Lucus Tarquiniius (for his excessive pride renamed Sextus) after he had caused his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other subjects of Rome, to besiege Ardea: during which siege, the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquiniius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one extolled the virtues of his own wife; among whom, Collane extolled the incomparable charity of his wife Lucretia. In a pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending by the secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Catullus finds his wife (though it were late in the night) spinning amongst her maids: the other ladies were all formed dancing and revelling, or in several disports; whereupon the noblemen yielded Catullus the victory, and his wife the fame. At this time Catullus, being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was (according to his estate) joyfully entertained and lodged by Lucrece at Catullus. The same night he treacherously stole into the sleeping chamber, violently roused her, and early in the morning speeded away. Lucrece, in this lamentable plight, hastily dispatched messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Catullus. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucrece arrived in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself: which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the door, and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king; whereas the people were so moved, that, with one consent and a general acclamation, the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

From the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Catullus bears the lightless fire
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire,
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of Catullus's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of chaste unhappily set
This baseless edge on his keen appetite;
When Catullus unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unmatched red and white,
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight;
Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous male;
Reckoning his fortune at such high proud rate,
That kings might be espoused to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness! enjoy'd but of a few;
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done,
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun:
An expir'd date, cancel'd ere well begun:
Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth, then, apologies be made
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Catullus the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From thievish ears, because it is his own?

Perchance his boast of Lucrece's sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king,
For by our ears our hearts oft taint'd be:
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Bearing to mind that disdaining ditty ditty
Yraunt
His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should
That golden lap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all too timeless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver grows.
O rash, false hope! wrapt in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old.

When at Catullus this false lord arrived,
Well was he welcom'd by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue striv'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame.
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for shame
When beauty boasted blushes, in despite
Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.

But beauty, in that white intituled,
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field;
Then, virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,
When shame assails'd, the red should enforce the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece's face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white:
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right,
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight,
The sovereignty of either being so great,
That oft they interchange each other's seat.

This silent war of lilies and of roses,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquished doth yield
To those two armies, that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he, that her husband's shallow tongue,
The niggard prodigal that praise'd her so,
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show:
Therefore, that praise which Catullus doth owe,
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
A little suspecteth the false worshipper,
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil;
Birds never lim'd no secret bruises fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer,
And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm expresse'd.

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base ari in plait's of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy:
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
That cloy'd with much, he pineth still for more.

But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parting looks,
Nor read the subtle shining secret
Writ in the glassy margents of such books:
She touch'd no unknown bate, nor fear'd no hook.
Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory:
Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
And wordless so greets heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
He makes excuses for his being there:
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear;
Till sable night, mother of dread and fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vaulty prison stows the day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending' weariness with heavy sprite;
For after supper long he questioned
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night:
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight,
And every one to rest themselves betake, [waked
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that
As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining:
Despair to gain doth traffic off for gaining;
And when great treasure is the need proposed,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death supposed.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond,
That what they have not, that which they possess,
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age;
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we rage;
As life for honour in fell battles' rage:
Honour for wealth, and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in venturing ill, we leave to be
The things we are for that which we expect;
And this ambitious foul inrinity,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have: so then we do neglect
The thing we have; and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust,
And for himself himself he must forsake:
Then, where is truth, if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
To slanderous tongues, and wretched hateful days?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had close'd up mortal eyes;

No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries:
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs. Pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake, to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm,
Is madly tost'd between desire and dread;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm;
But honest fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charm,
Doth too too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude desire.

His falchion on a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly,
Whoretat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye;
And to the flame thus speaks advisedly:
As from this cold flint I enforce'd this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.

Here, pale with fear, he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise:
Then, looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armour of still slaughtered lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust.

Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine;
And die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine:
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine:
Let fair humanity abhor the deed,
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed

O shame to knighthood, and to shining arms!
O foul dishonour to my household's grave!
O impious act, including all foul harms!
A martial man to be so fancy's slave!
True valour still a true respect should have;
Then, my digestion is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraved in my face.

Yes, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat;
Some loathsome daed the herald will contrive,
To cipher me how fondly I did dote;
That my posterity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not been.

What win I, if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth to wait a week,
Or sells eternity to get a toy?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down?

If Collatins dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent?
This siege that hath engag'd to receive
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame

Pretending
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

O! what excuse can my invention make,
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed?
Will not my tongue be mute, my heart be still?
Mine eyes forgo their light, my false heart bleed?
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

Had Collatinus kill’d my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife,
As in revenge or quital of such strife;
But as he is my kinman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

Shameful it is;—ay, if the fact be known:
Hateful it is;—there is no hate in loving:
I’ll beg her love;—but she is not her own
The worst is but denial, and reproving:
My will is strong, past reason’s weak removing:
Who fears a sentence, or an old man’s saw;
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
’Tween frozen conscience and hot burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, she took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz’d for tidings in my eager eyes,
Fearing some hard news from the warlike band,
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.
O, how her fear did make her colour rise!
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then, white as lawn, the roses took away.

And how her hand, in my hand being lock’d,
Fond it to tremble with her loyal fear!
Which struck her sad. and then it faster rock’d,
Until her husband’s welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown’d him in the flood.

Why hunt I, then, for colour or excuses?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth:
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth;
And when his gaudy banner is display’d,
The coward fights, and will not be dismay’d.

Then, childish fear, avaunt! debating, die!
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never countermand mine eye:
Sad pause and deep regard beseech the sage;
My part is youth, and beata these from the stage.

Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize;
Then, who fears sinking where such treasure lies?

As corn o’er-grown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost chok’d by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hopes, and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the selfsame seat sits Collatinus:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which, once corrupted, takes the worsker part;
And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, faster’d by their leader’s jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucreces’ bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him onboard’d retire his ward;
But as they open they all rate his ill
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard;
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-wandering weesels shriek, to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case;
But his hot heart, with fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch:

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia’s glove, wherein her needle sticks:
He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And spaghing, the needle his finger pricks;
As who should say, this glove to warrant tricks
Is not inured; return again in haste;
Thou seest our mistress’ ornaments are chaste.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him,
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove, that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial,
Or as those bare which stop the hourly dial;
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

So, so, quoth he; these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snaped1 birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing; [sands,
Huge rocks. high winds, st-ong pirates, shelves and
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands.

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr’d him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impuity hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heavens should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited th’ eternal power

1 Nipped by the frost.
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair soul,
And they would stand suspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts — quoth he, I must deflower:
The power of which I pray to shew this fact,
How can they, then, assist me in the act?

Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution:
Thoughts are but dreams, till their effects be tried;
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide.
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch:
Thus treason works ere traitors be espied.
Who sees the lurking serpent steps aside;
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
And gazeth on her yet-unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eye-balls in his head:
By their high treason is his heart mislead;
Which gives the watch-word to his hand full soon,
To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes begun
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is, that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed,
Bgt blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O! had they in that darksome prison died,
Then had they seen the period of their ill:
Then Collatine again, by Lucrece's side,
In his clear bed might have repos'd still;
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill,
And holy-thought Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozening the pillow of a lawful kiss,
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss,
Between whose hills her head intomb'd is;
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admir'd of lawd unhallowed eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light,
And canopied in darkness sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her breath;
O modest wantons! wanton modestly!
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality:
Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life liv'd in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden works unconquered;
Save of their lord, no bearing yoke they knew,
And him they knew, they truly knew the fact,
These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see, but nighly he noted?
What did he note, but strongly he desired?
What he beheld, on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his willful eye he tired.
With more than admiration he admired
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion sawnaeth o'er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazing qualified;
Slak'd, not suppress'd; for standing by her side,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pilage fighting,
Obdurate vassals fail exploits effecting,
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children's tears, nor mothers' groans respecting,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarum striking,
Gives the hot charge, and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land,
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They, muttering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governors and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries;
She, much amaz'd, breaks ope her lock'd-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and controul'd.

Imagine her as one in dead night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a shaking;
What terror's in! but she, in wonder taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies;
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shifting antic, ugly in her eyes:
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries;
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,
(Rude ram to better such an ivory wall)
May feel her heart (poor citizen!) diseas'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
The Rape of Lucrece

This moves in him more rage, and lesser pity,
To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe;
Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers urgeth still,
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: The colour in thy face
That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace,
Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale;
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never conquer'd fort: the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:
Thy beauty hath ensn'd thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide,
My will, that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might;
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

I see what crosses my attempt will bring,
I know what thorns the growing rose defends,
I think the honey guarded with a sting;
All this beforehand counsel comprehends,
But will is dead, and hears no heedful friends:
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

I have debated, even in my soul,
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall breed;
But nothing can affections course control,
Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed,
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade,
Whose crooked beak threats, if he mount he dies:
So under his insulting falcon lies
Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells,
With trembling fear, as foul hear falcon's bells.

Lucrece, quoth he, this night I must enjoy thee:
If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee.
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy:
And thou, the author of their obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend:
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;

A little harm, done to a great good end,
For lawful policy remains enanced.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound; being so applied,
His venom in effect is purified.

Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit: bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slave's wipe, or birth-hour's blot;
For marks described in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.

Here, with a cockatrice's dead-killing eye,
He rouseth up himself, and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the gripe's sharp claws,
Pleads in a wilderness, where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor sought obeys but his foul appetite.

But when a black-face'd cloud the world doth threat,
In his dim mist th' aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their biding,
Hindering their present fall by this dividing:
So his unhallowed haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks, while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his hold-foot foot the weak mouse panteth:
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swelling gulf that even in plenty wanteth.
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart granite
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wears with raining

Her pity-pleasing eyes are sadly fixed
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mixed,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place;
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin, ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath,
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, reward not hospitality;
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim before thy shoot be ended:
He is no wood-man, that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me;
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me;
Myself a weakling, do not then enmane me;
Thou look'st not like deceit, do not deceive me:
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave thee.
If ever man were mov'd with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans.
To their salt sovereign with their fresh falls' haste,
Add to his flow, but alter not his taste.

Thou art, quoth she, a sea, a sovereign king;
And lo! there falls into thy boundless flood
Black heen, discomposure, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is hersed,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispersed.

So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave:
Thou leathed in their shame, they in thy pride:
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state—
No more, quoth he; by heaven, I will not hear thee:
Yield to my love: if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee;
That done, despicably I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies:
Shame, folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb cries;
Till with her own white finesse her voice control'd
Estombe her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears,
He pens her piteous clamours in her head,
Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!
The spots whereof could weeping purify,
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again;
This forced league doth force a further strife;
This momentary joy breeds months of pain:
This hot desire converts to cold disdain.
Pure chastity is rife of her store,
And lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound, or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell, or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
The prey wherein by nature they delight:
So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night:
His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will, that liv'd by foul devouring.

O deeper sin, than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Drunkens desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat, or rein his rash desire,
Till, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.

And then, with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

Feckless desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar wails his case:
The flesh being proud, desire doth fight with grace,
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faithful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chased;
For now against himself he sounds this doom,
That through the length of time he stands disgraced:
Besides, his soul’s fair temple is defaced;
To whose weak ruins must troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter’d down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death, and pain perpetual:
Which in her presence she controlled still,
But her foresight could not fore-stall their will.

Even in this thought through the dark night he stealths,
A captive victor that hath lost in gain;
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will despite of cure remain;
Leaving his spoil perplex’d in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burden of a guilty mind.

He, like a thievish dog, creeps sadly thence,
She like a weared lamb lies panting there;
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence,
She desperate with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays, exclaiming on the direful night;
He runs, and chides his vanish’d, loath’d delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertist,
She there remains a hopeless cast-away;
He in his speed looks for the morning light,
She prays she never may behold the day;
For day, quoth she, night’s soapes doth open lay,
And my true eyes have never practis’d how
To cloke offens with a cunning brow.

They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold,
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water that doth eat in steel,
Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel.

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer ocean to close so pure a mind.
Frantick with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
Against the unseen secrecy of night.

O, comfort-killing night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing chao; nurse of blame!
Blind, muffled bawd! dark harbour for deface!
Grum cave of death, whispering conspirator
With close-tongu’d treason and the ravisher!

O, hateful, vaporous, and foggy night!
Since thou art guilty of my careless crime,
Muster thy mist to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion’d course of time.
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

With rotten dampe ravish the morning air;
Let their exhal’d unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair;
Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prick;
And let thy musty vapours search so thick,
That in their smoky ranks his smoother’d light
May set at noon, and make perpetual night.

Were Tarquin night, as he is but night’s child,
The silver-shining queen he would distain,
Her twinkling handmaidens too, by him defil’d,
Through night’s black bosom should not peep again;
So should I have companions in my pain;
And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage,
As palmers’ chat makes short their pilgrimage.

Where, now, I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms, and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows, and hide their infamy;
But I alone, alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine;
Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans
Poor wasting monuments of lastling moans.

O night! thou furnace of foul-recking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr’d with disgrace;
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made,
May likewise be sepulcher’d in thy shade.

Make me not object to the tell-tale day!
The light will show, character’d in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity’s decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote’t my loathsome trespass in my looks.

The nurse to still her child will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin’s name.
The orator to deck his oratory
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin’s shame;
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine’s dear love be kept unspotted;
If that be made a theme for disputatation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undesser’d reproach to him allotted,
That is as clear from this attain’t of mine,
As I ere this was pure to Collatine.

O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! great-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp’d in Collatine’s face,
And Tarquin’s eye may read the mot’st afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

Alas! how many bear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves, but he that gives them, knows.

If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But rob'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wound;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides, of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue.—O, unlook'd for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!

Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud,
Or hateful cuckoo hatch in sparrows' nests?—
Or toads infect fair fountains with venom mud?—
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?—
Or kugs be breakers of their own-beasts?—
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

The aged man that coffers up his gold,
Is plagud with cramps, and gouts, and painful fits,
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless barns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain,
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

So, then he hath it, when he cannot use it,
And leaveth it to be master'd by his young;
Who in their pride do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sours,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring,
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers,
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing,
What virtue breeds, iniquity devours;
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill annexed opportunity,
Or kills his life, or else his quality.

O, Opportunity! thy guilt is great:
'T is thou that execut'st the traitor's treason;
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou 'point'st at the season:
'T is thou that spur'st at right, at law, at reason:
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits sin to seize the souls that wander by him.

Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire, when temperance is thaw'd;
Thou smoother'st honesty, thou murder'st truth:
Thou foul abetter! thou notorious bawd!
Thou planteat scandal, and displac'd land:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
'Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief.

Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public feast;

Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name,
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter worm's food taste.
Thy violent vanities can never last.
How comes it then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou sort5 an hour great strides to end,
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chained?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pains?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee:
But they never meet with Opportunity.

The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds:
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds.
Wretch, envy, treason, rape, and murders range
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

When truth and virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid:
They buy thy help; but sin ne'er gives a fee:
He gratis comes, and thou art well appay'd.
As well to hear, as grant what he hath said.
My Collatine would else have come to me,
When Tarquin did; but he was stay'd by thee.

Guilty thou art of murder and of theft,
Guilty of perjury and subornation;
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift;
Guilty of incest, that abomination:
An accessory by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

Mis-shapen Time, cope-mate of ugly night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care;
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's snare.
Thou nurtur'd all, and murderest all that are.
O hear me, then, injurious, shifting Time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose?
Cancel'd my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is to fine the hate of foes;
To eat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn, and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wronger till be render right;
To ruinate proud buildings with thy hours,
And smeare with dust their glittering golden spires.

To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books, and alter their contents,
To pluck the quills from ancient ravens' wings,
To dry the old oak's sap, and cherish springs;
To spoil antiquities of humbleness,
And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel.

1 Broken, tarnished. 5 Select. 6 Satirized. 4 End.
To show the beldame daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild;
To mock the subtle, in themselves beguil’d;
To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops;

Why work’st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring 4 minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends:
O! this dread night, wouldst thou one hour come back,
I could prevent this storm, and shun thy drop.

Thou ceaseless lacier to eternity,
With some mischance cross Tarquin in his flight:
Devise extremes beyond extremity
To make him curse this cursed crimine night:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright,
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him meet but pity not his moans:
Stone him with harden’d hearts, harder than stones;
And let mild women to him lose their mildness,
Wild to him than tigers in their wildness.

Let him have time to bear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of help to despair,
Let him have time to live a loathed slave;
Let him have time a beggar’s orts to crave,
And time to see one that by alms doth live,
Disdain to him disdained scraps to give.

Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort;
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly, and his time of sport:
And ever let his unreeing crime
Have time to wall’ th’ abusing of his time.

O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught’st this ill!
At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
Himself himself seek every hour to kill!
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should spill;
For who so base should such an office have
As slanderous death’s man to so base a slave?

The base is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate:
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour’d, or begets him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is miss’d,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unpore’st’ d fly with the silent aw;
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay,
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day:

Guards are unnoticed whereas’er they fly,
But eagles gaz’d upon with every eye.

Out, idle words! servants to shallow fools,
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Buy yourselves in skill-contending schools;
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters,
To trembling client be you mediators:
For me, I forego’t not argument a straw,
Since that my case is past the help of law.

In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night;
In vain I cavil with mine infamy,
In vain I spurn at my confirm’d despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
The remedy, indeed, to me good,
Is to let forth my soul, defiled blood.

Poor hand, why quiver’st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die, my honour lives in thee,
But if I live, thou liv’st in my defame:
Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,
And wast a’ that to scratch her wicked foe,
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so.

This said, from her be-tumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death;
But this no slaughter-house no tool imparteth,
To make more vent for passage of her breath,
Which, thronging through her lips, so vanisheth
As smoke from Aëma, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

In vain, quoth she, I live; and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hapless life:
I fear’d by Tarquin’s falshion to be slain,
Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife;
But when I fear’d, I was a loyal wife.
So am I now—O no! that cannot be:
Of that true type hath Tarquin rifled me.

O! that is gone, for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least, I give
A badge of fame to slander’s livery;
A dying life to living infamy.
Poor helpless help, the treasure stol’n away,
To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
The stained taste of violated truth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so,
To flatter thee with an infringed oath;
This bastard gaffe shall never come to growth:
He shall not boast, who did thy stock pollute,
That thou art doing father of his fruit.

Nor shall be smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought
Basely with gold, but stolen from thy gate.
For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
And with my trespass never will dispense,
Till life to death acquit my force’d offence.

I will not poison thee with my attainst,
Nor fold my fault in cleanly coin’d excuses.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses:
My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes, like sluices,
As from a mountain spring that feeds a dale,
Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale.

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-tuned warble of her nightly sorrow,
And solemn night with slow, sad gait descended
To ugly hell; when lo! the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow:
But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranny spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping;
To whom she sobbing speaks: O eye of eyes!
Why pry'st thou through my window? leave thy peeping;
Mock with thy ticking beams eyes that are sleeping:
Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
For day hath nought to do what 'tis done by night.

Thus cavils she with every thing she sees.
True grief is fond and testy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with nought agrees:
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild;
Continuance tames the one; the other wild,
Like an unpractis'd swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare:
No object but her passion's strength renewes,
And as one shifts, another straight ensues:
Sometimes her grief is dumb, and hath no words;
Sometimes 'tis mad, and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy,
Make her moans mad with their sweet melody;
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy:
Sad souls are slain in merry company;
Grief best is pleas'd with grief's society:
True sorrow then is feelingly suff'rd,
When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd.

'T is double death to drown in ken of shore;
He ten times pines, that pines beholding food;
To see the salve doth make the wound ache more;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good:
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'erflows:
Grief dailied with nor law nor limit knows.

You mocking birds, quoth she, your tunes entomb
Within your hollow swelling feather'd breasts,
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb:
My restless disord loves no stop nor rest;
A woful hostess brooks not merry guests.
Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears;
Distress likes dumbs, when time is kept with tears.

Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grave in my dishevel'd hair.
As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the diapason bear:
For burden-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st, better skill.

And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woe's waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife, to affright mine eye,
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
These means, as frest upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.

And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert. seated from the way,
That knows not parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern sad tunes to change their kinds.
Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds.

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Widly determining which way to fly,
Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twain were better,
When life is sham'd, and death reproach'd debtor.

To kill myself, quoth she, alack! what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution?
They that lose half, with greater patience bear is,
Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion,
Who having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
Will play the other, and be nurse to none.

My body or my soul, which was the dearer,
When the one pure, the other made divine?
Whose love of either to myself was nearer,
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine?
Ah me! the bark peeld from the lofty pine,
His love will wither, and his sap decay:
So must my soul, her bark being peeld away.

Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Her sacred temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grossely engirt with daring infancy:
Then, let it not be call'd impiety,
If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole,
Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

Yet die I will not, till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death,
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him taint'd shall for him be spent,
And as his due writ in my testament.

My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonour'd.
'T is honour to deprive dishonour'd life;
The one will live, the other being dead:
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
For in my death I murder shameful secon:
My shame so dead. mine honour is new-born.

Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?
My resolution, love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou reveng'd may'st be.
How Tarquin must be us'd, read it in me:

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And for my sake serve thou false Tarquin so.

This brief abridgment of my will I make:—
My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, husband, do thou take;
Mine honour be the knife’s that makes my wound;
My shame be his that did my fame confound;
And all my fame that lives disburden be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will,
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it!
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill;
My life’s soul deed my life’s fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, “so be it.”
Yield to my hand; my hand shall conquer thee:
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wip’d the brimish pearl from her bright eyes,
With untund tongue she hoarsely calls her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies;
For fleet-wing’d duty with thought’s feathers flies.
Poor Lucrece’s checks unto her maid seem so,
As winter meads when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-morrow,
With soft slow tongue, true mark of modesty,
And sorts a sad look to her lady’s sorrow,
For why, her face wore sorrow’s livery;
But durst not ask of her audaciously
Why her two suns were cloud-ecloped so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash’d with woe.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moislen’d like a melting eye,
Even so the maid with swelling drops gan wet
Her circled eye, enforc’d by sympathy
Of those fair suns set in her mistress’ sky,
Who in a salt-wav’d ocean quench their light,
Which makes the maid weep like the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling:
One justly weeps, the other takes in hand
No cause but company of her drops spilling:
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing,
Grieving themselves to guess at others’ smarts,
And then they drown their eyes, or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they form’d as marble will;
The weak oppress’d, th’ impression of strange kinds
Is form’d in them by force, by fraud, or skill:
Then, call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than wax shall be accounted evil,
Wherein is stamp’d the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champain plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep:
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obsercely sleep.
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep:
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women’s faces are their own faults’ books.

No man inveigh against the withered flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill’d.

Not that devour’d, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O! let it not be hild
Poor women’s faults, that they are so fulfill’d
With men’s abuses: those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Sasail’d by night, with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong;
Such danger to resistance did belong,
That dying fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining:
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know, gentle wench, it small availeth my mood;
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

But tell me, girl, when went—and there she stay’d
Till after a deep groan—Tarquin from hence?
Madam, ere I was up, replied the maid;
The more to blame my sluggard negligence:
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.
O peace! quoth Lucrece: if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less;
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call’d a hell,
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen,—
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say?—One of my husband’s men
Bid thou be ready by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear:
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it;
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ.

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o’er the paper with her quill.
Conceit and grief an eager combat fight;
What wit sets down is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill:
Much like a press of people at a door
Throng her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins: “Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeeth thee,
Health to thy person: next, vouche safe t’ afford
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see)
Some present speed to come and visit me.
So I commend me from our house in grief:
My woe’s are tedious, though my words are brief.”

Here folds she up the tenour of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief’s true quality:
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain’d her stain’d excuse.

It was usual for testators to appoint not only executors, but overseers of their wills. Shakespeare did so. *called: in mod. edn. *Held.
THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;
When sighs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her.
From that suspension which the world might bear her.
To sit in this blot she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told,
For then the eye interprets to the ear.
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woe doth bear:
Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear;
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords,
And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
"At Ardea to my lord, with more than haste." The post attends, and she delivers it.
Charging the sour-lad'd groom to his as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast:
Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems;
Extremity still urges such extremes.

The homely villain court'sies to her low,
And, blushing on her, with a stedfast eye
Receives the scroll, without or yes or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth he;
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie,
Imagine every eye beholds their blame.
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame.

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
Even so this pattern of a worn-out age
Fawn'd honest looks, but lay'd no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blazed;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wistly on him gazed;
Her earnest eye did make him more amazed:
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spied in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So woe hath wearied woe, moan tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Pauing for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy;
Before which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening cloud-kissing lion with annoy;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heaven it seem'd to kiss the turret bow'd.

And dying eyes gleam'd forth their saby lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrim'd with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
In youth quick bearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Pand cowards, marching on with trembling pieces:
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble, [ble
That one would swear he saw them quake and trem

In Ajax and Ulysses, O. what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either 'cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent,
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 't were encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight.
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which pur'lld up to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice
All jointly listening, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice:
Some high, some low; the painter was so nice,
The scales of many, almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one, being thong'd, bears back, all bollu'ed and red
Another, smoother'd, seems to pelt and swear;
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for less of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry words.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,"
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Grip'd in an armed hand : himself behind
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind.
A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to field,
Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
That through their light joy seemed to appear
(Like bright things stain'd) a kind of heavy fear.

And from the strond of Dardan, where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red 'blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and than\1
Retire again, till meeting greater ranks,
They join, and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is staid*.
Many she sees, where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and doleur dwell'd,
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld,
Starting on Priam's throne with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatomiz'd
Time's ruin, beauty's wreck, and grim care's reign:
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disgriz'd,
Of what she was no semblance did remain;
Here blue blood chang'd to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrub pipes had fed,
Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the belam'd's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer but her cries,
And bitter words to ban her cruel foes:
The painter was no God to lend her those,
And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
To give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

Poor instrument, quoth she, without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue,
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong,
And with my tears quench Troy, that burns so long,
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear:
Thine eye kindled the fire that burneth here;
And here, in Troy, for treepsad of thine eye;
The aire, the son, the dame, and daughter die.

Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many me?*.
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe.
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

Lo! here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swounds;
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds.
Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire.

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes;
For sorrow, like a heavy hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell:
So Lucrece, set a-work, sad tales doth tell
To pencil'd penitiveness and colour'd sorrow; [row.
She lends them words, and she their looks doth bor-

She throws her eyes about the painting, round,
And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament:
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Pyrgian shepherds lent;
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content.
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show;
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes waiting still,
A brow that seemed to welcome woe;
Cheeks neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensnec'd his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust.
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-faced storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skilled workman this mild image drew
For perjur'd Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after seew;
Whose words like wild-fire burn the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilium, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.

This picture she advisedly perused,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill,
Saying, some shape in Simon's was abused;
So fair a form lodg'd not a mind so ill:
And still on him she gaz'd; and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

It cannot be, quoth she, that so much guile—
(She would have said) can lurk in such a look;
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue, "can lurk" from "cannot" took
"It cannot be" she in that sense forsook.
And turn'd it thus: it cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind:

For even as subtle Simon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
(As if with grief or travail he had painted)
To me came Tarquin armed; too I beglud*?
With outward honesty, but yet desil'd
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

Look, look! how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those sorrow'd tears that Simon sheds.
Priam, why art thou old, and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his, that move thy pitty
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

Such devils steal effects from lightless hell,
For Simon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold, hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold,
Only to flatter fools, and make them bold:

1 Often used, as here, for "then." 2 No other instance is known of the use of this word. In Nevet xxiv. we have 'stoid' used in a similar sense. 3 More or: in med. ed. Mashed, or in the guise of.
So Priam's trust false Simon's tears doth flatter,
That he fends means to burn his Troy with water.

Here, all enrag'd, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breasts.
She tears the senseless Simon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest
Whose deed hath made herself herself detect:
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er;
Fool! fool! quoth she, his wounds will not be sore.

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she thinks too long with her remaining.
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining:
Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps;
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath overslip'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent,
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others' detriment;
Loosing her woes in shows of discontent.
It easeth some, though none it ever cured,
To think their sufferings others have endured.

But now the mindful messenger, come back;
Brought home his lord and other company.
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black;
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky:
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretel new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazedly in her sad face he stares:
Her eyes, though sad in tears, look'd red and raw;
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares;
Both stood like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befal'n, that thou dost trembling stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attir'd in discontent?
Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief that we may give redress.

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe:
At length, address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is ta'en prisoner by the foe;
While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending.
Few words, quoth she, shall fit the trepass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amend'd:
In me more woes than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

Then, be this all the task it hath to say:
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas! thy Lucrece is not free.

For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining falshion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cried. Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love; else lastling shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradicte.

For some hard-favour'd groom of thine, quoth he,
Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee
And swear I found you where you did fulfill
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill
The lechers in their deed: this act will be
My fame, and thy perpetual infamy.

With this I did begin to start and cry.
And then against my heart he set his sword,
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word;
So should my shame still rest upon record,
And never be forgot in mighty Roman
Th' adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear:
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there:
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes,
And when the judge is rob'd, the prisoner dies.

O! teach me how to make mine own excuse,
Or, at the least, this refuge let me find:
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse
Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forc'd; that never was inclin'd
To accessory yieldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Lo! here the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With head declin'd, and voice damm'd up with woe
With sad set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new waxen pale begins to blow
The grief away, that stops his answer so;
But wretched as he is, he strives in vain,
What he breathes out, his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Out-runs the eye that doth behold his haste,
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forc'd him on so fast,
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past;
Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw.
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awakeneth:
Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
Another power; no flood by raining slaketh.
My woe, too sensible, thy passion maketh
More feeling painful: let it, then, suffice
To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.
The Rape of Lucrece

And for my sake, when I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece, now attend me:
Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own: suppose thou dost defend me
From what is past, the help that thou shalt lend me
Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die;
For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

But ere I name him, you fair lords, quoth she,
(Speaking to those that came with Collatine)
Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
With a swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine;
For 'tis a meritorious fair design,
To chase injustice with revengeful arms: [harms,
Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies'.

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd;
But she, that yet her sad task hath not said,
The protestation stops. O! speak, quoth she,
How may this forced stain be wipe'd from me?

What is the quality of mine offence,
Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
May my pure mind with the foul act dispense,
My low-declin'd honour to advance?
May any terms acquit me from this charge?
The poison'd fountain clears itself again,
And why not from this compelled stain?

With this, they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind unsullied clears;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that map which deep impression bears
Of hard misfortune, carv'd in it with tears.
No, no, quoth she; no dame, hereafter living,
By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving.

Here, with a sigh as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name: 'he, he,' she says,
But more than 'he' her poor tongue could not speak;
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
She utters this: 'he, he, fair lords, 'tis he,
That guides this hand to give this wound to me.

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unheathed.
That blow did ball it from the deep unrest
Of that polluted prison where it breathed:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds beseech'd,
Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's last date from canonic's destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew;
Till Lucrece's father, that beholds her blood,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body throw'd:
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
The murderous knife, and as it left the place,
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;
And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who like a late-sack'd island vastly stood,
Bare and unpeopled, in this fearful flood.

Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd
About the mourning and concealed face
Of that black blood a watery rigol' goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece's woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood untainted still doth rod abide,
Blushing at that which is so putrify'd.

Daughter, dear daughter! old Lucretius cries,
That life was mine, which thou hast here deprived.
In if the child the father's image lies,
Where shall I live, now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wait not to this end from me derived.
If children pre-decease progenitors,
We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new-born;
But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a bare-lon'd death by time out-worn.
O! from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn,
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass.
That I no more can see what once I was.

O time! cease thou thy course, and last no longer,
If they success to be that should survive.
Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger,
And leave the faltering feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then, live sweet Lucrece, live again, and see
Thy father die, and not thy father thee!

By this starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold Lucrece's bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfeits to die with her a space;
Till many shame bids him possess his breath,
And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath serv'd a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
Who, mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng
Weak words, so thick come in his poor heart's aid
That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime Tarquin was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
Then, son and father weep with equal strife,
Who should weep most, for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says, She's mine: O! mine she is Replies her husband: Do not take it away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatine.

O! quoth Lucretius, I did give that life,
Which she too early and too late hath spill'd.
Woe, woe! quoth Collatine, she was my wife,
I ow’d her, and ‘t is mine that she hath kill’d,
“My daughter” and “my wife” with clamours fill’d
The dispers’d sigh, who holding Lucrece’ life,
Answer’d their cries, “my daughter and my wife.”

Brutus, who pluck’d the knife from Lucrece’ side,
Seeing such emulation in their woe,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece’ wound his folly’s show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things:

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise,
And arm’d his long-hid wit advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinius’ eyes.
Thou wronged lord of Rome, quoth he, arise:
Let my unsounded self, suppose’d a fool,
Now set thy long-experienced wit to school.

Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woea?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous deeds?
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow,
For his soul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds;
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself that should have slain her foe.

Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations,
But kneel with me, and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgraced,
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chased.

Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stained,
By heaven’s fair sun that breeds the fat earth’s store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintained,
And by chaste Lucrece’s soul, that late complained
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss’d the fatal knife to end his vow;
And to his protestation urg’d the rest,
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow;
Then, jointly to the ground their knees they bow,
And that deep vow which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin’s foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consist
To Tarquin’s everlasting banishment.
SONNETS.

INTRODUCTION.

Shakespeare's Sonnets. Nearer before Imprinted. At London By G. Eld for T. T. and are to be sold by William Aspley. 1609." 4to. 40 leaves.

A Lovers Complaint. By William Shake-speare, occupieth eleven pages at the end of this volume. The late Mr. Caldecott presented a copy of "Shakespeare's Sonnets" to the Bodleian Library, with the following imprint: "At London By G. Eld for T. T. and are to be sold by John Wright, dwelling at Christ Church Gate." It is no doubt the same edition as that "to be sold by William Aspley," for in other respects they agree exactly, excepting that the copy bearing the name of John Wright has no date at the bottom of the title-page; it was possibly cut off by the binder.

"Shakespeare's Sonnets" were printed under that title, and with the name of the poet in unusually large capital letters, in 1609. No Christian name is to be found under it, and the imprint is," "A Lover's Complaint," but "Shakespeare's Sonnets" is repeated at the head of the first of the series. Hence we may possibly be warranted in assuming that they were productions well known to have been for some time floating about among the lovers and admirers of poetry, and then collected into a volume. The celebrity of the author seems proved, if any further proof were wanted, by the manner in which his "Sonnets" were put forth to the world.

There is one fact connected with the original publication of "Shakespeare's Sonnets" which has hitherto escaped remark, none of the commentators, apparently, being aware of it; viz. that although there were not two editions of them in 1609, there is an important difference in the title-pages of some copies of the impression of that year, which shows that a bookseller, not hitherto connected with the publication of any of our poet's works, was in some way concerned in the first edition of his "Sonnets." The usual imprint informs us that they were printed by "E. E." and to be sold by William Aspley (without any address); but the late Mr. Caldecott had a copy which stated that they were to be sold, not by William Aspley, (who had been one of the partners in "Much ado about Nothing," 1600, 4to., and "Henry IV." part ii. 1600, 4to.) but by "John Wright, dwelling at Christ Church Gate." No other copy with which we are acquainted has this variation in the title-page, and possibly T. T. had some reason for having cancelled, and for substituting the name of Aspley for that of Wright: the former might be better known to the ordinary buyers of such books, and to the two quarter plays in which he was interested, he perhaps, did not think it necessary to append the place where his business was carried on.

The application of the initials T. T., on the title-page, is ascertained from the Registers of the Stationers' Company, where the subsequent entry is found:

"50 May 1609.
Tho. Thorpe: A books called Shakespeare's Sonnets."

Thorpe was a bookseller of considerable eminence, who usually put his name at full length upon his title-pages, and why he did not do so in this instance, and also subscribed only T. T. to the dedication of the Sonnets, is a question which we should consider of little or no consequence, if it related to the productions of perhaps any other author but Shakespeare. It sometimes happened of old, that if it were suspected that a work might contain anything publishing or objectively objectionable, the printer or the stationer only allowed their initials to appear in connection with it. That was the case here, there is no sufficient ground for believing; and Ed avowed himself the printer, and Aspley the seller of "Shakespeare's Sonnets."

A question has arisen, and has been much disputed of late years, who was the individual to whom Thorpe dedicated these sonnets, and whom, in a very unprecedented and peculiar form, he addressed as "Mr. W. H." That form is precisely as follows, on a separate leaf immediately succeeding the title-page:

TO THE ONLY REGISTER OF THEE, NOVEY. SONNETS, MR. W. H. ALL HAPPINESS, AND THAT ETERNITY. PROMISED. BY OUR EVER-LIVING, POET, W. W. WISHETH. THE WELL-WISHING, ADVENTURE IN SETTING. FOOT, T. T.

We are not aware that there is another instance in our language, at that period, of a dedication of a similar kind, and in a similar style. It was not at all uncommon for booksellers to subscribe dedications; but it more frequently happened after the death, of an author than during his life, and, that we recollected, in a manner more remarkable. The discription has been carried on with some pertinacity on the question, what person was addressed as "Mr. W. H.?" and various replies have been made to it. Farmer conjectured wildly that he might be William Hart, the poet's nephew, who was only born in 1600; Tytwhall guessed from a line in one of the sonnets (Son. XX.) that the name was W. Hughes, or Hewes:

"A man in hee, all his in his controlling, which is thus printed in the 4to. 1609:

"A man in hee all Hews in his controllling."

Although the word "hew" is repeatedly spelt "wes" in the old edition, this is the only instance in which it is printed in Italic type, and with a capital letter, exactly the same as will, in Sonnets CXXXV, CXXXVI, and CXLIII, where the author plays upon his own name. Dr. Drake imagined that W. H. were the initials of Henry Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton, inverting ("Shakespeare and his Times," vol. ii. p. 80); and of late years Beaden, with great ingenuity, has contended that W. H. meant William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke. This last notion seems too much taken for granted by Mr. C. Armitage Brown, in his very clever and, in many respects, original work, "Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems," Svo. 1888; but we own that we cannot accredit it in that, or in any other theory that has yet been advanced upon the point. We have no suggestion of our own to offer, and acquiescence in one opinion or in another in no way affects any position regarding them which we might be disposed to take up; but it seems to us the very height of improbability that a bookseller in the year 1609, when peculiar respect was paid to nobility and station, would venture to address an Earl and a Knight of the Garter merely as "Mr. W.?"

How many pamphlets entitled "On the Sonnets of Shakespeare, identifying the Person to whom they were addressed, and elucidating several points in the Poet's History," By James Beaden. Svo. 1858. The 4to. of the book was issued, had been published in 1609 in a periodical work. We differ from Mr. Beaden with the more reluctance, because it appears that his notion was supported by the opinion of B. Hacket, and for his reasons. Learning, who, without any previous communication, had fallen upon the same conjecture before it was broached by Beaden. We take the liberty of concurring with Mr. Peter Cunningham, in a note to his excellent edition of Mr. T. Campbell's "Specimens of British Poets," (Essay, p. lxxi.) but we can by no means follow him in thinking that Shakespeare's Sonnets have been "over-rated," or that the Earl of Pembroke could not have been addressed in them, because he was only nine years old in 1609. Shakespeare had written sonnets at that date, according to the undisputed testimony of Meres, but those in which the Earl has been supposed to be addressed may have been produced at a considerably later period. Still, at the early age of eighteen or nineteen, which the Earl reached in 1616, it does not seem likely that Shakespeare would have thought it necessary, with so much vehemence, to urge him to marry.

ever, notwithstanding the pains taken to settle the dispute, we hold it to be one of comparatively little importance, and it is certainly one upon which we are not likely to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. The most accurate speculation of Chalmers, that not a few of the Sonnets were addressed to Queen Elizabeth, though maintained with considerable ability and elegance, is hardly necessary even to advert.

It is evident that Shakespeare's Sonnets are written in very different periods of Shakespeare's life, and under very different circumstances—some in youth, some in more advanced age; some in health, and some in sickness; some when he was desponding and afflicted at his own condition in life, and in place in society. In many there are to be found most remarkable indications of self-confidence, and of assurance in the success of his genius; in others, the reverse; and this contrast in the poet's opinion was constant and uniform. He never scrupled to express it, and perhaps there is no writer of ancient or of modern times so bold as Shakespeare in expressing his sentiments left behind him; has so frequently or so strongly declared his firm belief that what he had written, in this department of poetry, "the world would not willingly let die." This conviction seems incomparable with the carelessness he appears to have entertained for the preservation of his dramatic writings. We know from Francis Meres that Shakespeare's Sonnets were scattered among his friends in 1595, and no doubt he continued to add to them from year to year; but it was left to a bookseller in 1609, perhaps, to cause them to be collected, and to be printed in a separate volume.

It is from circumstances like these in which we understand Thorpe to address "Mr. W. H.," in the dedication, as "the only begetter of these ensuing sonnets." Boswell quoted a passage from Dekker's "Satromentit," 1603, (and many others have added), that "begetter" only meant "owner or procurer;" and as Thorpe had been under some obligation to W. H., for collecting Shakespeare's scattered sonnets from various parties, for this reason, perhaps, he inserted them to him. There is no doubt that "Mr. W. H." could not be the "only begetter" of the sonnets in any other sense, for it is indisputable that many of them are addressed to a woman; and though a male object might have been the cause of some of them, and particularly of the first twenty-six, he could not have been the cause of the last twenty-seven sonnets.

It is also proved that Mr. Brown's work, "Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems," which, with a few errors and inconsistencies of little moment, contains the best solution of various difficulties arising out of these Sonnets yet published. He contends that Shakespeare used the form of the sonnet as Spenser and many others employed stanzas of various descriptions, and that 162 of the 154 sonnets are divisible into six distinct poems. His arrangement of them is the following; and we think with him, that if they be read with this key, much will be intelligible which upon any other supposition must remain obscure:

First Poem. Sonnets 1 to 10. To his friend, persuading him to marry.

Second Poem. Sonnets 11 to 55. To his friend, forgiving him for having loved him of his own free will.

Third Poem. Sonnets 56 to 77. To his friend, complaining of his coldness, and warning him of life's decay.

Fourth Poem. Sonnets 78 to 101. To his friend, complaining that he prefers another poet's praise, and reproving him for faults that may injure his character.

Fifth Poem. Sonnets 102 to 126. To his friend, excusing himself for having been some time silent, and declining the charge of insincerity.

I.

From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the riper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:

But thou, controud to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel;

The following are the words Meres uses—"As the souls of Ephesians lived in the streets, and of the sweats within the souls of Ovid's lives in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakespeare: which he has preserved among his private friends, &c."—Paladino Tomita, 1590, fo. 261, b.

"This is the poet whom Shakespeare (Son. lxvi.) calls a "better skilful" than himself. He is in Son. xliv. cries to "Conrad," &c. Some have supposed that he meant Spenser, others Daniel; but Mr. P. Cun- ningham has pointed out an apparent situation to Drayton, (and to his expectation of Sonnets published in 1594, under the title of "Mark's Mirror") in Shakespeare's twenty-first Sonnet, in these lines:

Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament,
And only herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own bud burthens thy content.
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.

Fity the world, or else this giltton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

"He is it not with me, as with that muse, Which keepeth by the hand of her to verse:
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use."

It is perhaps with some difficulty that the description of Mr. Brown's Sonnets has been kept from being intermingled with the comments of Drayton, and from becoming a mere paraphrase of his views. It is very uncertain what Shakespeare's Mirror" has only been discovered of late years; and it seems not improbable that the Sonnets were written in the year 1594, under the title of "Erewhon" (as the keeper of the water, Catalogue, p. 150) be, for some reason, suppressed it. Only a single copy of each has been preserved.
II.
When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gazed on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held:
Then, being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days,
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame, and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserv'd thy beauty's use,
If thou couldst answer—"This fair child of mine
Shall sum my count, and make my old excuse,"
Proving his beauty by succession thine.
This were to be new made, when thou art old,
And see thy blood warm, when thou feel'st it cold.

III.
Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest,
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost bequeath the world, unless some mother.
For where is she so fair, whose un-ear'd womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond, will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.
Unthriftiness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest given nothing, but doth lend;
And being frank, she lends to those are free,
Then, beauteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give?
Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
For, having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
Thy unused beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives th' executor to be.

V.
Those hours, that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair, which fairly doth excel:
For never-reasting time leads summer on
To hideous winter, and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost, and lusty leaves gone quite,
Beauty o'er-snow'd and barren every where:
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prison pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was:
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.
Then, let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be distil'd:
Make sweet some pashal; treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, are it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury,
Which happier those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one:
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times requir'd thee.
Then what could death do if thou shouldst depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest, and make worms thine heir.

VII.
Lo! in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having climb'd the steep-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage:
But when from high-most pitch with weary ear
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
The eyes, 'fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract, and look another way.
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.
Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly?
Or else receiv'st with pleasure what annoy's?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.
Mark, how one string, sweet husband to another,
 Strikes each in each by mutual ordering;
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who all in one one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee,—thou single wilt prove sols.

IX.
Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye,
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
The world will wail thee like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow, and still weep,
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrift in the world doth spend,
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And, kept unused, the user so destroys it.
No love toward others in that bosom sits,
That on himself such murderous shame commits

X.
For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant, if thou will, thou art belov'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident.
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That gainest thyself thou stick'st not to consume,
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire,
O, change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is: gracious and kind,
Or, to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.
As fast as th'c: shalt wane, so fast thou growest
In one of thine, from that which thou departest:
And that fresh blood which younghly thou bestowest,
Thou may'st call thine, when thou from youth convertest.
Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase;
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay:
If all were minded so, the times should cease,
And threescore year would make the world away.
Let those whom nature hath not made for store,
Harse, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
Look, whom she best endow'd, she gave the more;
Which bounteous gift thou shouldst in bounty cherish.
She car'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby,
Thou shouldst print more, not let that copy die.

XII.
When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canop'y the hard,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard;
Then, of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow;
And nothing 'gainst time's scythe can make defence,
Save breed, to brave him, when he takes thee hence.

XIII.
O, that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours, than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give:
So should that beauty which you hold in lease,
Find no determination: then, you were
Yourself again, after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honour might uphold,
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day,
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
O! none but unthrifts. Dear my love, you know,
You had a father: let your son say so.

XIV.
Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck,
And yet, methinks, I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good, or evil luck,
Of plagues, or dearths, or seasons' quality;
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain, and wind;
Or say with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that I in heaven find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And, constant stars, in them I read such art,
As truth and beauty shall together thrive.

If from thyself to store thou wouldst convert:
Or else of thee this I prognosticate,
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.
When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment;
That this huge stage presented nought but shows,
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment,
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheer'd and check'd even by the selfsame sky,
Vast in their youthful spire, at height decrease
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then, the conceit of this instanct cease.
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful time debateh with decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And, all in war with time, for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engrave you new

XVI.
But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, time,
And fortify yourself in your decay;
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours,
And many maiden gardens, yet unseas,
With virtuous wish would bear your living flowers,
Much like than your painted counterfeit:
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair,
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
To give away yourself, keeps yourself still,
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

XVII.
Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say, 'this poet lies;
Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.'
So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scorn'd, like old men of less truth than tongue,
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
And stretched metre of an antique song;
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice—in it, and in my rhyme.

XVIII.
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date.
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd,
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd.
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade
When in eternal lines to time thou growest.
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.
XIX.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-liv'd phoenix in her blood:
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st,
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world, and all her fading sweets;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:
O! carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow.

For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.

Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

XX.

A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted,
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion:
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
A man in hue, all hues in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes, and women's souls amazeth;
And for a woman wert thou first created;
Till nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
And by addition of me thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.

But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

XXI.

So is it not with me, as with that muse
Stirr'd by a painted beauty to his verse,
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse;
Making a couplement of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in this huge rondeur hem's.
O! let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then, believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air:
Let them say more that like of hear-say well;
I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

XXII.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou art of one date;
But when in thine time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days shalld expire;
For all that beauty that doth cover thee,
Is but the semblly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live as thine in me.
How can I, then, be elder than thou art?
O! therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
As I, not for myself, but for thee will,
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.

Presume not on thy heart, when mine is slain;
Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.

As an unperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
* worth: in old edn. Theobald made the change. *
Looking on darkness which the blind do see:
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewell hung in ghostly night,
Makes black night beauteous, and her old face new.
Lo! thus by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for myself, no quiet find.

XXVIII.
How can I, then, return in happy plight,
That am debarr'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not ease'd by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me;
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven:
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night,
When sparkling stars twi're not, thou gild'st the even:
But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stronger.

XXIX.
When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state
(like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate:
For thy sweet love remember'd such wealth brings,
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:
Then, can I drown an eye, unaided to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long since cancell'd woe,
And moan th' expense of many a vanished sight.
Then, can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned mean,
Which I new pay, as if not paid before:
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

XXXI.
Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead,
And there reigns love, and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stol'n from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
SONNETS.

XXXVI.
Let me confess that we two must be twin,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spine,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame;
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.
As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest sprite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth;
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engraven to this store:
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despa'rd,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give,
That in thy abundance am suffic'd,
And by a part of all thy glory live.
Look what is best, that best I wish in thee:
This wish I have; then, ten times happy me!

XXXVIII.
How can my muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O! give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old nine which rymers invocate;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to out-live long date.
If my slight muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.
O! how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is 't but mine own, when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divided live,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee which thou deserv'ed alone.
O absences! what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
Which time and thoughts so sweetly dost dissemble,
And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
By praising him here, who doth hence remain.

XL.
Take all my loves, my love; yea, take them all:
What hast thou then more than thou hast before?
No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call:
All mine was thine before thou hadst this more;
Then, if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee, for my love thou wast;
But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceitest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief;
Although thou steal thee all my poverty;
And yet love knows it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all'Pill well shows,
Kill me with spites, yet we must not be foes.

XLI.
Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits,
When I am sometimes absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won,
Bemées thou art, therefore to be assaileth;
And when a woman woos, what woman's son
Will sourly leave her till she have prevailed.
Ah me! but yet thou might'st my seat forbear,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lead thee in their riot even there
Where thou art forc'd to break a two-fold truth.
Here, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.
That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said, I lov'd her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:
Thou darest love her, because thou know'st I love her;
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain.
Gentle lost one, my friend hast found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
But here's the joy; my friend and I are one.
Sweet flattery!—then, she loves but me alone.

XLIII.
When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unspected.
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And darkly bright are bright in dark directed.
Then thou, whose shadowy shadows doth make bright,
How would thy shadow's form, form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseen eyes thy shade shines so?
How would, I say, mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day,
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?
All days are nights to see, till I see thee, me.
And nights bright days, when dreams do show thee.

XLIV.
If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injurious distance should not stop my way.
For, then, despite of space, I would be brought
From limits far remote where thou dost stay.
No matter then, although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee:
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land.
From whence at pleasure thou mayst come and part
And even thence thou wilt be stol'n, I fear.
For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.
Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
When as thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advis'1 respects;
Against that time, when thou shalt strangely pass,
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity;
Against that time do I entreat thee here,
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:
To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws
Since why to love I can allege no cause.

L.
How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek (my weary travel's end)
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
"Thus far the miles are measure'd from thy friend"
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully out to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know,
His rider lov'd not speed being made from thee
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger flushes into his hide,
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side:
For that same groan doth put this in my mind,
My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

LI.
Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer, when from thee I speed:
From where thou art why should I haste me thence?
Till I return of posting is no need.
O! what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind
In winged speed no motion shall I know:
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace;
Therefore desire, (of perfect love being made)
Shall neigh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade;
Since from thee going he went wilful-slow,
Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.
So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet store-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure,
Therefore, are feasts so solemn and so rare,
Since seldom coming, in the long year set
Like stones of worth, they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the arcaneat.
So is the time that keeps you as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special-blest,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope.
Being bad, to triumph, being lack'd, to bore.

XLV.
The other two, slight air and purging fire,
Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
The Blesseth thought, the other my desire.
These present-absent with swift motion slide:
For when these quicker elements are gone
In tender embassy of love to thee,
My life, being made of four, with two alone
Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy
Until life's composition be recouer'd
By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
Who even but now come back again, assured
Of thy fair health, recounting to me;
This told, I joy; but then, no longer glad,
I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI.
Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war,
How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
My heart doth plead, that thou in him dost lie,
(A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes)
But the defendant doth that plea deny,
And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
'To eide this title is impanneled
A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart;
And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moiety,* and the dear heart's part:
As thus; mine eye's due is thine outward part,
And my heart's right thine inward love of heart.

XLVII.
Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns now unto the other.
When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
Or heart in love with sights himself doth smother,
With my love's picture then my eye doth move,
And to the painted banquet bids my heart:
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
So, either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away art present still with me;
For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move,
And I am still with them, and they with thee;
Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.
How careful was I, when I took my way,
Each trifle under trust bare to trust;
That to my use it might unused stay
From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
Thou, best of dearest, and mine only care,
Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
These have I not lock'd up in any chest,
Saving what art not, though I feel thou art,
Within the gentle cluse of my breast,
LIII.
What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you:
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new:
Speak of the spring, and poison of the year,
The one doth shadow of your beauty show,
The other as your bounty doth appear;
And you in every blessed shape we know.
In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.
O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem,
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem.
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye,
As the perfumed tincture of the roses.
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds disclosed;
But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fare;
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distills your truth.

LV.
Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall out-live this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswep't stone, beaumard'd with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword, nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace forth: your praise shall still find room
Even in the eyes of all posterity,
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.
Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said,
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted new Come double; as the banks, that while they see
Return of love more blest may be the view;
Or call it winter, which being full of care,
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

LVII.
Being your slave, what should I do but tend
Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world without-end hour,
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour,
When you have bid your servant once adieu:
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought,
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose:
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought,
Save where you are, how happy you make those.
So true a foot is love, that in your will (Though you do any thing) he thinks no ill.

LVIII.
That God forbid, that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand th' account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure!
O! let me suffer (being at your beck)
Th' imprison'd absence of your liberty;
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each chock,
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list; your charter is so strong,
That you yourself may privilege your time:
Do what you will, to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell,
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.
If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
Which, labouring for invention, bear amiss
The second burden of a former child?
O! that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done;
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are mended, or where better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O! sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

LX.
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And time that gave doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the florish set on youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow:
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.
Is it thy will, thy image should keep open
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows, like to thee, do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home, into my deeds to pry;
To find out shames and idle hours in me,

1 Pliny. 2 Dog-rose. 3 by: in old eds. Malore made the change.
The scope and tenour of thy jealousy?
O no! thy love, though much, is not so great:
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake;
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake:
For thee watch I, whilst thou dost wake elsewhere,
From me far off, with others all too near.

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
And all my soul, and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worlds surpass.

But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated and chopp'd with tan'td antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
Self so self-loving were iniquity.
'Tis thee (myself) that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With time's injurious hand crush'd and o'erworn;
With how large heave drain'd his honey-breath, and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travel'd on to age's steepy night;
And all those beauties, whereof now he's king,
Are vanishing, or vanish'd out of sight,
Sickening away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life;
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and be in them still green.

When I have seen by Time's fell hand decayed
The rich proud cost of out-worn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-raised,
And brass eternal, slave to mortal rage:
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store:
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay,
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate—
That time will come and take my love away.

This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'er-sways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O! how shall summer's breath hold out
Against the wrothful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall time's best jewel from time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?

Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O none! unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

Tir'd with all these, for restful death I cry;
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely stroped,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrace'd,
And strength by limping away disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly (doctor-like) controlling skill,
And simple truth miscon'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:

Tir'd with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that to die I leave my love alone.

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And Jacołd himself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek,
And steal dead seeing of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O! him the stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

Thus is his check the map of days out-worn,
When beauty liv'd and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were borne,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were born away,
To live a second life on second head;
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay.
In him those holy antique howres seen,
Without all ornament, itself, and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth nature store,
To show false art what beauty was of yore.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view,
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;
All tongues (the voice of souls) give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thine outward thus with outward praise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own
In other accents do this praise confound.
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds; [rue
Then (churl) their thoughts, although their eyes were
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of woods:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The solve* is this:—that thou dost common grow.

1 Trim, adom *and is old eda Tyrwhitt made the change. 2 Solution.
SONNETS.

LXX.
That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being wrong'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast past by the ambush of young days,
Either not assai'ld, or victor being charged;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy, evermore enlarged:
If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then, thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

LXXI.
No longer mourn for me when I am dead,
Then shall you hear the surly sullen bell,
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with viler worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O! if (I say) you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay;
Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.
O! lest the world should task you to recite
What merit liv'd in me, that you should love
After my death, dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased,
Then nigard truth would willingly impart.
O! lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
For I am sham'd by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.
That time of year thou may'st in me behold,
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd chobes, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou seest the twilight of such day
As after sun-set fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest:
In me thou seest the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of thy youth doth lie,
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by;[strong,
This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more
To love that well which thou must leave are long:

LXXIV.
But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay:
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead;
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.
So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground;
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found:
Now prove how rich you are, and let me know
Doubting the fleeting age will steal his treasure;
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure:
Sometime all full with feasting on your sight,
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is had or must from you be took.
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day;
Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.
Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
So far from variation or quick change?
Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Shewing their birth, and where they did proceed?
O! know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So, all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent:
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love, still telling what is told.

LXXVII.
Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning may'st thou taste:
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show,
Of mouthed graces will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth may'st know
Time's thievish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory cannot contain,
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nurs'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquittance of thy mind.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXVIII.
So oft have I involv'd thee for my muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
   But thou art all my art, and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXIX.
Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all the gentle grace;
But now my gracie numbers are decay'd,
And my sick muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a wortlier pen;
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
He robs thee of, and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
From thy behavell; beauty doth he give,
And found it in thy cheek; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then, thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee, thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.
O! how I feint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-tied: speaking of your fame:
But since your worth (wide as the ocean is)
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My quaint bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreak'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building, and of goodly pride:
Then, if he thrive, and I be cast away,
The worst was this—my love was my decay.

LXXXI.
Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten:
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part may be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read;
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse,
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You shall still live (such virtue hath my pen,) Where breath most breathe, even in the mouths of men.

LXXXII.
I grant thou wert not married to my muse,
And, therefore, mayest without attain't o'er-look
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise;
And, therefore, ask'st envoi'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And so, love; yet when they have devise'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou, truly fair, wert truly sympathis'd
In true plain words, by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better used
Where cheeks need blood: in thee it is abused.

LXXXIII.
I never saw that you did painting need,
And, therefore, to your fair no painting set;
I found, or thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt:
And, therefore, have I slept in your report,
That you yourself: being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I impair not beauty being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes,
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXIV.
Who is it that says most? which can say more,
Than this rich praise, that you alone are you?
In whose esteem immured is thy lore,
Which should example where your equal grew.
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell,
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not insaking worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired every where.
You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.
My tongue-tied muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly compil'd,
Reserve their character with golden quill,
And precious phrase by all the muses fill'd.
I think good thoughts, whilst other write good words,
And, like unletter'd clerk, still cry "Amen!"
To every hymn that able spirit affords,
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you praise'd, I say, "'tis so; 'tis true,"
And to the most of praise add something more;
But that is in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before:
Then, others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.
Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all too precious you,
That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inshore,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
No, neither he, nor his compeere by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished:
He, nor that affable familiar ghost,
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence,
As victors of my silence cannot boast.
I was not sick of any fear from thence;
But when your countenance fill'd up his line,
Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled me.
SONNETS.

LXXXVII.

Farewell: thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but waking, no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight,
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn:
With mine own weakness being best acquaint'd,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted,
That thou, in losing me, shalt win much glory:
And I by this will be a gainer too;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double vantage me.
Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst forsee me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence:
Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt,
Against thy reasons making no defence.
Thou canst not, love, disgrace me half so ill,
To set a form upon desired change,
As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strangle, and look strange;
Be absent from thy walks; and in my tongue
Thy sweet beloved name no more shall dwell,
Lest I (too much profane) should do it wrong,
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
For thee, against myself I'll vow debate,
For I must ever love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then, hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now:
Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after loss.
Ah! do not, when my heart hath scap'd this sorrow,
Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe;
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purpose overthwart.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come: so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might;
And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
Compar'd with loss of thee, will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their body's force;
Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill;
Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse
And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
Wherein it finds a joy above the rest;
But these particulars are not my measure:
All these I better in one general best.
Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,
Of more delight than hawks or horses be;
And having thee, of all men's pride I boast:
Wretched in this alone, that thou may'st take
All this away, and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
For term of life thou art assured mine:
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine:
Then, need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
When in the least of them my life hath end?
I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend.
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revoir doth lie.
O! what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die:
But what's so blessed fair that fears no blot?
Thou may'st be false, and yet I know it not.

XCIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:
For there can live no hatred in thine eye;
Therefore, in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ in moods, and frowns, and wrinkles strange;
But heaven in thy creation did decree,
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
Whate'er thou thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

XCIV.

They that have power to hurt, and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone.
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow;
They rightly do inherit heaven's grace,
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die;
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outwears his dignity.
For sweetest things turn sournest by their deeds:
Lilies that foster smell far worse than weeds.

XCV.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame,
Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name?
O, in what sweets dost thou thy sins enclose!
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
(Making lascivious comments on thy sport)
Cannot disgrace but in a kind of praise,
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O! what a mansion have those vices got,
Which for their habitations choose out thee,
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things turn to fair that eyes can see!
Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege;
The hardest knife ill us'd doth lose his edge.

XCVI.
Some say, thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say, thy grace is youth, and gentle sport;
Both grace and faults are lov'd of more and less:
Thou mak'st faults graces that to thee resort.
As on the finger of a throneed queen
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd,
So are those errors that in thee are seen
To truths translated, and for true things deemed.
How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
How many gazers mightest thou lead away,
If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state!
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XCVII.
How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
Whatornings have I felt, what dark days seen,
What old December's bareness every where!
And yet this time remov'd was summer's time;
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
For summer's beauty, and his pleasure, no one,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreading winter's near.

XCVIII.
From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
 Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing,
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him:
Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue,
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew:
Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you; you pattern of all those.
Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play.

XCIX.
The forward violet thus did I chide:—
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that
If not from my love's breath? the purple pride [smells],
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells,
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dyed.
The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And buds of marigold had stol'n thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing name, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stolen of both,
And to this robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
But sweet or colour it had stol'n from thee.

C.
Where art thou, Muse! that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent:
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem,
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, resty Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised every where.
Give my love fame faster than Time wastes life;
So thou prevent'st his ecstye, and crooked knife.

CI.
O truant Muse! what shall be thy amends,
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dyed?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So do I too, and therein doth appear.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not happily say,
"Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best's best, if never intermix'd."
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for 't lies in thee
To make him much out-live a gilded tomb,
And to be praise'd of ages yet to be.
Then, do thy office, Muse: I teach thee how
To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

CII.
My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seeming
I love not less, though lesse the show appear:
That love is merchandiz'd, whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish every where.
Our love was new, and then but in the spring,
When I was wont to greet it with my lays;
As Phoebe in summer's form doth sing,
And stops his pipe in growth of ripier days,
Not that the summer is less pleasant now;
Than when her mournfull hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music burdens every bough,
And sweet grown common lose their dear delight.
Therefore, like her, I sometime hold my tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.
Alack! what poverty my muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument, all bare, is of more worth.
Than when it hath my added praise beside
O! blame me not, if I no more can write:
Lock in your glass, and there appears a face,
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Were not sinful, then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend,
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell,
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit.
Your own glass shows you, when you look in it.
CIV.
To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were, when first your eye I ey'd,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd,
In process of the seasons have I seen;
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived:
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceived:
For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbridg'd—
Ere you were born was beauty's summer dead.

CV.
Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be,
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore, my verse to constancy confin'd,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
Fair, kind, and true, is in my argument,
Fair, kind, and true, varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
Fair, kind, and true, have often liv'd alone,
Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

CVI.
When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme,
In praise of ladies dead, and lovely knights;
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of-our this time, all you prefurging;
And for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.
Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world, dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a confin'd doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endur'd,
And the sad suns mock their own presage;
Uncertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now, with the drops of this most balmy time
My love, like to the sunnew and dewy,
Shall thine, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
And thou in that shall find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests, and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.
What's in the brain that ink may character,
Which hath not figur'd to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what now to register,
That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same,
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love, in love's fresh case,
Weighs not the dust and injury of age;
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for e'ry his page.
Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CIX.
O! never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart,
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie,
That is my home of love: if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels, I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchang'd;
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frigities that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my Rose; in it thou art my all.

CX.
Alas! 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
And made myself a motley to the view:
Gone! gone all thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear.
Made old offences of affections new:
Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These blemishes gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Now all is done, save what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confin'd.
Then, give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure, and most most loving breast.

CXI.
O! for my sake do you with fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means, which public manners breeds:
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand;
And almost thence my nature is subdu'd
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.
Pity me, then, and wish I were renew'd,
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eysol against my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me, then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.
Your love and pity doth th' impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill.
So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow?
You are my all-the-world, and I must strive
To know my shame and praises from your tongue;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
To blench is to start from. * have: in old eds. Tywhit's made the change. * Vinegar.
SONNETS.

That my steel'd sense or changes, right or wrong.
In so profound abyss I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic, and to flatterer stopped are.
Merk how with my neglect I do dispense:—
You are so strongly in my purpose bred,
That all the world besides methinks they are dead.¹

CXXIII.
Since I left you mine eye is in my mind,
And that which governs me to go about
Doth part his function, and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out;
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch.²
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rudest or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour, or deformed at creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature:
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus maketh mine untrue.⁵

CXXIV.
Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery?
Or whether shall I say, my eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this sçychmy,
To make of monsters and things indigest,
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O! 'tis the first: 'tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is grieving,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup:
If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it, and doth first begin.

CXXV.
Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
Yet then my judgment knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn colder.
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'st intents,
Divert strong minds 't the course of altering things;
Alas! why, fearing of time's tyranny,
Might I not then say, "now I love you best,
When I was certain o'er uncertainty,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?"
Love is a babe; then, might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow?

CXXVI.
Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments: love is not love,
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O no! it is an ever-fixed mark
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;

Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error, and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

CXXVII.
Accuse me thus: that I have scantied all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay;
Forgotten upon your dearest love to call,
Wheroeto all bonds do tie me day by day;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
And given to time your own dear-purchase'd right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight
Book both my wildliness and errors down,
And on just proof surmise accumulate;
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate,
Since my appeal says, I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXXVIII.
Like as to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge;
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness when we purge;
Even so, being full of your ne'er-cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding;
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meetness
To be diseas'd, ere that there was true needing.
Thus policy in love, 't anticipates
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured,
And brought to medicine a healthful state,
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cur'd;
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

CXXIX.
What potions have I drunk of syren tears,
Distill'd from limbecks foul as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to fears,
Still loving when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted
In the distraction of this madding fever!
O benefit of ill! now I find true,
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return rebuk'd to my content,
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXXX.
That you were once unkind befriended me now,
And for that sorrow, which I then did feel,
Needs must I under my transgression bow,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
For if you were by my unkindness shaken,
As I by yours, you have pass'd a hell of time;
And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime.
O! that our night of woe might have remember'd
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits;
And soon to you, as you to me, then tender'd
The humble salve which wound'd bosoms fits!
But that your trespass now becomes a foe;
Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom me.

¹ methinks ² are dead: in old eup. Dyce omits "they." ³ lack: in old eds. Malons made the change. ⁴ Used up a substantive ⁵ Pr. sight, sense.
CXI.
'Tis better to be vile, than vile esteemed,
When not to be receives reproach of being;
And the just pleasure lost, which is so deemed,
Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing:
For why should others' false adulterate eyes
Give salutation to my sporting blood?
Or on my frailties why are frailter spied,
Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
No I am that I am; and they that level
At my abuses, reckon up their own:
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel.
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
Unless this general evil they maintain,
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXII.
Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory,
Which shall above that idle rank remain,
Beyond all date, even to eternity;
Or, at the least, so long as brain and heart
Have faculty by nature to subsist;
Till each to ran'd oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd.
That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tallies thy dear love to score;
Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more:
To keep an adjunct to remember thee,
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXIII.
No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change:
Thy pyramids, built up with newer might,
To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight.
Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old,
And rather make them born to our desire,
Than think that we before have heard them told.
Thy registers and those I both defy,
Not wondering at the present, nor the past;
For thy records and what we see do lie,
Made more or less by thy continual haste.
This I do vow, and this shall ever be.
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee;

CXIV.
If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for fortune's bastard be unfathered,
As subject to time's love, or to time's hate,
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gathered.
No, it was builded far from accident;
It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of threatened discontent,
Whereto th' inviting time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which works on leases of short number'd hours,
But all alone stands hugely polite,
That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.
To this I witness call the fools of time,
Which die for goodness, who have liv'd for crime.

CXV.
Were 't sought to me I bore the canopy,
With my extern the outward honouring,
Or laid great bases for eternity,
Which prove more short than waste or ruin?
Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
Lost all, and more, by paying too much rent;
For compound sweet foregoing simple savour,
Pitiful thrifters, in their gazing spent?
No; let me be obsequious in the heart,
And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
Which is not mix'd with seconds, knows no art,
But mutual render, only me for thee.
Hence thou suborn'd informer! a true soul,
When most impeach'd, stands least in thy control

CXVI.
O thou, my lovely boy! who in thy power
Dost hold Time's tickle glass, his sickle, hour;
Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
Thy lovers withering, as thy sweet self grow'st.
If nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
As thou goest onwards still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May time disgrace, and wretched minutes kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure!
She may detain, but not still keep her treasure:
Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

CXVII.
In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame;
For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
Fairing the foul with art's false borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name but holy bow'r,
But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore, my mistress' eyes are raven black,
Her eyes so suited; and they mourners seem
At such, who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Slandering creation with a false esteem:
Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
That every tongue says, beauty should look so.

CXVIII.
How oft, when thou, my music, music playest,
Upon that blessed wood, whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently swayest
The wry concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jack's,† that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap
At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand.
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more bless'd than living lips.
Since saucy jack's so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

CXIX.
Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjur'd, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
Enjoy'd no sooner but despis'd straight;
Past reason hunted, and no sooner had,
Past reason hated, as a swallow'd bait,
On purpose laid to make the taller mad:
Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme:
A bliss in proof,—and prov'd, a very woe;
Before, a joy prop'd: behind, a dream.
All this the world well knows, yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

CXXX.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red:
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress rooks.
I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound:
I grant I never saw a goddess go;
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground.
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she belied with false compare.

CXXXI.

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou know'st, to my dear doting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold,
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan:
To say they err I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear,
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place.
In nothing art thou black, save in thy deeds,
And then no slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXXII.

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart torment's me with disdain,
Have put on black, and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And, truly, not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that ushers in the even
Doth half that glory to the sober west.
As they look mourning and moan become thy face.
O! let it, then, as well beesse thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part;
Then will I swear, beauty herself is black,
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.

Besheath that heart, that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweetest friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engrossed:
Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken;
A torment thriice threefold thus to be crossed.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But, then, my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Who'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my jail:

And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me

CXXXIV.

So, now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgag'd to thy will;
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous, and he is kind;
He learn'd but, surety-like, to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute's of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou user, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend, came debitor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me.
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will,
And Will to boot, and Will in over-plus;
More than enough am I, that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Will thou, whose will is large as spacious,
Not once vouchesafe to hide my will in thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receivest rain still,
And in abundance addest to his store:
So thou, being rich in Will, add to thy Will
One will of mine, to make thy large Will more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

CXXXVI.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love-suit, sweet, fullfit.
Will will fulfill the treasure of thy love,
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one.
In things of great receipt with ease we prove,
Among a number one is reckon'd none;
Then, in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy stores' account I one must be;
For not unknowing hold me, so is placed the hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee:
Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lov'st me,—for my name is Will.

CXXXVII.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eye,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks,
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged books,
Whereto the judgment of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot,
Which my heart knows the wide world's common place?
Or mine eyes seeing this, say, this is not,
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have err'd,
And to this false plague are they now transferred.

1 and proud and very woe: in old eda. Malone made the change. 2 torment: in old eda. Security. 3 Whoever hath her wish, or not thy Will: As there is in this and the next sonnet, as well as in Sonnet cclii, an obvious place of the word "or" we have printed it exactly as it stands in the quarto, 1609, and as it probably stood in the manuscript from which it was printed 4 piece of ground which has been "common," or uninclosed, but has been separated and made private property.
CXXXVIII.
When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lieth;
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtilties.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue:
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd.
But wherefore says she not, she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I, that I am old?
O! love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love loves not to have years told:
Therefore I lie with her, and she with me;
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.

CXXXIX.
O! call not me to justify the wrong,
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue,
Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lov'st elsewhere; but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside:
[might
What need'st thou wound with cunning, when thy
Is more than my o'er-press'd defence can 'bide?
Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies,
And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries.
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me out-right with looks, and rid my pain.

CXL.
Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain;
Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know:
For, if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee;
Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be.
That I may not be so, nor thou belied,
Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go [wide.

CXL.
In faith I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 't is my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleas'd to dote.
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted;
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste, nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits, nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
Who leave unsway'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin awards me pain.

CXLII.
Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving.
O! but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it moris not reproving;
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments,
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine,
Robb'd others' beds revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows,
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example may'st thou be denied

CXLIII.
Lo! as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe, and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay;
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies from her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent:
So run'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I, thy babe, chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou may'st have thy Will,
If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXLIV.
Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still:
The better angel in a man, right fair,
The worser spirit a woman, colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempest my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my soul to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:
Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLV.
Those lips that Love's own hand did make,
Breath'd forth the sound that say 'I hate.'
To me that languish'd for her sake;
But when she saw my woeful state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue, that ever sweet
Was us'd in giving gentle doom,
And taught it thus anew to greet.
"I hate," she alter'd with an end;
That follow'd it as gentle day
Doth follow night, who, like a fiend,
From heaven to hell is flown away:
"I hate" from hate away she threw,
And sav'd my life, saying—"not you."

CXLVI.
Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
Fool'd by those rebel powers that thee array:
Why dost thou pine with in, and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward wals so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Des't thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dress;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men.
And, death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLVII.
My love is as a fever, longing still
For that which longer nurseth the disease;
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
Th' uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescrip'tions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve,
Desire is death, which physic did except.
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic mad with ever-more unrest:
My thoughts and my discourse as mad men's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.
G me! what eyes hath love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes doe,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's: no,
How can it? O! how can love's eye be true,
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel, then, though I mistake my view;
The sun itself sees not, till heaven clears.
O cunning love! with tears thou keepest me blind,
Least eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.
Canst thou, O Cruel! say, I love thee not,
When I, against myself, with thee partake? 1
Do I not think on thee, when I forgot
Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who hateth thee that I do call my friend?
On whom frown'st thou that I do fawn upon?
Nay, if thou lowest on me, do I not spend
Revenge upon myself with present moan?
What merit do I in myself respect,
That is so proud thy service to despise,
When all my best delight worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind:
Those that can see thou lovest, and I am blind.

CL.
O! from what power hast thou this powerful might,
With insufficiency my heart to sway?
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness which doth grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
That in my mind thy worst all best exceeds?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?

O! though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou shouldst not abhor my state:
If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
More worthy I to be belov'd of thee.

CLI.
Love is too young to know what conscience is;
Yet who knows not, conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Least guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove:
For, thou betraying me, I do betray
My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason,
But rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs. fall by thy side.
No want of conscience hold it, that I call
Her love, for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLII.
In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing;
In act thy bed-vow broke, and new faith torn,
In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
When I break twenty? I am perjur'd most;
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost:
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy;
And to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
For I have sworn thee fair: more perjur'd I,
To swear against the truth so foul a lie!

CLIII.
Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep:
A maid of Dion's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
Which borrow'd from this holy fire of love
A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove
Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress' eye love's brand new-fired,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I sick withal, the bath of desire stood.
And thither hied, a sad distemper'd guest,
But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
Where Cupid got new fire, my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.
The little Love-god lying once asleep,
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whilst many nymphs, that vow'd charity to keep,
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd
And so the general of hot desire
Was, sleeping, by a virgin hand disarray'd.
This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
Which from love's fire took heat perpetual.
Growing a bath, and healthful remedy
For men diseas'd; but I, my mistress' thrall,
Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT

From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
A plentiful story from a sistering vale,
My spirit's t' attend this double voice accorded,
And down I laid to list the sad-tuned tale;
Ere long espys'd a sickle maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
Which fortified her visage from the sun;
Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
The carcase of a beauty spent and done:
Time had not snatched all that youth begun,
Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fell rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattice of ear'd age.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyene,
Which on it had concocted characters,
Laundering the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
And often reading what contents it bore;
As often shrinking undistinguish'd woe
In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her level'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;
Sometimes, diverted, their poor balls are tied
To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
To every place at once, and no where fix'd,
The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose, nor tied in formal plait,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
For some, untuck'd, descended her shear'd hat,
Hanging her pale and pin'd cheek beside;
Some in her threaden fillet still did bide,
And, true to bondage, would not break from thence,
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a mound's she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet,
Which one by one she in a river threw,
Upon whose weeping margent she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet,
Of monarch's hands, that let not bounty fail
Where want cries "some," but where excess begs all.

Of folded silks did hang in crooked curls,
All, and every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips: their silken parcels hurl:
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find;
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind,
For on his visage was in little drawn,
What largeness thinks in paradise was sawn.

Small show of man was yet upon his chin:
His phoenix down began but to appear,
Like unshorn velvet, on that termless skin.
Whose bare out-brag'd the web it seem'd to wear;
Yet show'd his visage by that coat most dear,
And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
If best were as it was, or best without.

A LOVER’S COMPLAINT.

His qualities were beauteous as his form,
For maiden-tongue’d he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men mov’d him, was he such a storm
As oft ’twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they be.
His rudeness so, with his authority youth,
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.

Well could he ride, and often men would say,
"That horse his mettle from his rider takes;
Proud of subjection, noble by the sway, [makes ?]
What round, what bounds, what course, what stop he
And controversy hence a question takes,
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

But quickly on this side the verdict went,
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament,
Accomplish’d in himself, not in his case:
All aida, themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions, yet their purpos’d trim
Piece’d not his grace, but were all grace’d by him.

So on the tip of his subduing tongue,
All kind of arguments and question deep,
Adreplication prompt, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep:
To make the weeper laugh, the laughter weep,
He had the dialect and different skill,
Catching all passions in his craft of will:

That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old; and sexes both enchant’d,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunt’d:
Consents, bewitch’d, ere he desire have granted;
And dialogued for him what he would say,
Ask’d their own wills, and made their wills obey.

Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like fools that in th’ imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, theirs in thought assign’d;
And labouring in more pleasures to bestow them,
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them.

So many have, that never touch’d his hand,
Sweetly suppos’d them mistress of his heart.
My woeful self; that did in freedom stand,
And was my own foe-simple, (not in part)
What with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Resor’d the stalk, and gave him all my flower.

Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor, being desir’d, yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid,
With safest distance I mine honour shielded.
Experience for me many bulwarks builded
Of proofs new-bleeing, which remain’d the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.

But ah! who ever shunn’d by precedent
The destin’d ill she must herself assay?
Or forc’d examples, ‘gainst her own content,
To put the by-pass’d perils in her way?
Counsel may stop a while what will not stay;

For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others’ proof,
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behalf.
O appetite, from judgment stand aloof!
The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
Though reason weep, and cry, “it is thy last.”

For farther I could say, “this man’s untrue,”
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling;
Heard where his plants in others’ orchards grew,
Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
Thought characters, and words, merely but art,
And bastards of his foul adulterate heart.

And long upon these terms I held my city,
Till thus he gan beseech me: “Gentle maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That’s to you sworn, to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call’d unto,
Till now did ne’er invite, nor never vow
All my offences that abroad you see,
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind:
Love made them not: with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind:
They sought their shame that so their shame did find
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproach contains.

Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warmed.
Or my affection put to the smallest teen.¹
Or any of my pleasures ever charg’d:
Harm have I done to them, but ne’er was harmed;
Keep hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
And reign’d, commanding in his monarchy.

Look here, what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of pale dust, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encirrumin’d mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp’d in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

And lo! behold these talents of their hair,
With twist’d metal amorously impleach’d.²
I have receiv’d from many a several fair.
(Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech’d)
With the annexions of fair gems enrich’d,
And deep-brain’d sonnets, that did amplify
Each stone’s dear nature, worth, and quality.

The diamond; why, ’t was beautiful and hard,
Where to his invis’d³ properties did tend,
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire, and the opal bleud
With objects manifold: each several stone,
With wit well blazon’d, smit’d, or made some mean
Lo! all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensiv’d and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I heard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render;
That is, to you, my origin and ender:
For these, of force, must your obligations be,
Since I their altar, you enrap't me.

O! then, advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
What me, your minister, for you obey,
Works under you: and to your audit comes
Their distrait parcels in combined sums.

Lo! this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms' date:
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thense remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

But O, my sweet! what labour's t' leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives?
Paling the place which did no form receive;
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gves?
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

O, pardon me, in that my boast is true!
The accident which brought me to her eye,
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly;
Religious love put out religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immur'd,
And now, to tempt all, liberty procure'd.

How mighty then you are, O hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong,
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

My parts had power to charm a sacred sun,
Who, disciplin'd, I dieted in grace,
Believ'd her eyes, when they t' assail began,
All vows and consecrations giving place,
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

When thou impress'd, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame?
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense, 'gainst shame;
And sweet'snes, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The aches of all forces, shocks, and fears.

Now, all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine;
And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath,
That shall prefer and undertake my troth. T

This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were level'd on my face;
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow'd its space.
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who, glaz'd with crystal, gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue incloses

O father! what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear;
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O'cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath.
Both fire from hence and chill extinctor hath!

For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I daff'd;
Shook off my sober guards, and civil fears:
Appeared to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white, and swoon at tragic shows:

That not a heart which in his level came,
Could escape the hail of his all-hurting aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame,
And veil'd in them, did win whom he would main,
Against the thing he sought he would exclaim,
When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.

Thus, merely with the garment of a grace
The naked and concealed freel he cover'd;
That th' unexperienced gave the temper'd places,
Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd?
Ah me! I fell; yet do question make,
What I should do again for such a sable.

O, that infected moisture of his eye!
O, that false fire, which in his cheek so glowed!
O, that fore'd thunder from his heart did fly!
O, that sad breath his spungy lungs bestow'd!
O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming owed,
Would yet again betray the form betray'd,
And now pervert a reconcile maid!

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

INTRODUCTION.

[The Passionate Pilgrim by W. Shakespeare. At London Printed for W. Jaggard, and are to be sold by W. Leake, at F. Howe's in Paul's Churchyard. 1598. 18mo. 80 leaves.]

The title-page first given to the edition of 1612 ran thus: "The Passionate Pilgrim. Or Certain Amorous Sonnets, between Venus and Adonis, newly corrected and augmented. By W. Shakespeare. The Third Edition. Whereunto is newly added two Louse-Epistles, the first from Paris to Helen, and Helen's answer back again to Paris. Printed by W. Jaggard. 1612." The title-page substitute for the above differs in no other respect but in the omission of "By W. Shakespeare."]

In the following pages, we have reprinted "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1599, as it came from the press of W. Jaggard, with the exception only of the orthography. Malone omitted several portionis of it; some because they were substantially repetitions of poems contained elsewhere, and others because they appeared to have been improperly assigned to Shakespeare: one piece, the last in the tract, is not inserted at all in Bowell's edition, although Malone reprinted it in 1780, and so reasoned as to assign it to Shakespeare. It is, however, in its present form, with the exception of the orthography, substantially the same, and in our notes we have stated the particular circumstances belonging to each piece, as there is reason to believe that did not come from the pen of our great dramatist. "The Passionate Pilgrim" was Jaggard's last offering in 1612, with additions, and the facts attending the publication of the two impressions are peculiar.

In 1599, Shakespeare published his name to a small collection of productions in verse, entitled "The Ecstasy of Lady Percy;" which contained more than one poem attributed to Shakespeare in "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1599: the first was printed by John Hony, and the last, by William Jaggard. Bowell suggests that John Jaggard in 1599 might have stolen Shakespeare's verses and attributed them to Barnfield; but the only printed title-page is the first, that Barnfield formally, and in his own name, printed them as his in 1599; and next, that he reprinted them under the same circumstances in 1608, notwithstanding they had been in the possession of Ovid, and Shakespeare's name appears. The truth seems to be that W. Jaggard took them in 1599 from Barnfield's publication, printed by John Jaggard in 1598. In 1612 W. Jaggard went even more boldly to work; for in the impression of "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1612, he not only reprinted Barnfield's poems of 1598, but included two of Ovid's Epistles, which had been translated by Thomas Heywood, and printed by him with his name in his "Treasure Bradfords." See his "Strange Histories," 1640, p. 28 of the reprint by the Percy Society.

One object with W. Jaggard in 1612, when he republished the "Passionate Pilgrim," was to swell the bulk of it; and so much had he felt this want in 1599, that, excepting the three last leaves, all the rest of the volume is printed on one side of the paper only, a peculiarity we do not recollect to belong to any other work of the time: by the insertion of Heywood's translations from Ovid, this course was rendered unnecessary in 1613, and although the volume is still of small bulk, it was not so insignificant in its appearance as it had been in 1599. Only a single copy of the edition is known, although it is very probable that it had been republished in the interval between 1600 and 1612.

Nicholas Breton seems to have written his "Passionate Shepherd," and in imitation of this title he calls the passion of the poems the "Passionate Pilgrim." The only known copy of this title-page is in private hands. It is very probable that a second edition of "The Passionate Shepherd" was issued in 1612, and that this second e. Breton was led to imitate the title, and the form of verse of some of the pieces in it. As "The Passionate Shepherd" is a great curiosity, not being even mentioned by bibliographers, and as it is related connected with the same and works of Shakespeare, an exact copy of it as this may prove to be, is reprinted in 1614, of the size of an inch and a half high by an inch

962
The edition of 1699, we believe, has been preserved, and that is among Capell's books in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge. No other copy of "The Passionate Pilgrim" of 1618 has the two title-pages, with and without the name of Shakespeare, but that formerly belonging to Malone, and now bequeathed by him, with so many other valuable rarities, to the Bodleian Library.

"The Passionate Pilgrim," 1699, concludes with a piece of moral satire, "Whiles we bide fortune smile," &c., and we have followed it by a poem found only in a publication by broach. It contains some curious variations from the text of the first edition in 1699, &c.

It is called "Love's Martyr, or Rosaline's Complaint" Of the author or editor nothing is known, but he is not to be confounded with Charles Chester, called Carlo Buffone in Ben Jonson's "Every Man out of his Humane," and respecting whom see Nash's "Pierce Robert Chester, dated 1601." Malone preceded "The Phoenix and the Turtle," by the song "Take, O take those lips away!" this we have not thought it necessary to repeat, because we have given the whole of it, exactly in the same words, in "Measure for Measure," Act IV, Sc.1. The first verse only is found in Shakespeare, and the second, which is much inferior, in Beaumont and Fletcher's "Bloody Brother." It may be doubted, therefore, whether Shakespeare wrote it, or, like Beaumont and Fletcher, only introduced part of it into his play as a popular song of the time.

I.

WHEN my love swears that she is made of truth
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untutor'd youth
Unskilful in the world's false forgeries,
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although I know my years be past the best,
I smiling credit her false speaking tongue,
Out-beguile every hope in love with love's ill rest.
But wherefore say my love that I am young?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O! love's best habit is a soothing tongue,
And age, in love, loves not to have years told.
Therefore I'll lie with love, and love with me,
Since that our faults in love thus smoother'd be.

---

II.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still:
The better angel is a man, right fair,
The worser spirit a woman, colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempest my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt a saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her false pride:
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, but not directly tell;
For being both to me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell.
The truth I shall not know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

---

III.

Ind not the heavenly rhetorick of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world could not hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjur'y?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forewore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forewore not thee:
My vow was earthy, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being give all gracious grace in me,
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is:
Then thou fair sun, that on this earth dost shine,
Exhale this vapour now; in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fool is so wise
To break an oath, to win a paradise?

IV.

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook,
With young Adonia, lovely, fresh and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there
Touches as soft still to his heart could pierce.
But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refused to take her figure'd prey,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then, fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward:
He rose and ran away; ah, fool too forward!

---

V.

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O! never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove,
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bow'd.
Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eye,
Where all those pleasures live, that art can comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;
All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder,
Which is to me some praise, that thy parts admire;
Thine eye love's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder
Which (not to anger bent) is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O! do not love that wrong,
To sing the heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.

VI.

Searce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing trencher for Adonia made;
Under an eater growing by a brook,
A brook, where Adonia's cool his spleen:
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim;
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly as this queen on him:

* This sonnet is substantially the same as Sonnet cxxxvii. in the quarto published by Tho. in 1609. * This sonnet is also included in the collection of 1609. (Sonnet cxxxvii.) but with some verbal variations. * This sonnet is found in "Love's Labour's Lost," but with some slight variations, published in 1608. We may suspect, notwithstanding the concurrence of the two ancient editions in our text, that the true reading was sugared, the long a having been, as in other places, mistaken for the letter f. * This poem, with variations, is read by Sis. Nathaniel, in "Love's Labour's Lost"
He, spying her, bounc’d in, whereas he stood:
O love! quoth she, why was not I a flood?

VII.
Fair is my love, but not so fair as sickle,
Mild as a dove, but neither more nor less rusty:
Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is, brittle,
Softer than wax, and yet as iron rusty:
A lily pale, with damask dye to grace her,
None fairer, nor none fairer to deface her.

Her lips to mine how often hath she joined,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing!
How many tales to please me hath she coined,
Dreading my love, the loss whereof still fearing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.

She burn’d with love, as straw with fire flameth;
She burn’d out love, as soon as straw out burneth:
She fram’d the love, and yet she foil’d the framing;
She bade love last, and yet she fell a turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VIII.
If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then, must the love be great twixt thee and me.
Because thou lovest the one, and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense:
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such,
As passing all conceit needs no defence.
Thou lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phoebus’ lute (the queen of music) makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown’d
Whenas himself to singing he betakes.
One god is god of both, as poets feign,
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

IX
Fair was the morn, when the fair queen of love, 3
Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adonis sake, a younger proud and wild;
Her stand she takes upon a steep hill:
Anon Adonis comes with horn and horns;
She slyly quenches, with more than love’s good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds.
Once, (quoth she) did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar,
Deep in the thighb, a spectacle of ruth!
See, in my thigh, (quoth she,) here was the sore.
She showed hers; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

X.
Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck’d, soon faded,
Pluck’d in the bud, and faded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alack! too timely-shaded,
Fair creature, kill’d too soon by death’s sharp sting!
Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, (through wind) before the fall should be.

I weep for thee, and yet no cause have I;
For why? thou left’st me nothing in thy will,
And yet thou left’st me more than I did crave;
For why? I craved nothing of thee still:
O yes, (dear friend,) I pour’d care of thee.
Thy discontent thou didst beseech me.

XI.
Venus with Adonis sitting by her,
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him:
She told the youngling how god Man did try her,
And as he look’d to her, she fell to hym: 4
Even thus, (quoth she) the warlike god embrac’d me;
And then she clipp’d Adonis in her arms;
Even thus, (quoth she) the warlike god unlace’d me,
As if the boy should use like loving charms:
Even thus, (quoth she) he seized on my lips,
And with her lips on his did act the seizure;
And as she fetched breath, away he skips,
And would not take her meaning, nor her pleasure.
Ah! that I had my lady at this bay!
To kiss and clasp me till I ran away!

XII.
C rabbed age and youth
Cannot live together;
Youth is full of pleasures,
Age is full of care:
Youth like summer moon,
Age like winter weather;
Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport,
Age’s breath is short;
Youth is nimble, age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee,
Youth, I do adore thee;
O, my love, my love is young!
Age, I do defy thee;
O, sweet shepherd! lie thee,
For methinks thou stay’st too long.

XIII.
Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good,
A shining gloss that fadeth suddenly;
A flower that dies, when first it gins to bud;
A brittle glass, that’s broken presently;
A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
Lost, faded, broken, dead within an hour.
And as goods lost are sold or never found,
As faded gloss no rubbing will refresh;
As flowers dead lie wither’d on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress;
So beauty blemish’d once, for ever lost,
In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.

XIV.
Good night, good rest. Ah! neither be my share.
She bade good night, that kept my rest away;
And daff’d me to a thin hand with care,
To descant on the doubts of my decay.
Farewell, quoth she, and come again to morrow;
Fare well I could not, for I supp’d with sorrow.

1 This poem was published in 1609, in Richard Barnfield’s "Encomium of Lady Peninnis." There is little doubt that it is his property, notwithstanding it appeared in the "Passionate Pilgrim," 1609, and was reprinted as Barnfield’s in the new edition of his "Encomium," 1615. The next line is lost. 2 This sonnet, with considerable variations, is the third in a collection of seventy-two sonnets, published in 1596, under the title of "Figures of the Chase," with the name of B. Griffin, as the author. A syllable defect in the first line is there remedied by the insertion of "young" before "Adonis." A manuscript of the time, now before us, is without the epistle, and has the initials W. S. at the end. 3 The line so stands in both editions of "The Passionate Pilgrim," and in the contemporaneous manuscript; but in Griffin’s "Figures," it is: And as he fell to her, as fell she to him.
THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether:
'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
'T may be, again to make me wander thither;
"Wander," a word for shadows like thyself,
As take the pain, but cannot pluck the self.

XV.
Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
My heart doth charge the watch, the morning rise
Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest.
Not daring trust the office of mine eyes,
While Philomels sits and sings, I sit and mark,
And wish her lays were tun'd like the lark;
For she doth welcome day-light with her ditty,
And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night:
The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;
Sorrow chang'd to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow;
For why? she sigh'd, and bade me come to-morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon;
But now are minutes added to the hours;
To spitc me now, each minute seems a moon;
Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
Pack night, peep day, good day, of night now borrow:
Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

XVI. 6
It was a lording's daughter,
The fairest one of three,
That liked of her master
As well as well might be,
Till looking on an Englishman,
The fairest that eye could see,
Her fancy fell a turning.

Long was the combat doubtful,
That love with love did fight,
To leave the master loveless,
Or kill the gallant knight;
To put in practice either,
Alas! it was a spite
Unto the silly damsel.

But one must be refused,
More mickle was the pain,
That nothing could be used,
To turn them both to gain;
For of the two the trusty knight
Was wounded with disdain:
Alas! she could not help it.

Thus art with arms contending
Was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning
Did bear the maid away;
Then lullaby, the learned man
Hath got the lady gay;
For now my song is ended.

XVII.
On a day (slack the day!)
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover (sick to death)
Would bid the love heaven and breath,
Air (quoth he) thy cheeks may blow;
Would, I would not, might triumph so!
But, alas! my hand hath sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, slack! for youth unmeet:
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiop were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

XVIII.*
My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,
All is amiss:
Love is dying, 6
Faith's defying,
Heart's denying,
Causer of this,
All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost (God wot):
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is plac'd without remove.
One silly cross
Wrought all my loss:
O frowning Fortune, cursed, fickle dame 6
For now I see
Inconstancy
More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
All fears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,
Living in thrall:
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing,
O cruel speeding,
Fraughted with gall!
My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal,
My wether's bell rings doleful knoll;
My curtail dog that won't to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
My sights so deep,
Procure to weep,
In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight
How sighs resound
Through heartless ground,
Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!

* an hour: in old ads. Stevens made the change; means having the sense of mouth.  6 This is the first piece in the division of "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1600, called "Sonnet to dandy Notes of Music." As the signatures of the pages run on in the order in which they were printed.  6 This poem, in a more complete state, and with the addition of two lines only found there, may be seen in "Love's Labor's Lost." The poem is also printed in "England's Helicon," "Sings, E." a miscellany of poetry, first published in 1600, reprinted in 1620, where W. Shakespeare is appended to it.  6 In "England's Helicon," 1600, this poem immediately follows "On a day (slack the day!?)" but it is there entitled "The unknown Shepherd's Complaint," and it is subscribed "ignote." Hence, we may suppose that the compiler of that collection knew that it was not by Shakespeare, although it had been attributed to him in "The Passionate Pilgrim," of the year preceding. It had appeared anonymously, with the music, in 1507, in a collection of Madrigals, by Thomas Weelkes.  6 Love's desiring: in "England's Helicon."  6 Heart's reaving: in "England's Helicon."  6 Part. Both editions of "The Passionate Pilgrim," have With for My, which last not only is unnecessary for the sense, but is confirmed as the true reading by Weelkes' Madrigals, 1607.
Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not
Forth their dye;
Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
Fearfully.

All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled;
All our skill and art, for love is dead.

Farewell, sweet lady!
Thy like ne'er was
For a sweet content, the cause of all my moan.
Poor Coridon
Must live alone,
Other help for him I see that there is none.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And staid all the deer that thou shouldst strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as partial fancy like:

Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young, nor yet unused.

And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Lost she some subtle practice smell;
A cripple soon can find a halt:
But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
And set thy person forth to sell.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will clear ere night;
And then too late she will repent
That thus dissembled her delight;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her fierce forces will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say,—

Had women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then.

And to her will frame all thy ways:
Spare not to spend, and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing in thy lady's ear:
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve, always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble, true;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Seek never thou to choose a new.

When time shall serve, be thou not a slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

The wilde and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's May doth stand for nought?

Think, women still to strive with men
To sin, and never for to saint:
There is no heaven; be holy then,
When time with age shall them attain.
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But soft! enough,—too much, I fear;
Lost that my mistress hear my song,
She will not stick to warm my ear;
To teach my tongue to be so long:
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

Live with me and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove,
That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
And the craggy mountain yields.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cup of flowers, and a kittle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral claps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then, live with me and be my love.

Love's answer.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee and be thy love.

Note:

1 So both editions of "The Passionate Pilgrim," and "England's Helicon." Malone preferred the passage as it stands in Weelkes' Madrigals:

2 Lord balle ring not

3 "The Passionate Pilgrim," and "England's Helicon," both have love for love, which is the rhyme shown to be the true reading, as it stands in Weelkes' Madrigals, 1597.

4 So "England's Helicon" and Weelkes' Madrigals: "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1599, has no other.

5 In some modern editions, the stanzas of this poem have been given in an order different to the order in which they stand in "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1599, to that order we restore them, and that text we follow, excepting where it is evidently corrupt. The line, "As well as fancy partial," has been excised from the manuscript of the time. The edition of 1609 reads: "As well as fancy partial might," which is decidedly wrong.

6 Neither the true, nor the false.

7 But no change from the old printed copy is here necessary. In the manuscript the whole has Shakespeare's initials at the end.

8 To the manuscript in our possession: "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1609, has it, "She will not stick to row me on the ear." The poet, here incomplete, and what is called "Love's Answer," still more imperfectly may be seen at length in "Percy's Reliques," Vol I. They belong to Christopher Marlowe and Sir Walter Raleigh: the first is assigned by name to Marlowe, in "England's Helicon," 1609, (sig. A 3) and the last appears in the same collection, under the name of Ignacio, which was a signature sometimes adopted by Sir Walter Raleigh. They are, besides, assigned to both these authors in Wotton's "Anglus," (p. 149, ed. 1685) under the titles of "The milkmaid's song," and "The milkmaid's mother's answer."
As it fell upon a day
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade,
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap and birds did sing,
Trees did grow and plants did spring;
Every thing did banish noon,
Save the nightingale alone:
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Leant her breast up-till a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty
That to hear it was great pity.
Pie, fie, fie! now would she cry;
Tereu, Tereu! by and by;
That to hear her so complain
Scarse I could from tears refrain,
For her griefs, so lively shown,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah! thought I, thou mourn'st in vain,
None takes pity on thy pain:
Seneceous trees they cannot hear thee,
Ruthless bears they will not cheer thee.
King Pandion he is dead,
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead,
All thy fellow birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.

whilst as fickle fortune smil'd,
Thou and I were both bogu'il'd:
Every one that flatters thee
Is no friend in misery.
Words are easy, like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find:
Every man will be thy friend,
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be gaunt,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call,
And with such like flattering,
Pity but he were a king.
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice:
If to women he be bent,
They have him at commandement;
But if fortune once do frown,
Then, farewell his great renown:
They that fawn'd on him before
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed
He will help thee in thy need:
If thou sorrow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep:
Thus of every grief in heart,
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

This poem is contained in R. Barnfield's "Recominon of Lady Pernia," 1595. It is also inserted in "England's Helicon," 1600, 2d ed. under the signature of Ignote; but as Barnfield reprinted it as his, in 1595, there can be little doubt that he was the author of it.

2 This is the last poem in "The Passionate Pilgrim," 1599. It is a separate production, both in subject and place, with a division between it and Barnfield's poem, which precedes it; nevertheless they have been incautiously coupled in some modern editions. 4 This poem is printed as no. 12 of the "Compositions of several modern Writers," whose names are subscribed to their several Works."
"Whereupon it made this throne,
To the Phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love,
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENOS,
Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here inos'd in cinders lie.
Death is now the Phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest.

Leaving no posterity:
'T was not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 't is not she;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.

W. SHAKESPEARE.

THE END.
